If subpart F income of a lower-tier CFC is included in the gross income of a U.S. shareholder, no provision of present law allows adjustment of the basis of the upper-tier CFC's stock in the lower-tier CFC.

The subpart F income earned by a foreign corporation during its taxable year is taxed to the persons who are U.S. shareholders of the corporation on the last day, in that year, on which the corporation is a CFC. In the case of a U.S. shareholder who acquired stock in a CFC during the year, such inclusions are reduced by all or a portion of the amount of dividends paid in that year by the foreign corporation to any person other than the acquirer with respect to that stock.

If in a year after the year of income inclusion under the subpart F provisions of the Code, a U.S. shareholder in the CFC receives a distribution from the corporation, the distribution may be deemed to come first out of the corporation's previously taxed income and, therefore, may be excluded from the U.S. shareholder's income. However, a distribution by a foreign corporation to a domestic corporation of earnings and profits previously taxed under subpart F is treated as an actual dividend, solely for purposes of determining the indirect foreign tax credit available to the domestic corporation.

As a general rule, subpart F income does not include income earned from sources within the United States if the income is effectively connected with the conduct of a U.S. trade or business by the CFC. This general rule does not apply, however, if the income is exempt from, or subject to a reduced rate of, U.S. tax pursuant to a provision of a U.S. treaty.

A U.S. corporation that owns at least 10 percent of the voting stock of a foreign corporation is treated as if it had paid a share of the foreign income taxes paid by the foreign corporation in the year in which the foreign corporation's earnings and profits become subject to U.S. tax as dividend income of the U.S. shareholder. A U.S. corporation also may be deemed to have paid taxes paid by a second- or third-tier foreign corporation if certain conditions are satisfied.

House bill

Lower-tier controlled foreign corporations

Characterization of gain on stock disposition

The House bill provides that if a CFC is treated as having gain from the sale or exchange of stock in a foreign corporation, the gain is treated as a dividend to the same extent that it would have been so treated under section 1248 if the CFC were a U.S. person. This provision, however, does not affect the determination of whether the corporation whose stock is sold or exchanged is a CFC.

Thus, for example, if a U.S. corporation owns 100 percent of the stock a foreign corporation, which owns 100 percent of the stock of a second foreign corporation, then under the House bill, any gain of the first corporation upon a sale or exchange of stock of the second corporation is treated as a dividend for purposes of subpart F income inclusions to the U.S. shareholder, to the extent of earnings and profits of the second corporation attributable to periods in which the first foreign corporation owned the stock of the second foreign corporation while the latter was a CFC with respect to the U.S. shareholder.

As another example, assume that the U.S. corporation has always owned 40 percent of the voting stock and 60 percent of the value of all of the stock of a foreign corporation, which has always owned 40 percent of the voting stock and 60 percent of the value of all of the stock of a second foreign corporation. All the other stock of the foreign corporations has always been owned by foreign individuals unrelated to the U.S. corporation. In this case, the second foreign corporation has never been a CFC. Therefore, none of the gain of the first corporation upon a sale of stock of the second corporation is treated as a dividend.

Gain on disposition of stock in a related corporation created or organized under the laws of, and having a substantial part of its assets in a trade or business in, the same foreign country as the gain recipient, even if recharacterized as a dividend under the House bill, is not excluded from foreign personal holding company income under the same-country exception that applies to actual dividends.

The House bill provides that for purposes of this provision, a CFC is treated as having sold or exchanged stock if, under any provision of subtitle A of the Code, the CFC is treated as having gain from the sale or exchange of such stock. Thus, for example, if a CFC distributes to its shareholder stock in a foreign corporation, and the distribution results in gain being recognized by the CFC under section 311(b) as if the stock were sold to the shareholder for fair market value, the House bill makes clear that for purposes of this provision, the CFC is treated as having sold or exchanged the stock.

The House bill also repeals a provision added to the Code by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988[106] (the "1988 Act") that, except as provided by regulations, requires a recipient of a distribution from a CFC to have been a United States shareholder of that CFC for the period during which the earnings and profits which the distributions or gains with respect to the PFIC stock.

gave rise to the distribution were generated in order to avoid treating the distribution as one coming from a noncontrolled section 902 corporation. Thus, under the House bill, a CFC is not treated as a noncontrolled section 902 corporation with respect to any distribution out of its earnings and profits for periods during which it was a CFC, whether or not the recipient of the distribution was a U.S. shareholder of the corporation when the earnings and profits giving rise to the distribution were generated.

Adjustments to basis of stock

The House bill also provides that when a lower-tier CFC earns subpart F income, and stock in that corporation is later disposed of by an upper-tier CFC, the resulting income inclusion of the U.S. shareholders are, under regulations, adjusted to account for previous inclusions, in a manner similar to the adjustments currently provided to the basis of stock in a first-tier CFC. Thus, just as the basis of a U.S. shareholder in a first-tier CFC rises when subpart F income is earned and falls when previously taxed income is distributed, so as to avoid double taxation of the income on a later disposition of the stock of that company, then it is intended that by regulation the subpart F income from gain on the disposition of a lower-tier CFC generally would be reduced by income inclusions of earnings that were not subsequently distributed by the lower-tier CFC. It is intended that the Secretary will have sufficient flexibility in promulgating regulations under this provision to permit adjustments only in those cases where, by virtue of the historical ownership structure of the corporations involved, the Secretary is satisfied that the inclusions for which adjustments are to be made can be clearly identified.

For example, assume that a U.S. person is the owner of all of the stock of a first-tier CFC which, in turn, is the sole shareholder of a second-tier CFC. In year 1, the second-tier CFC earns $100 of subpart F income which is included in the U.S. person's gross income for that year. In year 2, the first-tier CFC disposes of the second-tier CFC's stock and recognizes $300 of income with respect to the disposition. All of that income would constitute subpart F foreign personal holding company income. Under the House bill, the Secretary is granted regulatory authority to reduce the U.S. person's year 2 subpart F inclusion by $100—the amount of year 1 subpart F income of the second-tier CFC that was included, in that year, in the U.S. person's gross income. Such an adjustment would, in effect, allow for a step-up in the basis of the stock of the second-tier CFC to the extent of its subpart F income previously included in the U.S. person's gross income.

As another example, assume the same facts as in the preceding paragraph except that in year 2, the first-tier CFC distributes the stock of the second-tier CFC to the U.S. person. Assume that as a result of the distribution, the first-tier CFC recognizes taxable income of $300 under section 311(b). This income represents subpart F income, $100 of which is due to no adjustment having been made to the basis of the second-tier CFC's stock for its year 1 subpart F income. The House bill contemplates that in such a situation, the $300 of subpart F income would be reduced under regulations to $200 to account for the year 1 subpart F income inclusion.

Subpart F inclusions in year of acquisition

If a U.S. shareholder acquires the stock of a CFC from another U.S. shareholder during a taxable year of the CFC in which it earns subpart F income, the House bill reduces the acquirer's subpart F income inclusion for that year by a portion of the amount of the dividend deemed (under sec. 1248) to be received by the transferor. The portion by which the inclusion is reduced (as is currently the case if a dividend was paid to the previous owner of the stock) would not exceed the lesser of the amount of dividends with respect to such stock deemed received (under sec. 1248) by other persons during the year or the amount determined by multiplying the subpart F income for the year by the proportion of the year during which the acquiring shareholder did not own the stock.

Distributions of previously taxed income

The House bill clarifies the appropriate scope of regulatory authority with respect to the treatment of cross-chain section 304 dividends out of the earnings of CFCs that were previously included in the income of a U.S. shareholder under subpart F. The House bill contemplates that in such a case, the Secretary in his discretion may by regulation treat such dividends as distributions of previously taxed income, with appropriate basis adjustments. It is also anticipated that other occasions may arise where the exercise of similar regulatory authority may be appropriate to avoid double income inclusions, or an inclusion or exclusion of income without a corresponding basis adjustment. Therefore, the House bill provides that, in addition to cases involving section 304, the Secretary may by regulation modify the application of subpart F in any other case where there would otherwise be a multiple inclusion of any item of income (or an inclusion or exclusion without an appropriate basis adjustment) by reason of the structure of a U.S. shareholder's holdings in CFCs or by reason of other circumstances. The House bill is not intended to create any inference as to the application of present law in these cases.

Treatment of United States income earned by a controlled foreign corporation

The House bill provides that an exemption or reduction by treaty of the branch profits tax that would be imposed under section 884 on a CFC does not affect the general statutory exemption from subpart F income that is granted for U.S. source effectively connected income. For example, assume a CFC earns income of a type that generally would be subpart F income, and that income is earned from sources within the United States in connection with business operations therein. Further assume that repatriation of that income is exempted from the U.S. branch profits tax under a provision of an applicable U.S. income tax treaty. The House bill provides that, notwithstanding the treaty's effect on the branch tax, the income is not treated as subpart F income as long as it is not exempt from U.S. taxation (or subject to a reduced rate of tax) under any other treaty provision.

Extension of indirect foreign tax credit

The House bill extends the application of the indirect foreign tax credit (secs. 902 and 960) to certain taxes paid or accrued by certain fourth-, fifth-, and sixth-tier foreign corporations. In general, three requirements must be satisfied by a foreign company at any of these tiers to qualify for the credit. First, the company must be a CFC. Second, the domestic corporation referred to in section 902(a) must be a U.S. shareholder (as defined in sec. 951(b)) with respect to the foreign company. Third, the product of the percentage ownership of voting stock at each level from the U.S. corporation down must equal at least 5 percent. The House bill limits the application of the indirect foreign tax credit below the third tier to taxes paid or incurred in taxable years during which the payor is a CFC. No inference is intended as to the availability of indirect foreign tax credits, under present law, for taxes paid by foreign corporations in the first three tiers, for periods prior to the time when the present-law ownership requirements were met as to those corporations. All foreign taxes paid below the sixth tier of foreign corporations remain ineligible for the indirect foreign tax credit.

Effective dates

Lower-tier controlled foreign corporations.—The provision of the House bill that treats gains on dispositions of stock in lower-tier CFCs as dividends under section 1248 principles applies to gains recognized on transactions occurring after the date of enactment of the House bill.

The provision that expands look-through treatment, for foreign tax credit limitation purposes, of dividends from CFCs, is effective for distributions after the date of enactment.

The provision that provides for regulatory adjustments to U.S. shareholder inclusions, with respect to gains of CFCs from dispositions of stock in lower-tier CFCs the earnings of which have been previously taxed under the subpart F provisions of the Code, is effective for determining inclusions for taxable years of U.S. shareholders beginning after December 31, 1995. Thus, the House bill permits regulatory adjustments to an inclusion occurring after the effective date to account for income previously taxed under the subpart F provisions occurring both prior to and subsequent to the effective date of the provision.

Subpart F inclusions in year of acquisition.—The provision that permits dispositions of stock to be taken into consideration in determining a U.S. shareholder's subpart F inclusion for a taxable year is effective with respect to dispositions occurring after the date of enactment.

Distributions of previously taxed income.—The provision that allows the Secretary to make regulatory adjustments to avoid double inclusions in cases such as those to which section 304 applies takes effect on the date of enactment.

Treatment of United States source income earned by a controlled foreign corporation.—The provision concerning the effect of treaty exemptions from, or reductions of, the branch profits tax on the determination of subpart F income is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

Extension of indirect foreign tax credit.—The provision that extends application of the indirect foreign tax credit to certain CFCs below the third tier is effective for foreign taxes paid or incurred by CFCs for taxable years of such corporations beginning after the date of enactment.

In the case of any chain of foreign corporations the taxes of which would be eligible for the indirect foreign tax credit, under present law or under the House bill, but for the denial of indirect credits below the third or sixth tier, as the case may be, no liquidation, reorganization, or similar transaction in a taxable year beginning after the date of enactment shall have the effect of permitting taxes to be taken into account under the indirect foreign tax credit provisions of the Code which could not have been taken into account under those provisions but for such transaction. As one example, no such transaction shall have the effect of permitting credits for taxes which, but for such transaction, would have been noncreditable (given the effective date provisions of the House bill) because they are taxes of a fourth-, fifth-, or sixth-tier corporation for a year beginning before the date that the House bill is enacted. No inference is intended regarding the creditability or noncreditability of such taxes under present law.

2. REPEAL OF EXCESS PASSIVE ASSETS PROVISION (SEC. 14414 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under the rules of subpart F (secs. 951-964), certain 10-percent U.S. shareholders of a controlled foreign corporation (CFC) are required to include in income currently for U.S. tax purposes certain earnings of the CFC, whether or not such earnings are actually distributed currently to the shareholders. The 10-percent U.S. shareholders of a CFC are subject to current U.S. tax on their shares of certain income earned by the CFC (referred to as "subpart F income"). The 10-percent U.S. shareholders are also subject to current U.S. tax on their shares of the CFC's earnings to the extent such earnings are invested by the CFC in certain U.S. property.

In addition to these current inclusion rules, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 enacted section 956A, which applies another current inclusion rule to U.S. shareholders of a CFC. Section 956A requires the 10-percent U.S. shareholders of a CFC to include in income currently their shares of the CFC's earnings to the extent such earnings are invested by the CFC in excess passive assets. A CFC generally is treated as having excess passive assets if the average of the amounts of its passive assets exceeds 25 percent of the average of the amounts of its total assets; this calculation requires a quarterly determination of the CFC's passive assets and total assets.

The House bill repeals section 956A.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years of U.S. shareholders beginning after September 30, 1995, and taxable years of foreign corporations ending with or within such taxable years of U.S. shareholders.

C. OTHER FOREIGN PROVISIONS

1. EXCHANGE RATE USED IN TRANSLATING FOREIGN TAXES (SEC. 14421 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Translation of certain accrued foreign taxes

Foreign income taxes paid in foreign currencies are required to be translated into U.S. dollar amounts using the exchange rate as of the time such taxes are paid to the foreign country or U.S. possession (sec. 986(a)(1)). This rule applies to foreign taxes paid directly by U.S. taxpayers, which taxes are creditable only in the year paid or accrued (or during a carryover period), and to foreign taxes paid by foreign corporations that are deemed paid by a U.S. corporation, and hence creditable, in the year that the U.S. corporation receives a dividend or has an income inclusion.

Redetermination of foreign taxes

For taxpayers who utilize the accrual basis of accounting for determining creditable foreign taxes, accrued and unpaid foreign tax liabilities denominated in foreign currencies are translated into U.S. dollar amounts at the exchange rate as of the last day of the taxable year of accrual.[107] In certain cases where a difference exists between the dollar value of accrued foreign taxes and the dollar value of those taxes when paid, a redetermination (or adjustment) of foreign taxes is required.[108] Generally, such an adjustment may be attributable to one of three causes: (1) a refund of foreign taxes, (2) a difference between the amount of foreign currency units actually paid and the amount of foreign currency units accrued, and (3) fluctuations in the value of the foreign currency relative to the dollar between the date of accrual and the date of payment.

A redetermination of foreign tax paid or accrued directly by a U.S. person requires notification of the Internal Revenue Service and a redetermination of U.S. tax liability for the taxable year for which the foreign tax was claimed as a credit. Exceptions to this rule apply for de minimis amounts of foreign tax redetermination.[109] In the case of a redetermination of foreign taxes that qualify for the indirect foreign tax credit under sections 902 and 960, taxpayers generally are required to make appropriate adjustments to the relevant pools of earnings and profits and foreign taxes.[110]

House bill

In general

The House bill sets forth two sets of operating rules for the translation of foreign taxes. The first set establishes new rules for the translation of certain accrued foreign taxes. The other set modifies the rules of present law for translating all other foreign taxes.

Translation of foreign taxes

Translation of certain accrued foreign taxes

The House bill permits taxpayers who utilize the accrual basis of accounting for determining creditable foreign taxes to translate their foreign taxes at the average exchange rate for the taxable year to which such taxes relate, provided such taxes are actually paid no later than the date that is 2 years after the close of the year to which such taxes relate. This rule does not apply (1) with respect to taxes of an accrual-basis taxpayer that are actually paid in a taxable year prior to the year to which they relate, or (2) to tax payments that are denominated in a hyperinflationary currency (as defined in Treas. Reg. Sec. 1.985–1(b)(2)(D)(ii)). In addition, as discussed in detail below, this set of rules does not apply to, and thus a redetermination of foreign tax is required for, any foreign income tax paid after the date two years after the close of the taxable year to which such taxes relate.

For example, assume that in year 1 a taxpayer accrues 1,000 units of foreign tax that relate to year 1. Further assume that as of the end of year 1 the tax is unpaid and the currency involved is not hyperinflationary. In this case, the House bill provides that the taxpayer would translate 1,000 units of accrued foreign tax into U.S. dollars at the average exchange rate for year 1.[111] If the 1,000 units of tax were paid by the taxpayer in either year 2 or year 3, no redetermination of foreign tax would be required. If any portion of the tax so accrued remained unpaid as of the end of year 3, however, the taxpayer would be required to redetermine its foreign tax accrued in year 1 to account for the accrued but unpaid tax.

As another example, assume a taxpayer accrues 1,000 units of foreign tax in year 2, but pays the tax in year 1. Also assume that the tax relates to year 2. In this case, the taxpayer would translate the tax using the exchange rate as of the time the tax is paid (i.e., using the applicable year 1 exchange rate) since the tax is paid in a year prior to the year to which it relates.

As an illustration of what is meant by the taxable year to which taxes relate, assume that a foreign corporation is charged by a foreign government with an income tax of 100 units for 1996. Assume that the currency involved is not hyperinflationary. Due to a contest between the foreign government and the corporation that ends in 1996, the 100 units of tax are not paid until 1997. Assume that under the U.S. rules governing accrual, the foreign tax accrues for 1996 but does not do so until 1997.[112] Under the House bill, the taxes would be translated at the rate in effect for 1996, because the taxes relate to 1996, even though they did not accrue until 1997. If instead the contest was over in 1999 and the taxes were accrued and paid at that time, the translation rate used would be that of 1999, rather than 1996, because 1999 is more than 2 years after the end of 1996. Now assume that the contest was over in 2001, but the taxes were deposited in 1997 and not accrued until 2001. These taxes are paid before the beginning of the year in which the taxes were accrued (2001), but after the year to which the taxes relate (1996). In this case, under the House bill, the taxes would be translated at the rate for the year (1996) to which the taxes relate. If the taxes are instead paid in 1999, they would be translated at the relevant rate for 1999 because 1999 is more than 2 years after the end of 1996.

As an additional illustration of what is meant under the House bill as the taxable year to which taxes relate, assume that a foreign corporation accrues a foreign income tax of 100 units of non-hyperinflationary currency for 1996. Further assume that the actual amount of foreign tax liability of the foreign corporation for 1996 is 110 units, all of which is paid in 1997. Under the House bill, the 110 units of foreign tax are translated at the rate in effect for 1996 because the taxes relate to 1996, even though the total tax liability for that year was not actually accrued by the taxpayer in 1996.

Finally, assume that under foreign law, a foreign income tax liability accrues in 2001 under a long-term contract method of accounting, but advance deposits of that liability accruing in 2001 are made in each of the years 1997 through 2000. Under the House bill, it is intended that if the payments in 1997 through 2000 are treated as relating to 2001, these payments are nevertheless to be translated at the relevant rates for 1997 through 2000. Although the House bill provides a rule for translation of the taxes in this case, no change is intended as to the application of present law accounting rules for determining the year for which the taxes are eligible for credit or deduction for U.S. income tax purposes.

Translation of all other foreign taxes

Foreign taxes not eligible for application of the preceding rules generally are translated into U.S. dollars using the exchange rates as of the time such taxes are paid. The House bill grants the Secretary of the Treasury authority to issue regulations that would allow foreign tax payments made by a foreign corporation or by a foreign branch of a U.S. person to be translated into U.S. dollar amounts using an average U.S. dollar exchange rate for a specified period. It is anticipated that the applicable average exchange rate would be the rate as published by a qualified source of exchange rate information for the period during which the tax payments were made.

As revised by the House bill, section 905(c) of the Code defines a foreign tax redetermination to include: (1) a refund of foreign taxes, (2) a difference between accrued taxes when paid and the amounts claimed as credits by the taxpayer, and (3) accrued taxes not paid before the date two years after the close of the taxable year to which such taxes relate. Thus, for example, the House bill provides that if at the close of the second taxable year after the close of the taxable year to which an accrued tax relates, any portion of the tax so accrued has not yet been paid, a foreign tax redetermination under section 905(c) is required for the amount representing the unpaid portion of that accrued tax. That is, the accrual of any tax that is unpaid as of that date would be retroactively denied. In cases where a redetermination is required, as under present law, the House bill specifies that the taxpayer must notify the Secretary, who shall redetermine the amount of the tax for the year or years affected.

The House bill provides that in the case of accrued taxes not paid within the date two years after the close of the taxable year to which such taxes relate, whether or not such taxes were previously accrued, any such taxes if subsequently paid are taken into account for the taxable year in which paid, and no redetermination with respect to the original year of accrual is required on account of such payment. In such a case, those taxes would be translated into U.S. dollar amounts using the exchange rates in effect for the period during which such taxes are paid. Nothing in the House bill is intended to change present law as to the length of time after the year to which the redetermination relates within which redetermination may be made or required.[113]

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxes paid (in the case of taxpayers using the cash basis for determining the foreign tax credit) or accrued (in the case of taxpayers using the accrual basis for determining the foreign tax credit) in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

With respect to taxes of an accrual-basis taxpayer that relate to a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1996, the return for which (if one were due) would not yet be due on date of enactment of the House bill (taking into account extensions of time to file), it is contemplated that the Secretary would, in appropriate circumstances, provide taxpayers with a reasonable average-rate method for translating such taxes that are not paid until after the effective date of the House bill.

The House bill's changes to the foreign tax redetermination rules apply to taxes which relate to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995. Thus, for example, the redetermination rules under the House bill do not apply to a foreign tax that relates to a taxable year beginning in or before 1995, even though the tax does not properly accrue until a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1995.

2. ELECTION TO USE SIMPLIFIED FOREIGN TAX CREDIT LIMITATION UNDER THE ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX (SEC. 14422 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Foreign tax credit limitations must be computed both for regular tax purposes and alternative minimum tax (AMT) purposes. Each foreign tax credit limitation computation requires the allocation and apportionment of deductions between foreign source income and U.S. source income.

House bill

The House bill permits taxpayers to elect to use as their AMT foreign tax credit limitation fraction the ratio of foreign source regular taxable income to entire alternative minimum taxable income, rather than the ratio of foreign source alternative minimum taxable income to entire alternative minimum taxable income. Foreign source regular taxable income is used only to the extent it does not exceed entire alternative minimum taxable income.

The election must be made for the first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1995, for which the taxpayer claims an AMT foreign tax credit. It is intended that a taxpayer be treated, for this purpose, as claiming an AMT foreign tax credit for any taxable year for which the taxpayer chooses to have the benefits of the foreign tax credit and in which the taxpayer is subject to the alternative minimum tax or would be subject to the alternative minimum tax but for the availability of the AMT foreign tax credit. Once made, the election applies to all subsequent taxable years, and may be revoked only with consent.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

3. TREATMENT OF INBOUND AND OUTBOUND TRANSFERS (SECS. 14423–14424 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Outbound transfers

If a U.S. person transfers property to a foreign corporation in connection with certain corporate organizations, reorganizations, or liquidations, the foreign corporation will not, for purposes of determining the extent to which gain is recognized on such transfer, be considered to be a corporation (sec. 367(a)(1)). Various exceptions to the operation of this rule are provided, including a broad grant of authority to provide exceptions by regulation. Because corporate status is essential to qualify for the tax-free organization, reorganization, and liquidation provisions, failure to satisfy the requirements of section 367 could result in the recognition of gain to the participant corporations and shareholders.

An excise tax is imposed on outbound transfers that might not constitute income tax recognition events even after imposition of the anti-avoidance income tax rule adopted for corporate transactions. The excise tax generally applies on transfers of property by a U.S. person to a foreign corporation—as paid-in surplus or as a contribution to capital—or to a foreign estate, trust, or partnership.[114] The tax is 35 percent of the amount of gain inherent in the property transferred, but not recognized for income tax purposes at the time of the transfer (sec. 1491). For income tax purposes, the basis of the appreciated property whose transfer triggers the tax is not increased to account for imposition of the tax.

The excise tax does not apply in certain cases where the transferee is exempt from U.S. tax under Code sections 501–505 (sec. 1492(1)). In addition, the excise tax does not apply in some cases where income tax rules governing outbound transfers apply, either by their terms or by the election of the taxpayer. Thus, the excise tax does not apply to a transfer described in section 367, or to a transfer not described in section 367 but with respect to which the taxpayer elects (before the transfer) the application of principles similar to the principles of section 367 (sec. 1492(2)).

In addition, a taxpayer may elect (under regulations prescribed by the Secretary) to treat a transfer described in section 1491 as a sale or exchange of the property transferred and to recognize as gain (but not loss) in the year of the transfer the excess of the fair market value of the property transferred over the adjusted basis (for determining gain) of the property in the hands of the transferor (sec. 1057). To the extent that gain is recognized pursuant to the election in the year of the transfer, the transfer is not subject to the excise tax, and the basis of the property in the hands of the transferee will be increased by the amount of gain recognized (sec. 1492(3)). The legislative history of the elective income recognition provision indicates that the making of an election which has as one of its principle purposes the avoidance of Federal income taxes is not permitted.[115]

The excise tax is due at the time of the transfer (sec. 1494(a)). Under regulations, the excise tax may be abated, remitted, or refunded if the taxpayer, after the transfer, elects the application of principles similar to the principles of section 367 (sec. 1494(b)).

Inbound transfers

Section 367(b) provides, in part, that in the case of certain exchanges in connection with which there is no transfer of property described in section 367(a)(1), a foreign corporation will be considered to be a corporation except to the extent provided in regulations which are necessary or appropriate to prevent the avoidance of Federal income taxes.

Although it is clear that absence of a toll charge on accumulated earnings of a foreign corporation upon liquidation or reorganization into a U.S. corporation leads to avoidance of tax, and Congress in 1976 noted without disapproval the adoption of IRS positions that would prevent the avoidance of tax in these cases,[116] neither section 367(b) as revised in 1976, nor its predecessors, were drafted in such a way that directly causes tax to be imposed on foreign earnings.

[114] The Internal Revenue Service has in the past wavered on the question whether this tax applies to a transfer to a foreign trust with respect to which the transferor is treated as the owner under the grantor trust rules. Compare Rev. Rul. 69–450, 1969–2 C.B. 168 (holding that such a transfer is subject to tax under section 1491); with Rev. Rul. 87–61, 1987–2 C.B. 219 (revoking Rev. Rul. 69–450, and holding that such a transfer is not subject to tax under section 1491).

[115] Staff on the Joint Committee on Taxation, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., General Explanation of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, at 226 (1976).

For example, assume that a U.S. corporation owns 100 percent of the stock of a liquidating foreign corporation, and, pursuant to regulations under section 367(b), the foreign corporation is not treated as a corporation for purposes of section 332. In that case, the U.S. corporation would be required under the Code to recognize the difference between the basis and the value of its stock in the foreign corporation. That gain, however, may be more or less than the accumulated earnings of the foreign corporation attributable to the period when the U.S. corporation owned the stock of the foreign corporation.

Perhaps as a result, neither the present temporary regulations nor the proposed regulations under section 367(b) mandate a tax based on the accumulated earnings of a foreign corporation that liquidates or reorganizes into a U.S. corporation. The temporary regulations allow the taxpayer to elect treatment of the foreign corporation as a corporation if the tax on earnings is paid. If the taxpayer chooses not to make the election, the foreign corporation is not treated as a corporation under the relevant nonrecognition provision (e.g., sec. 332, 354), but is treated as a corporation for other purposes, such as for purposes of the basis rules (secs. 334, 358, 362), and carryover provisions (sec. 381) (Temp. Treas. Reg. secs. 7.367(b)–5(b) and 7.367(b)–7(c)(2)). The proposed regulations generally require that the foreign corporation be treated as a corporation, and permit the taxpayer to elect either to pay the tax on earnings, or to pay tax on the gain; but if the latter option is chosen, adjustments must be made to either net operating loss carryovers, capital loss carryovers, or asset bases (Proposed Treas. Reg. sec. 1.367(b)–3(b)(2)).

House bill

Outbound transfers

The House bill repeals the excise tax on outbound transfers. In its place, the House bill requires the full recognition of gain on a transfer of property by a U.S. person to a foreign corporation as either paid-in surplus or a contribution to capital, or to a foreign estate, trust, or partnership. Under the House bill, the Secretary of the Treasury may, however, provide regulations under which principles similar to the principles of section 367 would apply to any such transfer in lieu of the application of the full recognition rule. Moreover, the Secretary may provide rules under which recognition of gain would not be triggered by section 1491 in cases where the Secretary is satisfied that application of other Code rules (such as those relating to partnerships or trusts) would prevent the avoidance of tax consistent with the purposes of the bill. Full recognition of gain is also avoided in the case of a transfer described in section 367. It is anticipated that, prior to the promulgation of regulations, the Secretary generally will continue to permit taxpayers to elect the application of principles similar to the principles of section 367, provided the election is made by the time for filing the income tax return for the taxable year of the transfer.

Inbound transfers

The House bill provides that in the case of certain corporate organizations, reorganizations, and liquidations described in section 332, 351, 354, 355, 356, or 361 in which the status of a foreign corporation as a corporation is a condition for nonrecognition by a party to the transaction, income is recognized to the extent provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary which are necessary or appropriate to prevent the avoidance of Federal income taxes. This provision is limited in its application, under the House bill, so as not to apply to a transaction in which the foreign corporation is not treated as a corporation under section 367(a)(1). Thus, the House bill permits the Secretary to provide by regulations for recognition of income, without regard to the amount of gain that would be recognized in the absence of the relevant nonrecognition provision listed above. As under current law, such regulations will be subject to normal court review as to whether they are necessary or appropriate for the prevention of avoidance of Federal income taxes.

In addition, the House bill clarifies that rules for income recognition under section 367(b) may also be applied in a case involving a transfer literally described in section 367(a)(1), where necessary or appropriate to prevent the avoidance of Federal income taxes.

Effective date

The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

4. MODIFICATION OF REPORTING THRESHOLD FOR STOCK OWNERSHIP OF A FOREIGN CORPORATION (SEC. 14425 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Section 6046 mandates the filing of information returns on behalf of a foreign corporation by certain U.S. persons upon the occurrence of certain events. U.S. persons required to file these information returns include those who own or acquire 5 percent or more of the value of the stock of a foreign corporation.

House bill

The House bill increases the reporting threshold for stock ownership of a foreign corporation under section 6046 from 5 percent (based on value) to 10 percent (based on vote or value).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for reportable transactions occurring after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

5. APPLICATION OF UNIFORM CAPITALIZATION RULES TO FOREIGN PERSONS (SEC. 14426 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The uniform capitalization rules, which require certain direct and indirect costs allocable to property to be capitalized or included in inventory, generally apply in computing taxable income and earnings and profits of domestic and foreign taxpayers.

House bill

The House bill reduces the number of foreign corporations that are required to apply the uniform capitalization rules under section 263A. Under the House bill, a foreign corporation is subject to the uniform capitalization rules only with respect to the determination of (1) its tax liability with respect to its U.S. trade or business and (2) the tax liability of its U.S. shareholders under the subpart F provisions of the Code. However, it is intended that a foreign corporation that is not required to apply the uniform capitalization rules, under the House bill may nevertheless continue to apply such rules.

Exemption from uniform capitalization rules under the House bill constitutes a change of the accounting method of the foreign corporation adopted with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury. No section 481(a) adjustment will arise in connection with such change; instead, the "cut-off method" is applicable. Under the cut-off method, the value of the beginning inventory of an affected taxpayer includes amounts properly capitalized in a previous year under the uniform capitalization rules, and the taxpayer would not apply the uniform capitalization rules with respect to inventory acquired or produced during the year for which the election is in effect.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years of the foreign corporation beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

6. PRIZES AND AWARDS RECEIVED BY A NONRESIDENT ALIEN RELATING TO AMATEUR SPORTS COMPETITIONS HELD IN THE UNITED STATES (SEC. 14427 OF HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Amounts received by a nonresident alien as prizes or awards associated with athletic competitions held in the United States are generally treated as services income subject to U.S. income tax. A limited exception is available for U.S. source compensation income not exceeding $3,000 if certain criteria are satisfied.

House bill

The House bill treats prizes and awards received by a nonresident alien with respect to his or her participation in an amateur sports competition held within the United States as foreign source income if the recipient does not perform any services for the prize or award. Thus, the value of the prize or award would be exempt from U.S. income tax. For this purpose, "amateur sports competition" means any competition in which the only prizes awarded by the sponsors are of nominal value. It is intended that medals that are awarded in athletic competitions and that contain small amounts of precious or semiprecious metals, such as Olympic medals, be considered to be of nominal value for purposes of this provision.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for prizes and awards received on or after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

7. TREATMENT FOR ESTATE TAX PURPOSES OF SHORT-TERM OBLIGATIONS HELD BY NONRESIDENT ALIENS (SEC. 14428 OF HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The United States imposes estate tax on assets of noncitizen nonresidents that are situated in the United States at the time of the individual's death. Special rules apply to treat certain bank deposits and debt instruments the income from which qualifies for the bank deposit interest exemption or the portfolio interest exemption as property from without the United States so that these items are excluded from the U.S. gross estate of a nonresident not a citizen of the United States. However, no equivalent exemption is available from the U.S. estate tax for obligations held by a noncitizen nonresident that generate short-term original issue discount ("OID") despite the fact that such income also is exempt from U.S. income tax in the hands of the nonresident recipient.

[116] E.g., id. at 264.

House bill

The House bill treats any debt obligation the income from which would be eligible for the exemption for short-term OID obligations under section 871(g)(1)(B)(I) held by a decedent on the date of his or her death as property situated outside of the United States in determining the U.S. estate tax liability of a nonresident not a U.S. citizen. However, a short-term OID obligation the income from which is effectively connected with a U.S. trade or business conducted by the decedent is not subject to this rule.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for estates of decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

XV. OTHER INCOME TAX SIMPLIFICATION PROVISIONS

A. PROVISIONS RELATING TO S CORPORATIONS

1. S CORPORATIONS PERMITTED TO HAVE 75 SHAREHOLDERS (SEC. 14501 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The taxable income or loss of an S corporation is taken into account by the corporation's shareholders, rather than by the entity, whether or not such income is distributed. A small business corporation may elect to be treated as an S corporation. A "small business corporation" is defined as a domestic corporation which is not an ineligible corporation and which does not have (1) more than 35 shareholders, (2) as a shareholder, a person (other than certain trusts or estates) who is not an individual, (3) a nonresident alien as a shareholder, and (4) more than one class of stock. For purposes of the 35-shareholder limitation, a husband and wife are treated as one shareholder.

House bill

The House bill increases maximum number of eligible shareholders from 35 to 75.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

2. ELECTING SMALL BUSINESS TRUSTS (SEC. 14502 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under present law, trusts other than grantor trusts, voting trusts, certain testamentary trusts and "qualified subchapter S trusts" may not be shareholders in a S corporation. A "qualified subchapter S trust" is a trust which, under its terms, (1) is required to have only one current income beneficiary (for life), (2) any corpus distributed during the life of the beneficiary must be distributed to the beneficiary, (3) the beneficiary's income interest must terminate at the earlier of the beneficiary's death or the termination of the trust, and (4) if the trust terminates during the beneficiary's life, the trust assets must be distributed to the beneficiary. All the income (as defined for local law purposes) must be currently distributed to that beneficiary. The beneficiary is treated as the owner of the portion of the trust consisting of the stock in the S corporation.

House bill

In general

The House bill allows stock in an S corporation to be held by certain trusts ("electing small business trusts"). In order to qualify for this treatment, all beneficiaries of the trust must be individuals or estates eligible to be S corporation shareholders, except that charitable organizations may hold contingent remainder interests. No interest in the trust may be acquired by purchase. For this purpose, "purchase" means any acquisition of property with a cost basis (determined under sec. 1012). Thus, interests in the trust must be acquired by reason of gift, bequest, etc. A trust must elect to be treated as an electing small business trust.

Each potential current beneficiary of the trust is counted as a shareholder for purposes of the proposed 75 shareholder limitation (or if there were no potential current beneficiaries, the trust would be treated as the shareholder). A potential current income beneficiary means any person, with respect to the applicable period, who is entitled to, or at the discretion of any person may receive, a distribution from the principal or income of the trust.

Treatment of items relating to S corporation stock

The portion of the trust which consists of stock in one or more S corporations is treated as a separate trust for purposes of computing the income tax attributable to the S corporation stock held by the trust. The trust is taxed at the highest individual rate (currently, 39.6 percent on ordinary income and 28 percent on net capital gain) on this portion of the trust's income. The taxable income attributable to this portion includes (1) the items of income, loss, or deduction allocated to it as an S corporation shareholder under the rules of subchapter S, (2) gain or loss from the sale of the S corporation stock, and (3) to the extent provided in regulations, any state or local income taxes and administrative expenses of the trust properly allocable to the S corporation stock. Otherwise allowable capital losses are allowed only to the extent of capital gains.

In computing the trust's income tax on this portion of the trust, no deduction is allowed for amounts distributed to beneficiaries, and no deduction or credit is allowed for any item other than the items described above. This income is not included in the distributable net income of the trust, and thus is not included in the beneficiaries' income. No item relating to the S corporation stock could be apportioned to any beneficiary.

On the termination of all or any portion of an electing small business trust the loss carryovers or excess deductions referred to in section 642(h) is taken into account by the entire trust, subject to the usual rules on termination of the entire trust.

Treatment of remainder of items held by trust

In determining the tax liability with regard to the remaining portion of the trust, the items taken into account by the subchapter S portion of the trust are disregarded. Although distributions from the trust are deductible in computing the taxable income on this portion of the trust, under the usual rules of subchapter J, the trust's distributable net income does not include any income attributable to the S corporation stock.

Termination of trust and conforming amendment applicable to all trusts

Where the trust terminates before the end of the S corporation's taxable year, the trust takes into account its pro rata share of S corporation items for its final year. The bill makes a conforming amendment applicable to all trusts and estates clarifying that this is the present-law treatment of trusts and estates that terminate before the end of the S corporation's taxable year.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

3. EXPANSION OF POST-DEATH QUALIFICATION FOR CERTAIN TRUSTS (SEC. 14503 OF THE HOUSE)

Present law

Under present law, trusts other than grantor trusts, voting trusts, certain testamentary trusts and "qualified subchapter S trusts" may not be shareholders in a S corporation. A grantor trust may remain an S corporation shareholder for 60 days after the death of the grantor. The 60-day period is extended to two years if the entire corpus of the trust is includible in the gross estate of the deemed owner. In addition, a trust may be an S corporation shareholder for 60 days after the transfer of S corporation pursuant to a will.

House bill

The House bill expands the post-death holding period to two years for all testamentary trusts.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

4. FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS PERMITTED TO HOLD SAFE HARBOR DEBT (SEC. 14504 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A small business corporation eligible to be an S corporation may not have more than one class of stock. Certain debt ("straight debt") is not treated as a second class of stock so long as such debt is an unconditional promise to pay on demand or on a specified date a sum certain in money if: (1) the interest rate (and interest payment dates) are not contingent on profits, the borrower's discretion, or similar factors; (2) there is no convertibility (directly or indirectly) into stock, and (3) the creditor is an individual (other than a nonresident alien), an estate, or certain qualified trusts.

House bill

The definition of "straight debt" is expanded to include debt held by creditors, other than individuals, that are actively and regularly engaged in the business of lending money.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

5. RULES RELATING TO INADVERTENT TERMINATIONS AND INVALID ELECTIONS (SEC. 14505 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under present law, if the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") determines that a corporation's Subchapter S election is inadvertently terminated, the IRS can waive the effect of the terminating event for any period if the corporation timely corrects the event and if the corporation and shareholders agree to be treated as if the election had been in effect for that period. Such waivers generally are obtained through the issuance of a private letter ruling. Present law does not grant the IRS the ability to waive the effect of an inadvertent invalid Subchapter S election.

In addition, under present law, a small business corporation must elect to be an S corporation no later than the 15th day of the third month of the taxable year for which the election is effective. The IRS may not validate a late election.

House bill

Under the House bill, the authority of the IRS to waive the effect of an inadvertent termination is extended to allow the Service to waive the effect of an invalid election caused by an inadvertent failure to qualify as a small business corporation or to obtain the required shareholder consents (including elections regarding qualified subchapter S trusts), or both. The House bill also allows the IRS to treat a late Subchapter S election as timely where the Service determines that there was reasonable cause for the failure to make the election timely. It is intended that the IRS be reasonable in exercising this authority and apply standards that are similar to those applied under present law to inadvertent subchapter S terminations and other late or invalid elections.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1982.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill. The conferees wish to clarify that the IRS may exercise its authority to treat a late election as timely in cases where the taxpayer never filed an election and the Service determines that there was reasonable cause for the failure to make the election.

6. AGREEMENT TO TERMINATE YEAR (SEC. 14506 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

In general, each item of S corporation income, deduction and loss is allocated to shareholders on a per-share, per-day basis. However, if any shareholder terminates his or her interest in an S corporation during a taxable year, the S corporation, with the consent of all its shareholders, may elect to allocate S corporation items by closing its books as of the date of such termination rather than apply the per-share, per-day rule.

House bill

The House bill provides that, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the election to close the books of the S corporation upon the termination of a shareholder's interest is made by all affected shareholders and the corporation, rather than by all shareholders. The closing of the books applies only to the affected shareholders. For this purpose, "affected shareholders" means any shareholder whose interest is terminated and all shareholders to whom such shareholder has transferred shares during the year. If a shareholder transferred shares to the corporation, "affected shareholders" includes all persons who were shareholders during the year.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

7. EXPANSION OF POST-TERMINATION TRANSITION PERIOD (SEC. 14507 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Distributions made by a former S corporation during its post-termination period are treated in the same manner as if the distributions were made by an S corporation (e.g., treated by shareholders as nontaxable distributions to the extent of the accumulated adjustment account). Distributions made after the post-termination period are generally treated as made by a C corporation (i.e., treated by shareholders as taxable dividends to the extent of earnings and profits).

The "post-termination period" is the period beginning on the day after the last day of the last taxable year of the S corporation and ending on the later of: (1) a date that is one year later, or (2) the due date for filing the return for the last taxable year and the 120-day period beginning on the date of a determination that the corporation's S corporation election had terminated for a previous taxable year.

In addition, the audit procedures adopted by the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 ("TEFRA") with respect to partnerships also apply to S corporations. Thus, the tax treatment of items is determined at the corporate, rather than individual level.

House bill

The present-law definition of post-termination period is expanded to include the 120-day period beginning on the date of any determination pursuant to an audit of the taxpayer that follows the termination of the S corporation's election and that adjusts a subchapter S item of income, loss or deduction of the S corporation during the S period. In addition, the definition of "determination" is expanded to include a final disposition of the Secretary of the Treasury of a claim for refund and, under regulations, certain agreements between the Secretary and any person, relating to the tax liability of the person.

In addition, the House bill repeals the TEFRA audit provisions applicable to S corporations and would provide other rules to require consistency between the returns of the S corporation and its shareholders.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

8. S CORPORATIONS PERMITTED TO HOLD SUBSIDIARIES (SEC. 14508 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A small business corporation may not be a member of an affiliated group of corporations (other than by reason of ownership in certain inactive corporations). Thus, an S corporation may not own 80 percent or more of the stock of another corporation (whether an S corporation or a C corporation).

In addition, a small business corporation may not have as a shareholder another corporation (whether an S corporation or a C corporation).

House bill

An S corporation is allowed to own 80 percent or more of the stock of a C corporation. The C corporation subsidiary could elect to join in the filing of a consolidated return with its affiliated C corporations. An S corporation is not allowed to join in such election. Dividends received by an S corporation from a C corporation in which the S corporation has an 80 percent or greater ownership stake is not treated as passive investment income for purposes of sections 1362 and 1375 to the extent the dividends are attributable to the earnings and profits of the C corporation derived from the active conduct of a trade or business.

In addition, an S corporation is allowed to own a qualified subchapter S subsidiary. The term "qualified subchapter S subsidiary" means a domestic corporation that is not an ineligible corporation (i.e., a corporation that would be eligible to be an S corporation if the stock of the corporation were held directly by the shareholders of its parent S corporation) if (1) 100 percent of the stock of the subsidiary were held by its S corporation parent and (2) for which the parent elects to treat as a qualified subchapter S subsidiary. Under the election, the qualified subchapter S subsidiary is not treated as a separate corporation and all the assets, liabilities, and items of income, deduction, and credit of the subsidiary are treated as the assets, liabilities, and items of income, deduction, and credit of the parent S corporation.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

9. TREATMENT OF DISTRIBUTIONS DURING LOSS YEARS (SEC. 14509 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under present law, the amount of loss an S corporation shareholder may take into account for a taxable year cannot exceed the sum of the shareholder's adjusted basis in his or her stock of the corporation and the adjusted basis in any indebtedness of the corporation to the shareholder. Any excess loss is carried forward.

Any distribution to a shareholder by an S corporation generally is tax-free to the shareholder to the extent of the shareholder's adjusted basis of his or her stock. The shareholder's adjusted basis is reduced by the tax-free amount of the distribution. Any distribution in excess of the shareholder's adjusted basis is treated as gain from the sale or exchange of property.

Under present law, income (whether or not taxable) and expenses (whether or not deductible) serve, respectively, to increase and decrease an S corporation shareholder's basis in the stock of the corporation. These rules require that the adjustments to basis for items of both income and loss for any taxable year apply before the adjustment for distributions applies.

These rules limiting losses and allowing tax-free distributions up to the amount of the shareholder's adjusted basis are similar in certain respects to the rules governing the treatment of losses and cash distributions by partnerships. Under the partnership rules (unlike the S corporation rules), for any taxable year, a partner's basis is first increased by items of income, then decreased by distributions, and finally is decreased by losses for that year.

In addition, if the S corporation has accumulated earnings and profits, any distribution in excess of the amount in an "accumulated adjustments account" will be treated as a dividend (to the extent of the accumulated earnings and profits). A dividend distribution does not reduce the adjusted basis of the shareholder's stock. The "accumulated adjustments account" generally is the amount of the accumulated undistributed post-1982 gross income less deductions.

House bill

The House bill provides that the adjustments for distributions made by an S corporation during a taxable year are taken into account before applying the loss limitation for the year. Thus, distributions during a year reduce the adjusted basis for purposes of determining the allowable loss for the year, but the loss for a year does not reduce the adjusted basis for purposes of determining the tax status of the distributions made during that year.

The House bill also provides that in determining the amount in the accumulated adjustment account for purposes of determining the tax treatment of distributions made during a taxable year by an S corporation having accumulated earnings and profits, net negative adjustments (i.e., the excess of losses and deductions over income) for that taxable year are disregarded.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

10. TREATMENT OF S CORPORATIONS UNDER SUBCHAPTER C (SEC. 14510 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Present law contains several provisions relating to the treatment of S corporations as corporations generally for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code.

First, under present law, the taxable income of an S corporation is computed in the same manner as in the case of an individual (sec. 1363(b)). Under this rule, the provisions of the Code governing the computation of taxable income which are applicable only to corporations, such as the dividends received deduction, do not apply to S corporations.

Second, except as otherwise provided by the Internal Revenue Code and except to the extent inconsistent with subchapter S, subchapter C (i.e., the rules relating to corporate distributions and adjustments) applies to an S corporation and its shareholders (sec. 1371(a)(1)). Under this second rule, provisions such as the corporate reorganization provisions apply to S corporations. Thus, a C corporation may merge into an S corporation tax-free.

Finally, an S corporation in its capacity as a shareholder of another corporation is treated as an individual for purposes of subchapter C (sec. 1371(a)(2)). In 1988, the Internal Revenue Service took the position that this rule prevents the tax-free liquidation of a C corporation into an S corporation because a C corporation cannot liquidate tax-free when owned by an individual shareholder.[117] In 1992, the Internal Revenue Service reversed its position, stating that the prior ruling was incorrect.[118]

The House bill repeals the rule that treats an S corporation in its capacity as a shareholder of another corporation as an individual. Thus, the provision clarifies that the liquidation of a C corporation into an S corporation will be governed by the generally applicable subchapter C rules, including the provisions of sections 332 and 337 allowing the tax-free liquidation of a corporation into its parent corporation. Following a tax-free liquidation, the built-in gains of the liquidating corporation may later be subject to tax under section 1374 upon a subsequent disposition. An S corporation also will be eligible to make a section 338 election (assuming all the requirements are otherwise met), resulting in immediate recognition of all the acquired C corporation's gains and losses (and the resulting imposition of a tax).

The repeal of this rule does not change the general rule governing the computation of income of an S corporation. For example, it does not allow an S corporation, or its shareholders, to claim a dividends received deduction with respect to dividends received by the S corporation, or to treat any item of income or deduction in a manner inconsistent with the treatment accorded to individual taxpayers.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

11. ELIMINATION OF CERTAIN EARNINGS AND PROFITS (SEC. 14511 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under present law, the accumulated earnings and profits of a corporation are not increased for any year in which an election to be treated as an S corporation is in effect. However, under the subchapter S rules in effect before revision in 1982, a corporation electing subchapter S for a taxable year increased its accumulated earnings and profits if its earnings and profits for the year exceeded both its taxable income for the year and its distributions out of that year's earnings and profits. As a result of this rule, a shareholder may later be required to include in his or her income the accumulated earnings and profits when it is distributed by the corporation. The 1982 revision to subchapter S repealed this rule for earnings attributable to taxable years beginning after 1982 but did not do so for previously accumulated S corporation earnings and profits.

House bill

The House bill provides that if a corporation is an S corporation for its first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1995, the accumulated earnings and profits of the corporation as of the beginning of that year is reduced by the accumulated earnings and profits (if any) accumulated in any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1983, for which the corporation was an electing small business corporation under subchapter S. Thus, such a corporation's accumulated earnings and profits are solely attributable to taxable years for which an S election was not in effect. This rule is generally consistent with the change adopted in 1982 limiting the S shareholder's taxable income attributable to S corporation earnings to his or her share of the taxable income of the S corporation.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

12. CARRYOVER OF DISALLOWED LOSSES AND DEDUCTIONS UNDER THE AT-RISK RULES (SEC. 14512 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under section 1366, the amount of loss an S corporation shareholder may take into account cannot exceed the sum of the shareholder's adjusted basis in his or her stock of the corporation and the unadjusted basis in any indebtedness of the corporation to the shareholder. Any disallowed loss is carried forward to the next taxable year. Any loss that is disallowed for the last taxable year of the S corporation may be carried forward to the post-termination period. The "post-termination period" is the period beginning on the day after the last day of the last taxable year of the S corporation and ending on the later of: (1) a date that is one year later, or (2) the due date for filing the return for the last taxable year and the 120-day period beginning on the date of a determination that the corporation's S corporation election had terminated for a previous taxable year.

In addition, under section 465, a shareholder of an S corporation may not deduct losses that are flowed through from the corporation to the extent the shareholder is not "at-risk" with respect to the loss. Any loss not deductible in one taxable year because of the at-risk rules is carried forward to the next taxable year.

House bill

Losses of an S corporation that are suspended under the at-risk rules of section 465 are carried forward to the S corporation's post-termination period.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

13. ADJUSTMENTS TO BASIS OF INHERITED S STOCK TO REFLECT CERTAIN ITEMS OF INCOME (SEC. 14513 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Income in respect to a decedent ("IRD") generally consists of items of gross income that accrued during the decedent's lifetime but were not includible in the decedent's income before his or her death under his or her method of accounting. IRD is includible in the income of the person acquiring the right to receive such item. A deduction for the estate tax attributable to an item of IRD is allowed to such person (sec. 691(c)). The cost or basis of property acquired from a decedent is its fair market value at the date of death (or alternate valuation date if that date is elected for estate tax purposes). This basis is often referred to as a "stepped-up basis." Property that constitutes a right to receive IRD does not receive a stepped-up basis.

[118] PLR 9245004, (July 28, 1992).

The basis of a partnership interest or corporate stock acquired from a decedent generally is stepped-up at death. Under Treasury regulations, the basis of a partnership interest acquired from a decedent is reduced to the extent that its value is attributable to items constituting IRD (Treas. reg. sec. 1.742-1). This rule insures that the items of IRD held by a partnership are not later offset by a loss arising from a stepped-up basis. Although S corporation income is taxed to its shareholders in a manner similar to the taxation of a partnership and its partners, no comparable regulation requires a reduction in the basis of stock in an S corporation acquired from a decedent where the S corporation holds items of IRD.

House bill

The House bill provides that a person acquiring stock in an S corporation from a decedent would treat as IRD his or her pro rata share of any item of income of the corporation that would have been IRD if that item had been acquired directly from the decedent. Where an item is treated as IRD, a deduction for the estate tax attributable to the item generally will be allowed under the provisions of section 691(c). The stepped-up basis in the stock in an S corporation acquired from a decedent is reduced by the extent to which the value of the stock is attributable to items consisting of IRD. This basis rule is comparable to the present-law partnership rule.

Effective date.—The provision applies with respect to decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

14. S CORPORATIONS ELIGIBLE FOR RULES APPLICABLE TO REAL PROPERTY SUBDIVIDED FOR SALE BY NONCORPORATE TAXPAYERS (SEC. 14514 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under present-law section 1237, a lot or parcel of land held by a taxpayer other than a corporation generally is not treated as ordinary income property solely by reason of the land being subdivided if: (1) such parcel had not previously been held as ordinary income property and if in the year of sale, the taxpayer did not hold other real property; (2) no substantial improvement has been made on the land by the taxpayer, a related party, a lessee, or a government; and (3) the land has been held by the taxpayer for five years.

House bill

The House bill allows the present-law capital gains presumption in the case of land held by an S corporation. It is expected that rules similar to the attribution rules for partnerships will apply to S corporation (Treas. reg. sec. 1.1237-1(b)(3)).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for sales in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

15. REELECTING SUBCHAPTER S STATUS (SEC. 14515 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A small business corporation that terminates its subchapter S election (whether by revocation or otherwise) may not make another election to be an S corporation for five taxable years unless the Secretary of the Treasury consents to such election.

House bill

For purposes of the five-year rule, any termination of subchapter S status in effect immediately before the date of enactment of the proposal is not be taken into account. Thus, any small business corporation that had terminated its S corporation election within the five-year period before the date of enactment may re-elect subchapter S status upon enactment of the bill without the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Effective date.—The provision is effective upon the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

B. PROVISIONS RELATING TO REGULATED INVESTMENT COMPANIES ("RICS") AND REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS ("REITS")

1. REPEAL THE SHORT-SHORT TEST FOR REGULATED INVESTMENT COMPANIES (SEC. 14521 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A regulated investment company ("RIC") generally is treated as a conduit for Federal income tax purposes.

Among other requirements, to be a RIC a corporation must derive less than 30 percent of its gross income from the sale or disposition of certain investments (including stock, securities, options, futures, and forward contracts) held less than three months (the "short-short test").

House bill

The House bill repeals the short-short test.

Effective date.—Taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

2. MODIFICATIONS OF RULES FOR REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS (SECS. 14531–14543 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

In general, a real estate investment trust ("REIT") is an entity that receives most of its income from passive real estate related investments and that receives conduit treatment for income that is distributed to shareholders.

Election to be treated as a REIT

A newly-electing entity generally cannot have earnings and profits accumulated from any year in which the entity was in existence and not treated as a real estate investment trust. To satisfy this requirement, the entity must distribute, during its first REIT taxable year, any earnings and profits that were accumulated in non-REIT years. For this purpose, distributions by the entity generally are treated as being made from the most recently accumulated earnings and profits.

Taxation of REITs

Capital gains.—A REIT that has a net capital gain for a taxable year generally is subject to tax on such capital gain under the capital gains tax regime generally applicable to corporations. However, a REIT may diminish or eliminate its tax liability attributable to such capital gain by paying a "capital gain dividend" to its shareholders. Shareholders who receive capital gain dividends treat the amount of such dividends as long-term capital gain regardless of their holding period of the stock.

Income from foreclosure property.—In addition to tax on its REIT taxable income, a REIT is subject to tax at the highest rate of tax paid by corporations on its net income from foreclosure property. Foreclosure property is any real property or personal property incident to such real property that is acquired by a REIT as a result of default or imminent default on a lease of such property or indebtedness secured by such property, provided that (unless acquired as foreclosure property), such property was not held by the REIT for sale to customers. A property generally may be treated as foreclosure property for a period of two years after the date the property is acquired by the REIT.

Income or loss from prohibited transactions.—A 100-percent tax is imposed on the net income of a REIT from "prohibited transactions." A prohibited transaction is the sale or other disposition of property described in section 1221(1) of the Code (property held for sale in the ordinary course of a trade or business) other than foreclosure property. A safe harbor is provided for certain sales that otherwise might be considered prohibited transactions. The safe harbor is limited to seven or fewer sales a year or, alternatively, any number of sales provided that the aggregate adjusted basis of the property sold does not exceed 10 percent of the aggregate basis of all the REIT's assets at the beginning of the REIT's taxable year.

Organizational structure requirements

To qualify as a REIT, an entity must be for its entire taxable year a corporation or an unincorporated trust or association that would be taxable as a domestic corporation but for the REIT provisions, and must be managed by one or more trustees. Except for the first taxable year for which an entity elects to be a REIT, the beneficial ownership of the entity must be held by 100 or more persons, and the entity may not be so closely held by individuals that it would be treated as a personal holding company. A REIT is disqualified for any year in which it does not comply with regulations to ascertain the actual ownership of the REIT's outstanding shares.

Income requirements

In general.—In order for an entity to qualify as a REIT, at least 95 percent of its gross income generally must be derived from certain passive sources (the "95-percent test"). In addition, at least 75 percent of its income generally must be from certain real estate sources (the "75-percent test"), including rents from real property.

In addition, less than 30 percent of the entity's gross income may be derived from gain from the sale or other disposition of stock or securities held for less than one year, real property held less than four years , and property that is sold or disposed of in a prohibited transaction.

Definition of rents.—For purposes of the income requirements, rents from real property generally include rents from interests in real property, charges for services customarily rendered or furnished in connection with the rental of real property, whether or not such charges are separately stated, and rent attributable to personal property that is leased under or in connection with a lease of real property, but only if the rent attributable to such personal property does not exceed 15 percent of the total rent for the year under the lease.

Hedging instruments.—Interest rate swaps or cap agreements that protect a REIT from interest rate fluctuations on variable rate debt incurred to acquire or carry real property are treated as securities under the 30-percent test and payments under these agreements are treated as qualifying under the 95-percent test.

Asset requirements

REIT subsidiaries.—A subsidiary of a REIT is a qualified REIT subsidiary if and only if 100 percent of the subsidiary's stock is owned by the REIT at all times that the subsidiary is in existence. If at any time the REIT ceases to own 100 percent of the stock of the subsidiary, or if the REIT ceases to qualify for (or revokes an election of) REIT status, such subsidiary is treated as a new corporation that acquired all of its assets in exchange for its stock (and assumption of liabilities) immediately before the time that the REIT ceased to own 100 percent of the subsidiary's stock, or ceased to be a REIT as the case may be.

Distribution requirements

To satisfy the distribution requirement, a REIT must distribute as dividends to its shareholders during the taxable year an amount equal to or exceeding (1) the sum of 95 percent of its REITTI other than net capital gain income and 95 percent of the excess of its net income from foreclosure property over the tax imposed on that income minus (2) certain excess noncash income.

Excess noncash items include: (1) the excess of the amounts that the REIT is required to include in income under section 467 with respect to certain rental agreements involving deferred rents, over the amounts that the REIT otherwise would recognize under its regular method of accounting; (2) in the case of a REIT using the cash method of accounting, the excess of the amount of original issue discount and coupon interest that the REIT is required to take into account with respect to a loan to which section 1274 applies, over the amount of money and fair market value of other property received with respect to the loan; and (3) income arising from the disposition of a real estate asset in certain transactions that failed to qualify as like-kind exchanges under section 1031.

Election to be treated as a REIT

The House bill changes the ordering rule for purposes of the requirement that newly-electing REITs distribute earnings and profits that were accumulated in non-REIT years. Under the House bill, distributions of accumulated earnings and profits generally would be treated as made from the entity's earliest accumulated earnings and profits.

Taxation of REITs

Capital gains.—The House bill permits a REIT to elect to retain and pay income tax on net long-term capital gains it received during the tax year.

Income from foreclosure property.—The House bill lengthens the original grace period for foreclosure property until the last day of the third full taxable year following the election. The grace period also could be extended for an additional three years by filing a request to the IRS. Under the House bill, a REIT could revoke an election to treat property as foreclosure property for any taxable year by filing a revocation on or before its due date for filing its tax return.

The House bill conforms the definition of independent contractor for purposes of the foreclosure property rule to the definition of independent contractor for purposes of the general rules.

Income or loss from prohibited transactions.—The House bill excludes from the prohibited sales rules property that was involuntarily converted.

Organizational structure requirements

The House bill replaces the rule that disqualifies a REIT for any year in which the REIT failed to comply with regulations to ascertain its ownership, with an intermediate penalty for failing to do so. Under the House bill, the penalty is $25,000 ($50,000 for intentional violations) for any year in which the REIT did not comply with the ownership regulations.

In addition, a REIT that complied with the regulations for ascertaining its ownership, and which did not know, or have reason to know, that it was so closely held as to be classified as a personal holding company, is not to be treated as a personal holding company.

Income requirements

In general.—The House bill repeals the rule that requires less than 30 percent of a REIT's gross income be derived from gain from the sale or other disposition of stock or securities held for less than one year, certain real property held less than four years, and property that is sold or disposed of in a prohibited transaction.

Definition of rents.—The House bill permits a REIT to render a de minimis amount of impermissible services to tenants, or in connection with the management of property, and still treat amounts received with respect to that property as rent.

The House bill modifies the attribution to partnerships for purposes of defining rent, so that attribution would occur only when a partner owns a 25 percent or greater interest in the partnership.

Hedging instruments.—Under the House bill, income from all hedges that reduce the interest rate risk of REIT liabilities, not just from interest rate swaps and caps, is treated as qualifying under the 95-percent test.

Asset requirements

REIT subsidiaries.—The House bill permits any wholly-owned corporation of a REIT to be treated as a qualified subsidiary, regardless of whether the corporation had always been owned by the REIT. In addition, any pre-REIT earnings and profits of the subsidiary must be distributed before the end of the REIT's taxable year.

Distribution requirements

The House bill (1) expands the class of excess noncash items to include income from the cancellation of indebtedness and (2) extends the treatment of original issue discount and coupon interest as excess noncash items to REITs that use an accrual method of taxation.

Effective date.—Taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provisions.

C. ACCOUNTING PROVISIONS

1. MODIFICATIONS TO THE LOOK-BACK METHOD FOR LONG-TERM CONTRACTS (SEC. 14551 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Taxpayers engaged in the production of property under a long-term contract generally must compute income from the contract under the percentage of completion method. Under the percentage of completion method, a taxpayer must include in gross income for any taxable year an amount that is based on the product of (1) the gross contract price and (2) the percentage of the contract completed as of the end of the year. The percentage of the contract completed as of the end of the year is determined by comparing costs incurred with respect to the contract as of the end of the year with estimated total contract costs.

Because the percentage of completion method relies upon estimated, rather than actual, contract price and costs to determine gross income for any taxable year, a "look-back method" is applied in the year a contract is completed in order to compensate the taxpayer (or the Internal Revenue Service) for the acceleration (or deferral) of taxes paid over the contract term. The first step of the look-back method is to reapply the percentage of completion method using actual contract price and costs rather than estimated contract price and costs. The second step generally requires the taxpayer to recompute its tax liability for each year of the contract using gross income as reallocated under the look-back method. If there is any difference between the recomputed tax liability and the tax liability as previously determined for a year, such difference is treated as a hypothetical underpayment or overpayment of tax to which the taxpayer applies a rate of interest equal to the overpayment rate, compounded daily. The taxpayer receives (or pays) interest if the net amount of interest applicable to hypothetical overpayments exceeds (or is less than) the amount of interest applicable to hypothetical underpayments. The look-back method must be reapplied for any item of income or cost that is properly taken into account after the completion of the contract.

The House bill provides that a taxpayer may elect not to apply the look-back method with respect to a long-term contract if for each prior contract year, the cumulative taxable income (or loss) under the contract as determined using estimated contract price and costs is within 10 percent of the cumulative taxable income (or loss) as determined using actual contract price and costs. The bill also provides that a taxpayer may elect not to reapply the look-back method with respect to a contract if, as of the close of any taxable year after the year the contract is completed, the cumulative taxable income (or loss) under the contract is within 10 percent of the cumulative look-back income (or loss) as of the close of the most recent year in which the look-back method was applied (or would have applied but for the other de minimis exception described above). Finally, the bill reduces the number of interest rates applicable under the look-back method.

Effective date.—The provision applies to contracts completed in taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

2. APPLICATION OF MARK-TO-MARKET ACCOUNTING METHOD TO TRADERS IN SECURITIES (SEC. 14552 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A dealer in securities must compute its income pursuant to a "mark-to-market" method of accounting prescribed by section 475.

Under section 475, any security that is inventory in the hands of a dealer must be included in inventory at its fair market value and any security that is that is not inventory in the hands of a dealer and that is held at year end shall be treated as sold for its fair market value. For this purpose, a "dealer in securities" is any person who (1) regularly purchases securities from or sells securities to customers in the ordinary course of a trade or business, or (2) regularly offers to enter into, assume, offset, assign or otherwise terminate positions in securities with customers in the ordinary course of a trade or business.

Traders in securities generally are taxpayers who derive their income principally from the active sale or exchange of securities on the market (rather than to customers, as in the case of a dealer in securities). Section 475 does not explicitly apply to traders in securities. In general, there are no specific statutory provisions that mandate the use of an overall method of accounting by traders. Thus, traders generally account for gains and losses on trading securities when the securities are sold, rather than marking the securities to market, for Federal income tax purposes.

House bill

The House bill provides that a trader in securities may, with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, elect to change its method of accounting to adopt a mark-to-market method for its trading activities. Such method may be based on the provisions of present-law section 475, modified to clearly reflect the income of the taxpayer. The adoption of a mark-to-market method of accounting may not change the character of the gain or loss with respect to the securities.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

3. MODIFICATION OF RULING AMOUNTS FOR NUCLEAR DECOMMISSIONING COSTS (SEC. 14553 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under the economic performance rules, a deduction for accrual basis taxpayers generally is deferred until there is economic performance for the item for which the deduction is claimed (sec. 461(h)). Present law contains an exception to the economic performance rules under which a taxpayer responsible for nuclear power plant decommissioning may elect to deduct contributions made to a qualified nuclear decommissioning fund (sec. 468A).

A qualified decommissioning fund is a segregated fund established by the taxpayer that is used exclusively for the payment of decommissioning costs, taxes on fund income, payment of management costs of the fund, and investment in certain types of investments. Contributions to the fund are deductible in the year made to the extent that these amounts were collected as part of the cost of service to ratepayers. Withdrawals of funds by the taxpayer to pay for decommissioning expenses are included in income at that time, but the taxpayer also is entitled to a deduction at that time for decommissioning expenses as economic performance for those costs occurs. A 20-percent tax rate applies to the taxable income of the fund.

In order to prevent accumulations of funds over the remaining life of the plant in excess of those required to pay future decommissioning costs and to ensure that contributions to the funds are not deducted more rapidly than level funding, taxpayers are required to obtain a ruling from the IRS to establish the maximum contribution that may be made to the fund. Taxpayers are required to obtain subsequent rulings to reflect changes in the ruling amount in certain instances.

House bill

The House bill repeals the requirement that a taxpayer obtain certain rulings from the IRS in order to deduct contributions to a nuclear decommissioning fund. Under the House bill, a taxpayer is required to obtain an initial ruling to determine its maximum deduction for contributions to a fund, but is not required to obtain subsequent rulings if such amounts are not substantially modified. The taxpayer is required to notify the Secretary of the Treasury whenever the ruling amount is modified.

Effective date.—The provision applies to modifications after the date of enactment

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

4. ELECTION OF ALTERNATIVE TAXABLE YEARS BY PARTNERSHIPS AND S CORPORATIONS (SEC. 14554 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The taxable income of a partnership or an S corporation (a "flow-thru entity") generally is reported by the partnership's partners or the corporation's shareholders (the "owners") in the taxable year within which the taxable year of the flow-thru entity ends. As a result, if a flow-thru entity uses a taxable year that is the same as the taxable year of its owners, the owners will report income earned by the entity in the year that the income is earned. If a flow-thru entity uses a taxable year that is different than the taxable year of its owners, the owners will defer reporting a portion of the income earned by the entity until the year following the year the income was earned. In order to avoid this deferral, under present law, a flow-through entity generally must use a taxable year that corresponds to the taxable years of its owners (i.e., generally, the calendar year in the case of an entity owned by individuals).

However, under certain circumstances, deferral through use of a fiscal year is permitted (sec. 444). A flow-thru entity may use a fiscal year that it used prior to 1987 or a fiscal year that provides up to a 3-month deferral so long as it makes a payment equal to the income attributable to the deferral period times the highest individual tax rate plus 1 percentage point (currently, 40.6 percent). Such payments remain on deposit and may be refunded if the income of the entity for the deferral period diminishes or the entity abandons its fiscal year (sec. 7519).

House bill

The House bill allows any flow-thru entity to use a fiscal year so long as the entity makes quarterly estimated tax payments at an applicable rate. These estimated tax payments are treated as estimated tax payments of the owners of the flow-thru entity for the owners' taxable year in which the fiscal year ends. Estimated tax payments are not required for a taxable year if the amount of aggregate payments otherwise due is $5,000 or less.

In determining its quarterly estimated tax payments, the entity may use (1) the 100-percent method, (2) the 110-percent method, or (3) the annualization method. Under the 100-percent method, the required quarterly installment is one-quarter of the product of the entity's applicable income for the current year and the applicable rate. Under the 110- percent method, the required quarterly installment is one-quarter of 110 percent of the product of the entity's applicable income for the preceding year and the applicable rate. The 110-percent method is not available if the entity's current year applicable income exceeds its preceding-year applicable income by more than $750,000. Under the annualization method, the required quarterly installment is one-quarter of the product of the entity's annualized applicable income and the applicable rate. "Applicable income" is determined by taking the entity's items into account under subchapter K or S, as the case may be, with certain adjustments. The "applicable rate" is 34 percent, unless the flow-thru entity is a "high income average entity," in which case the applicable rate is 39.6 percent. A "high average income entity" is one where the average applicable income of the 2-percent owners for the preceding year was at least $250,000 or, in the case of a partnership, the applicable income for the preceding year was at least $10,000,000.

A flow-thru entity is not allowed to make a new election under present-law section 444. An entity that currently has a section 444 election in effect may (1) retain the election or (2) revoke the election and receive a refund of its deposit, or (3) make a new section 444 election and treat its deposit as a payment of estimated tax under the provision.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1996.

D. TAX-EXEMPT BOND PROVISIONS

1. REPEAL OF $100,000 LIMITATION ON UNSPENT PROCEEDS UNDER 1-YEAR EXCEPTION FROM REBATE (SEC. 14561 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Generally, arbitrage profits from investing bond proceeds in investments unrelated to the governmental purpose of the borrowing must be rebated to the Federal Government. No rebate is required six months after issuance by issuers of certain governmental bonds and qualified 501(c)(3) bonds if (1) all proceeds other than an amount not exceeding the lesser of five percent or $100,000 are spent within six months and (2) the remaining proceeds are spent within one year after the bonds are issued.

House bill

The House bill repeals the $100,000 limit on proceeds that may remain unspent after six months for certain governmental and qualified 501(c)(3) bonds.

Effective date.—Bonds issued after the date of enactment.

Senate agreement

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

2. EXCEPTION FROM REBATE FOR EARNINGS ON BONA FIDE DEBT SERVICE FUND UNDER CONSTRUCTION BOND RULES (SEC. 14562 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

In general, arbitrage profits from investing bond proceeds in investments unrelated to the governmental purpose of the borrowing must be rebated to the Federal Government. An exception is provided for certain construction bond issues if the available construction proceeds of the issue are spent at minimum specified rates during the 24-month period after the bonds are issued. The exception does not apply to bond proceeds invested after the 24-month expenditure period as part of a bona fide debt service fund.

House bill

The House bill exempts earnings on bond proceeds invested in bona fide debt service funds from the arbitrage rebate requirement and the penalty requirement of the 24-month exception if the spending requirements of that exception are otherwise satisfied.

Effective date.—Bonds issued after the date of enactment.

Senate agreement

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

3. REPEAL OF DEBT SERVICE-BASED LIMITATION ON INVESTMENT IN CERTAIN NONPURPOSE INVESTMENTS (SEC. 14563 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

With certain exceptions, present law limits the amount of the proceeds of private activity bonds (other than qualified 501(c)(3) bonds) that may be invested at materially higher yields at any time during a bond year to 150 percent of the debt service for that bond year. (Any profits earned from higher yielding investments generally must be rebated to the Federal government.)

House bill

The House bill repeals the 150-percent of debt service yield restriction.

Effective date.—Bonds issued after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

4. REPEAL OF EXPIRED TAX-EXEMPT BOND PROVISIONS (SEC. 14564 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Present law includes two special exceptions to the arbitrage rebate and pooled financing temporary period rules for certain qualified student loan bonds. These exceptions applied only to bonds issued before January 1, 1989.

House bill

The House bill repeals these special exceptions as "deadwood."

Effective date.—Date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

E. INSURANCE PROVISIONS

1. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN INSURANCE CONTRACTS ON RETIRED LIVES (SEC. 14571 OF THE HOUSE BILL AND SEC. 12877 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

Present law

Life insurance companies are allowed a deduction for any net increase in reserves and are required to include in income any net decrease in reserves. The reserve of a life insurance company for any contract is the greater of the net surrender value of the contract or the reserve determined under Federally prescribed rules. In no event, however, may the amount of the reserve for tax purposes for any contract at any time exceed the amount of the reserve for annual statement purposes.

Special rules are provided in the case of a variable contract. Under these rules, the reserve for a variable contract is adjusted by (1) subtracting any amount that has been added to the reserve by reason of appreciation in the value of assets underlying such contract, and (2) adding any amount that has been subtracted from the reserve by reason of depreciation in the value of assets underlying such contract. In addition, the basis of each asset underlying a variable contract is adjusted for appreciation or depreciation to the extent the reserve is adjusted.

A variable contract generally is defined as any annuity or life insurance contract (1) that provides for the allocation of all or part of the amounts received under the contract to an account that is segregated from the general asset accounts of the company, and (2) under which, in the case of an annuity contract, the amounts paid in, or the amounts paid out, reflect the investment return and the market value of the segregated asset account, or, in the case of a life insurance contract, the amount of the death benefit (or the period of coverage) is adjusted on the basis of the investment return and the market value of the segregated asset account. A pension plan contract that is not a life, accident, or health, property, casualty, or liability insurance contract is treated as an annuity contract for purposes of this definition.

The House bill provides that a variable contract is to include a contract that provides for the funding of group term life or group accident and health insurance on retired lives if: (1) the contract provides for the allocation of all or part of the amounts received under the contract to an account that is segregated from the general asset account of the company; and (2) the amounts paid in, or the amounts paid out, under the contract reflect the investment return and the market value of the segregated asset account underlying the contract.

Thus, the reserve for such a contract is to be adjusted by (1) subtracting any amount that has been added to the reserve by reason of appreciation in the value of assets underlying such contract, and (2) adding any amount that has been subtracted from the reserve by reason of depreciation in the value of assets underlying such contract. In addition, the basis of each asset underlying the contract is to be adjusted for appreciation or depreciation to the extent that the reserve is adjusted.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

2. TREATMENT OF MODIFIED GUARANTEED CONTRACTS (SEC. 14572 OF THE HOUSE BILL AND SEC. 12878 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

Present law

Life insurance companies are allowed a deduction for any net increase in reserves and are required to include in income any net decrease in reserves. The reserve of a life insurance company for any contract is the greater of the net surrender value of the contract or the reserve determined under Federally prescribed rules. The net surrender value of a contract is the cash surrender value reduced by any surrender penalty, except that any market value adjustment required on surrender is not taken into account. In no event, however, may the amount of the reserve for tax purposes for any contract at any time exceed the amount of the reserve for annual statement purposes.

In general, assets held for investment are treated as capital assets. Any gain or loss from the sale or exchange of a capital asset is treated as a capital gain or loss and is taken into account for the taxable year in which the asset is sold or exchanged.

House bill

The House bill generally applies a mark-to-market regime to assets held as part of a segregated account under a modified guaranteed contract issued by a life insurance company. Gain or loss with respect to such assets held as of the close of any taxable year are taken into account for that year (even though the assets have not been sold or exchanged),[119] and are treated as ordinary. If gain or loss is taken into account by reason of the mark-to-market requirement, then the amount of gain or loss subsequently realized as a result of sale, exchange, or other disposition of the asset, or as a result of the application of the mark-to-market requirement is appropriately adjusted to reflect such gain or loss. In addition, the reserve for a modified guaranteed contract is determined by taking into account the market value adjustment required on surrender of the contract.

A modified guaranteed contract is defined as any life insurance contract, annuity contract or pension plan contract[120] that is not a variable contract (within the meaning of Code section 817), and that satisfies the following requirements. All or a part of the amounts received under the contract must be allocated to an account which, pursuant to State law or regulation, is segregated from the general asset accounts of the company and is valued from time to time by reference to market values.

The Treasury Department is authorized to issue regulations or other guidance under the provision.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995. A taxpayer that is required to (1) change its calculation of reserves to take into account market value adjustments and (2) mark to market its segregated assets in order to comply with the requirements of the provision is treated as having initiated changes in method of accounting and as having received the consent of the Treasury Department to make such changes.

The section 481(a) adjustments required by reason of the changes in method of accounting are to be combined and taken into account as a single net adjustment for the taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

[119] The wash sale rules of section 1091 of the Code are not to apply to any loss that is required to be taken into account solely by reason of the mark-to-market requirement.

[120] The provision applies only to a pension plan contract that is not a life, accident or health, property, casualty, or liability contract.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with clarifications.

Under the House bill and the Senate amendment, the reserves for a modified guaranteed contract must be valued at market for annual statement purposes and the Federally prescribed reserve for the contract under section 807(d)(2) must be valued at market. The Senate Finance committee report provides that for this purpose, reserves are valued at market if they are calculated using a current market rate of interest, as of the reserve valuation date, that is appropriate for the obligations under the contract to which the reserve relates.

The House bill and the Senate amendment also provide that the Treasury Department is authorized to determine the interest rates applicable under sections 807(c)(3), 807(d)(2)(B) and 812 with respect to modified guaranteed contracts annually, calculating such rates as appropriate for modified guaranteed contracts. For example, it may be appropriate to take into account the yield on the assets underlying the contract in determining such rates.

The conference agreement clarifies that the Treasury Department has discretion to determine an appropriate rate that is a current market rate, which could be determined, for example, either by using a rate that is appropriate for the obligations under the contract to which the reserve relates, or by taking into account the yield on the assets underlying the contract.

The conferees intend that the Treasury Department may exercise this authority by issuing a periodic announcement of the appropriate market interest rates or formula for determining such rates.

3. MINIMUM TAX TREATMENT OF CERTAIN PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE COMPANIES (SEC. 14573 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Property and casualty insurance companies whose net written premiums (or if greater, direct written premiums) for the taxable year exceed $350,000 but do not exceed $1,200,000 may elect to be taxed only on taxable investment income for regular tax purposes, without regard to underwriting income or expense (sec. 831(b)).

This election does not apply for alternative minimum tax purposes. All corporations, including insurance companies, are subject to an alternative minimum tax. Alternative minimum taxable income is increased by 75 percent of the excess of adjusted current earnings over alternative minimum taxable income (determined without regard to this adjustment and without regard to net operating losses).

House bill

The House bill provides that a property and casualty insurance company that elects for regular tax purposes to be taxed only on taxable investment income determines its adjusted current earnings under the alternative minimum tax without regard to any amount not taken into account in determining its gross investment income under section 834(b). Thus, adjusted current earnings of an electing company is determined without regard to underwriting income (or underwriting expense, as provided in sec. 56(g)(4)(B)(I)(II)).

Effective date.—Taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

F. OTHER PROVISIONS

1. CLOSING OF PARTNERSHIP TAXABLE YEAR WITH RESPECT TO DECEASED PARTNER (SEC. 14581 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The partnership taxable year closes with respect to a partner whose entire interest is sold, exchanged or liquidated, but generally not upon the death of a partner. A decedent's entire share of items of income, gain, loss, deduction and credit for the partnership taxable year in which death occurs is taxed to the decedent's estate or successor in interest, rather than to the decedent on his or her final tax return. See Estate of Hesse v. Commissioner, 74 T.C. 1307, 1311 (1980).

House bill

The House bill provides that the taxable year of a partnership closes with respect to a partner whose entire interest in the partnership terminates, whether by death, liquidation or otherwise. The provision is not intended to change present law with respect to the effect upon the partnership taxable year of a transfer of a partnership interest by a debtor to the debtor's estate (under Chapters 7 or 11 of Title 11, relating to bankruptcy).

Effective date.—Partnership taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

2. TAX CREDIT FOR SOCIAL SECURITY TAXES PAID WITH RESPECT TO EMPLOYEE CASH TIPS (SEC. 14582 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Employee tip income is treated as employer-provided wages for purposes of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act ("FICA"). Employees are required to report to the employer the amount of tips received. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 ("OBRA 1993") provided a business tax credit with respect to certain employer FICA taxes paid with respect to tips treated as paid by the employer. The credit applies to tips received from customers in connection with the provision of food or beverages for consumption on the premises of an establishment with respect to which the tipping of employees is customary. OBRA 1993 provided that the FICA tip credit is effective for taxes paid after December 31, 1993. Temporary Treasury regulations provide that the tax credit is available only with respect to tips reported by the employee. The temporary regulations also provide that the credit is effective for FICA taxes paid by an employer after December 31, 1993, with respect to tips received for services performed after December 31, 1993.

House bill

The House bill clarifies the credit with respect to employer FICA taxes paid on tips by providing that the credit is available whether or not the employee reported the tips and that the credit is effective with respect to taxes paid after December 31, 1993, regardless of when the services with respect to which the tips are received were performed.

Effective date.—The provision is effective as if included in OBRA 1993.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

3. DUE DATE FOR FIRST QUARTER ESTIMATED TAX PAYMENTS BY PRIVATE FOUNDATIONS (SEC. 14583 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under section 4940, tax-exempt private foundations generally are required to pay an excise tax equal to two percent of their net investment income for the taxable year. Under section 6655(g)(3), private foundations are required to pay estimated tax with respect to their excise tax liability under section 4940 (as well as any unrelated business income tax (UBIT) liability under section 511).[121] Section 6655(c) provides that this estimated tax is payable in quarterly installments and that, for calendar-year foundations, the first quarterly installment is due on April 15th. Under section 6655(I), foundations with taxable years other than the calendar year must make their quarterly estimated tax payments no later than the dates in their fiscal years that correspond to the dates applicable to calendar-year foundations.

House bill

The House bill amends section 6655(g)(3) to provide that a calendar-year foundation's first-quarter estimated tax payment is due on May 15th (which is the same day that its annual return, Form 990-PF, for the preceding year is due). As a result of the operation of present-law section 6655(I), fiscal-year foundations will be required to make their first-quarter estimated tax payment no later than the 15th day of the fifth month of their taxable year.

Effective date.—Taxable years beginning after 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

XVI. SIMPLIFICATION PROVISIONS RELATING TO ESTATES, GIFTS, AND TRUSTS

A. ESTATE AND TRUST INCOME TAX PROVISIONS

1. CERTAIN REVOCABLE TRUSTS TREATED AS PART OF ESTATE (SEC. 14601 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

While both estates and revocable inter vivos trusts perform essentially the same function of administering the disposition of the decedent's property after the testator or grantor's death, numerous differences presently exist between the income tax treatment of estates and revocable trusts.

House bill

The House bill provides an irrevocable election to treat a qualified revocable trust as part of the decedent's estate for Federal income tax purposes. This elective treatment is effective from the date of the decedent's death until two years after his or her death (if no estate tax return is required) or six months after the final determination of estate tax liability (if an estate tax return is required).

Effective date.—Effective for decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

---

[121] Generally, the amount of the first quarter payment must be at least 25 percent of the lesser of (1) the preceding year's tax liability, as shown on the foundation's Form 990-PF, or (2) 95 percent of the foundation's current-year tax liability.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with technical modifications that (1) provide an election for a revocable trust to be treated as an estate in cases where there is no taxable estate; and (2) permit the election to be made in cases where only a portion of a revocable trust is treated as owned by the decedent.

2. DISTRIBUTIONS DURING FIRST 65 DAYS OF TAXABLE YEAR OF ESTATE (SEC. 14602 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under the "65-day rule," a trust may elect to treat distributions paid within 65 days after the close of its taxable year as paid on the last day of its taxable year (sec. 663(b)). The 65-day rule is not applicable to estates.

House bill

The House bill extends application of the 65-day rule to distributions by estates. Thus, an executor can elect to treat distributions paid within 65 days after the close of the estate's taxable year as having been paid on the last day of such taxable year.

Effective date.—Effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

3. SEPARATE SHARE RULES AVAILABLE TO ESTATES (SEC. 14603 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Trusts with more than one beneficiary must use the "separate share" rule under which different tax treatment is accorded to distributions to different beneficiaries to reflect the income earned by different shares of the trust's corpus (sec. 663(c)). The separate share rule does not apply to estates.

House bill

The House bill extends the application of the separate share rule to estates. There are separate shares in an estate when the governing instrument of the estate creates separate economic interests in one beneficiary or class of beneficiaries such that the economic interests of those beneficiaries are not affected by economic interests accruing to another separate beneficiary or class of beneficiaries.

Effective date.—Effective for decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

4. EXECUTOR OF ESTATE AND BENEFICIARIES TREATED AS RELATED PERSONS FOR DISALLOWANCE OF LOSSES, ETC. (SEC. 14604 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Section 267 disallows a deduction for any loss on the sale of an asset to a person related to the taxpayer. Section 1239 disallows capital gain treatment on the sale of depreciable property to a related person. Neither section 267 or section 1239 presently treat an estate and a beneficiary of the estate as related persons.

House bill

An estate and a beneficiary of that estate are treated as related persons for purposes of sections 267 and 1239, except in the case of a sale or exchange in satisfaction of a pecuniary bequest.

Effective date.—Effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

5. LIMITATION ON TAXABLE YEAR OF ESTATES (SEC. 14605 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Trusts are required to use a calendar year and, consequently, income of a trust that is distributed to a calendar-year beneficiary in the year earned is taxed to the beneficiary in the year earned. In contrast, estates are allowed to use any fiscal year and, consequently, the taxation of distributions to a calendar-year beneficiary in up to the last 11 months of the calendar year can be deferred until the next taxable year depending upon the fiscal year selected.

House bill

The House bill limits the taxable year of an estate to a year ending on October 31, November 30, or December 31. Thus, the maximum deferral allowable to a calendar-year beneficiary is with respect to distributions made in the last two months of the calendar year.

Effective date.—Effective for decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

6. REPEAL OF CERTAIN THROWBACK RULES APPLICABLE TO DOMESTIC TRUSTS (SEC. 14606 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Nongrantor trusts are subject to a separate graduated tax rate structure which historically has permitted accumulated trust income to be taxed at lower rates than the rates applicable to trust beneficiaries. Under the so-called "throwback" rules, the distribution of previously accumulated trust income to a beneficiary is subject to tax (in addition to any tax paid by the trust on that income) where the beneficiary's average top marginal rate in the previous five years is higher than that of the trust.

Under section 644, if property is sold within two years of its contribution to a trust, the gain that would have been recognized had the contributor sold the property is taxed at the contributor's marginal tax rates. In effect, section 644 treats such gains as if the contributor had realized the gain and then transferred the net after-tax proceeds from the sale to the trust as corpus.

House bill

The House bill exempts from the throwback rules amounts distributed by a domestic trust after December 31, 1995. The provision also provides that precontribution gain on property sold by a domestic trust no longer is subject to section 644 (i.e., taxed at the contributor's marginal tax rates).

Effective date.—The provision with respect to the throwback rules is effective for distributions made in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995. The modification to section 644 applies to sales or exchanges after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

7. TREATMENT OF FUNERAL TRUSTS (SEC. 14607 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A pre-need funeral trust is an arrangement where an individual purchases funeral services or merchandise in advance of the individual's death. The individual enters into a contract with the provider of such services or merchandise whereby the individual selects the services or merchandise to be provided upon his or her death, and agrees to pay for them in advance of his or her death. Such amounts (or a portion thereof) are held in trust during the individual's lifetime and are paid to the seller upon the individual's death.

Under present law, pre-need funeral trusts generally are treated as grantor trusts, and the annual income earned by such trusts is taxed to the purchaser/grantor of the trust. Rev. Rul. 87-127. Any amount received from the trust by the seller (as payment for services or merchandise) is includible in the gross income of the seller.

House bill

The House bill allows the trustee of a pre-need funeral trust to elect special tax treatment for such a trust, to the extent the trust would otherwise be treated as a grantor trust. A qualified funeral trust is defined as one which meets the following requirements: (1) the trust arises as the result of a contract between a person engaged in the trade or business of providing funeral or burial services or merchandise and one or more individuals to have such services or property provided upon such individuals' death; (2) the only beneficiaries of the trust are individuals who have entered into contracts to have such services or merchandise provided upon their death; (3) the only contributions to the trust are contributions by or for the benefit of the trust beneficiaries; (4) the trust's only purpose is to hold and invest funds that will be used to make payments for funeral or burial services or merchandise for the trust beneficiaries; and (5) the trust has not accepted contributions totaling more than $5,000 by or for the benefit of any individual.

The trustee's election to have this provision apply to a qualified funeral trust is to be made separately with respect to each purchaser's trust. The amount of tax paid with respect to each purchaser's trust is determined in accordance with the income tax rate schedule generally applicable to estates and trusts (Code sec. 1(e)), but no deduction is allowed under section 642(b). The tax on the annual earnings of the trust is payable by the trustee.

Effective date.—Effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with the modification that a qualified funeral trust may accept aggregate contributions of up to $7,000 by or for the benefit of any individual.

B. ESTATE AND GIFT TAX PROVISIONS

1. CLARIFICATION OF WAIVER OF CERTAIN RIGHTS OF RECOVERY (SEC. 14611 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

For estate and gift tax purposes, a marital deduction is allowed for qualified terminable interest property (QTIP). Such property generally is included in the surviving spouse's gross estate upon his or her death. The surviving spouse's estate is entitled to recover the portion of the estate tax attributable to inclusion of QTIP from the person receiving the property, unless the spouse directs otherwise by will (sec. 2207A). For this purpose, a will provision specifying that all taxes shall be paid by the estate is sufficient to waive the right of recovery.

A decedent's gross estate includes the value of previously transferred property in which the decedent retains enjoyment or the right to income (sec. 2036). The estate is entitled to recover from the person receiving the property a portion of the estate tax attributable to the inclusion (sec. 2207B). This right may be waived only by a provision in the will (or revocable trust) specifically referring to section 2207B.

House bill

The House bill provides that the right of recovery with respect to QTIP is waived only to the extent that language in the decedent's will or revocable trust specifically so indicates (e.g., by a specific reference to QTIP, the QTIP trust, section 2044, or section 2207A). Thus, a general provision specifying that all taxes be paid by the estate is no longer sufficient to waive the right of recovery.

The House bill also provides that the right of contribution for property over which the decedent retained enjoyment or the right to income is waived by a specific indication in the decedent's will or revocable trust, but specific reference to section 2207B is no longer required.

Effective date.—Effective for decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

2. ADJUSTMENTS FOR GIFTS WITHIN 3 YEARS OF DECEDENT'S DEATH (SEC. 14612 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A taxpayer may exclude $10,000 of gifts of present interests in property made to each donee during a calendar year. Certain transfers made from a revocable trust within three years of death may be included in the decedent's gross estate even though such transfers would qualify for the annual $10,000 exclusion if made by the decedent directly.

House bill

The House bill provides that a transfer from a revocable trust is treated as if made directly by the grantor. Thus, an annual exclusion gift from such trust is not included in the gross estate.

Effective date.—Effective for decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

3. CLARIFICATION OF QUALIFIED TERMINABLE INTEREST RULES (SEC. 14613 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A marital deduction is allowed for qualified terminal interest property ("QTIP"). Property is QTIP only if the surviving spouse is entitled to all income from the property for life, payable at least annually. QTIP generally is includible in the surviving spouse's gross estate.

The United States Tax Court has held that, in order to satisfy the QTIP requirements, the income accumulating between the last distribution date and the date of the surviving spouse's death (the "accumulated income") must be paid to the spouse's estate or be subject to a power of appointment held by the spouse. In contrast, proposed Treasury regulations presently provide that the QTIP requirements may be satisfied even if the accumulated income is not required to be distributed to the surviving spouse or the surviving spouse's estate.

House bill

The House bill provides that property does not fail to be QTIP solely because the accumulated income is not required to be distributed to the surviving spouse. Such income is includible in the surviving spouse's gross estate.

Effective date.—Effective for decedents dying, and gifts made, after the date of enactment. However, the bill does not include in the surviving spouse's gross estate property transferred before the date of enactment for which no marital deduction was claimed.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

4. TRANSITIONAL RULE UNDER SECTION 2056A (SEC. 14614 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A "marital deduction" generally is allowed for estate and gift tax purposes for the value of property passing to a spouse. The marital deduction is not available for property passing to an alien spouse outside a qualified domestic trust ("QDT"). An estate tax generally is imposed on corpus distributions from a QDT.

A QDT was originally defined as a trust that, among other things, required all trustees be U.S. citizens or domestic corporations. This provision was later modified to require that at least one trustee be a U.S. citizen or domestic corporation and that no corpus distribution be made unless such trustee has the right to withhold any estate tax imposed on the distribution (the "withholding requirement").

House bill

A trust created before the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 is treated as satisfying the withholding requirement if its governing instrument requires that all trustees be U.S. citizens or domestic corporations.

Effective date.—The provision applies as if included in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

5. OPPORTUNITY TO CORRECT CERTAIN FAILURES UNDER SECTION 2032A (SEC. 14615 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

For estate tax purposes, an executor may elect to value certain real property used in farming or other closely held business operations at its current use value rather than its highest and best use (sec. 2032A). A written agreement signed by each person who has an interest in the property must be filed with the election.

In 1984, section 2032A was amended to provide that if an executor makes a timely election that substantially complies with Treasury regulations, but fails to provide all required information or the signatures of all persons required to enter into the agreement, the executor may supply the missing information within a reasonable period of time (not exceeding 90 days) after notification by the Treasury Department.

House bill

The House bill extends the procedures allowing subsequent submission of information to any executor who makes a timely election and submits the recapture agreement, without regard to substantial compliance with the Treasury regulations. Thus, the bill allows a technically defective current use valuation election to be corrected if the executor supplies the missing information or signatures within a reasonable period of time (not exceeding 90 days) after notification by the Treasury Department.

Effective date.—The provision applies to decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill. The conferees believe that the Treasury Department has taken an unnecessarily restrictive view of the 1984 amendment to section 2032A and intend no inference that the Treasury Department lacks the power, under the law in effect prior to enactment of the conference agreement, to correct the situation addressed by this provision. The conferees intend that, with respect to technically defective 2032A elections made prior to the date of enactment, prior law should be applied in a manner consistent with the provision.

6. UNIFIED CREDIT OF DECEDENT INCREASED BY UNIFIED CREDIT OF SPOUSE USED ON SPLIT GIFT INCLUDED IN DECEDENT'S GROSS ESTATE (SEC. 14616 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The estate tax is imposed on all of the assets held by the decedent at his death, including the value of property previously transferred by the decedent in which the decedent retained certain powers or interests, e.g., sections 2036 (transfers with retained life estate), 2037 (transfers taking effect at death), 2038 (revocable transfers), or 2042 (proceeds of life insurance). Under section 2035, the estate tax also would apply with respect to property in which such a retained power or interest is transferred within three years of death.

Under section 2513, spouses may elect to treat a gift made by one spouse to a third person as made one-half by each spouse (i.e., "gift-splitting").

House bill

With respect to any split-gift property that is subsequently included in the estate of the transferor spouse under sections 2035, 2036, 2037 or 2038, the House bill increases the unified credit allowable to the transferor spouse's estate by the amount of the unified credit previously allowed to the nontransferor spouse with respect to the split gift.

Effective date.—The provision applies to gifts made after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

7. REFORMATION OF DEFECTIVE BEQUESTS, ETC. TO SPOUSE OF DECEDENT (SEC. 14617 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A marital deduction generally is allowed for estate and gift tax purposes for the value of property passing to a spouse. However, "terminable interest" property (i.e., an interest in property that will terminate or fail) transferred to a spouse generally will only qualify for the marital deduction under certain special rules designed to ensure that there will be an estate or gift tax to the transferee spouse on unspent transferred proceeds.

One of the special terminable interest rules allows a marital deduction where the decedent transfers property to a "power of appointment trust," i.e., a trust that is required to pay income to the surviving spouse and over which the surviving spouse has a general power of appointment at that spouse's death (sec. 2056(b)(5)). Another special rule called the "qualified terminable interest property" rule ("QTIP") generally permits a marital deduction for transfers by the decedent to a trust that is required to distribute all income to the surviving spouse for life at least annually and an election is made to subject the transferee spouse to transfer tax on the trust property.

To qualify for the marital deduction, a power of appointment trust or QTIP trust must meet certain specific requirements. If there is a technical defect in meeting those requirements, the marital deduction may be lost.

House bill

The House bill allows the marital deduction with respect to a defective power of appointment or QTIP trust if there is a "qualified reformation" of the trust that changes the governing instrument in a manner that corrects the defect. Where a reformation proceeding is commenced after the due date for the estate tax return (including extensions), the reformation qualifies only if, prior to reformation, the governing instrument provides (1) that the surviving spouse is entitled to all income from the property for life, and (2) no person other than the surviving spouse is entitled to any distributions during the surviving spouse's life. With respect to QTIP, an election to qualify must be made by the executor on the estate tax return as required by section 2056(b)(7)(B)(v).

The determination as to whether the property qualifies for the marital deduction is made either as of the due date for filing the estate or gift tax return (including any extensions) or the time that changes are completed pursuant to a reformation proceeding. The statute of limitations is extended with respect to the estate or gift tax attributable to the trust property until one year after the date the Treasury Department is notified that a qualified reformation has been completed or that the reformation proceeding has otherwise terminated.

Effective date.—The provision applies to decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

8. GIFTS MAY NOT BE REVALUED FOR ESTATE TAX PURPOSES AFTER EXPIRATION OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS (SEC. 14618 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The Federal estate and gift taxes are unified so that a single progressive rate schedule is applied to an individual's cumulative gifts and bequests. The tax on gifts made in a particular year is computed by determining the tax on the sum of the taxable gifts made that year and all prior years and then subtracting the tax on the prior years' taxable gifts and the unified credit. Similarly, the estate tax is computed by determining the tax on the sum of the taxable estate and prior taxable gifts and then subtracting the tax on taxable gifts and the unified credit. Under a special rule applicable to the computation of the gift tax (sec. 2504(c)), the value of gifts made in prior years is the value that was used to determine the prior year's gift tax. There is no comparable rule in the case of the computation of the estate tax.

Generally, any estate or gift tax must be assessed within three years after the filing of the return. No proceeding in a court for the collection of an estate or gift tax can be begun without an assessment within the three-year period. If no return is filed, the tax may be assessed, or a suit commenced to collect the tax without assessment, at any time. If an estate or gift tax return is filed, and the amount of unreported items exceeds 25 percent of the amount of the reported items, the tax may be assessed or a suit commenced to collect the tax without assessment, within six years after the return was filed (sec. 6501).

Commencement of the statute of limitations generally does not require that a particular gift be disclosed. A special rule, however, applies to certain gifts that are valued under the special valuation rules of Chapter 14. The gift tax statute of limitations runs for such a gift only if it is disclosed on a gift tax return in a manner adequate to apprise the Secretary of the Treasury of the nature of the item.

Most courts have permitted the Commissioner to redetermine the value of a gift for which the statute of limitations period for the gift tax has expired in order to determine the appropriate tax rate bracket and unified credit for the estate tax.

House bill

The House bill provides that a gift for which the limitations period has passed cannot be revalued for purposes of determining the applicable estate tax bracket and available unified credit. For gifts made in calendar years after the date of enactment, the House bill also extends the special rule governing gifts valued under Chapter 14 to all gifts. Thus, the statute of limitations will not run on an inadequately disclosed transfer in calendar years after the date of enactment, regardless of whether a gift tax return was filed for other transfers in that same year.

It is intended that, in order to revalue a gift that has been adequately disclosed on a gift tax return, the IRS must issue a final notice of redetermination of value (a "final notice") within the statute of limitations applicable to the gift for gift tax purposes (generally, three years). This rule is applicable even where the value of the gift as shown on the return does not result in any gift tax being owed (e.g., through use of the unified credit). It also is anticipated that the IRS will develop an administrative appeals process whereby a taxpayer can challenge a redetermination of value by the IRS prior to issuance of a final notice.

A taxpayer who is mailed a final notice may challenge the redetermined value of the gift (as contained in the final notice) by filing a motion for a declaratory judgment with the United States Tax Court. The motion must be filed on or before 90 days from the date that the final notice was mailed. The statute of limitations is tolled during the pendency of the Tax Court proceeding.

Effective date.—The provision generally applies to gifts made after the date of enactment. The extension of the special rule under chapter 14 to all gifts applies to gifts made in calendar years after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

9. CLARIFICATIONS RELATING TO DISCLAIMERS (SEC. 14619 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Historically, there must be acceptance of a gift in order for the gift to be completed under State law and there is no taxable gift for Federal gift tax purposes unless there is a completed gift. Most States have rules that provide that, where there is a disclaimer of a gift, the property passes to the person who is entitled to the property had the disclaiming party died before the purported transfer.

Under section 2518, a State law type disclaimer is effective for Federal transfer tax purposes if it is an irrevocable and unqualified refusal to accept an interest in property and certain other requirements are satisfied. One of these other requirements is that the disclaimer generally must be made in writing not later than nine months after the transfer creating the interest occurs. Section 2518 is not presently effective for Federal tax purposes other than transfer taxes.

Certain transfers of property also can be treated as qualified disclaimers under section 2518. In order to qualify, these transfer-type disclaimers must be a written transfer of the disclaimant's "entire interest in the property" to persons who would have received the property had there been a valid disclaimer under State law (sec. 2518(c)(3)). Like other disclaimers, the transfer-type disclaimer generally must be made within nine months of the transfer creating the interest.

House bill

The House bill allows a transfer-type disclaimer of an "undivided portion" of the disclaimant transferor's interest in property to qualify under section 2518. The House bill also allows a spouse to make a qualified transfer-type disclaimer where the disclaimed property is transferred to a trust in which the disclaimant spouse has an interest (e.g., a credit shelter trust). Finally, the House bill provides that a qualified disclaimer for transfer tax purposes under section 2518 also is effective for Federal income tax purposes (e.g., disclaimers of interests in annuities and income in respect of a decedent).

Effective date.—The provision applies to disclaimers made after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

10. CLARIFICATION OF TREATMENT OF SURVIVOR ANNUITIES UNDER QUALIFIED TERMINABLE INTEREST RULES (SEC. 14620 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Under State community property laws, each spouse owns an undivided one-half interest in each community property asset. In community property States, a nonparticipant spouse may be treated as having a vested community property interest in his or her spouse's qualified plan, individual retirement arrangement, or simplified employee pension plan.

A survivorship interest in an annuity interest arising out of the decedent's employment that is includible his or her estate (under section 2039) that passes to the nonparticipant spouse is treated as a deductible marital transfer under the qualified terminable interest property ("QTIP") rules unless the executor of the decedent's estate elects otherwise (sec. 2056(b)(7)(C)). Thus, in noncommunity property States, no estate tax generally is imposed on such survivor annuity interests in the non-surviving spouse's estate. In contrast, an interest of the nonparticipant spouse arising under community property laws in an annuity derived from the employment of his or her spouse is includible in his or her estate under section 2033 and, therefore, may not qualify as a deductible transfer to his or her surviving spouse under the QTIP rules.

House bill

The House bill clarifies that the marital deduction is available with respect to a nonparticipant spouse's interest in an annuity attributable to community property laws where he or she predeceases the participant spouse. Under the House bill, the nonparticipant spouse's interest in an annuity arising under the community property laws of a State that passes to the surviving participant spouse may qualify for treatment as QTIP under section 2056(b)(7).

Effective date.—The provision applies to decedents dying, or waivers, transfers and disclaimers made, after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

11. TREATMENT UNDER QUALIFIED DOMESTIC TRUST RULES OF FORMS OF OWNERSHIP WHICH ARE NOT TRUSTS (SEC. 14621 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A marital deduction generally is allowed for estate and gift tax purposes for the value of property passing to a spouse. The marital deduction is not available for property passing to an alien spouse outside a qualified domestic trust ("QDT"). An estate tax generally is imposed on corpus distributions from a QDT.

Trusts are not permitted in some countries (e.g., many civil law countries). As a result, it is not possible to create a QDT in those countries.

House bill

The House bill provides the Treasury Department with regulatory authority to treat as trusts legal arrangements that have substantially the same effect as a trust. It is anticipated that such regulations, if any, would only permit a marital deduction with respect to non-trust arrangements under which the U.S. would retain jurisdiction and adequate security to impose U.S. transfer tax on transfers by the surviving spouse of the property transferred by the decedent.

Effective date.—The provision applies to decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

12. AUTHORITY TO WAIVE REQUIREMENT OF UNITED STATES TRUSTEE FOR QUALIFIED DOMESTIC TRUSTS (SEC. 14622 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

In order for a trust to be a QDT, a U.S. trustee must have the power to approve all corpus distributions from the trust. In some countries, trusts may be prohibited from having a U.S. trustee (e.g., some countries do not allow real property to be placed in trust if a U.S. trustee must approve distributions from the trust.) As a result, such trusts cannot qualify as a QDT.

House bill

In order to permit the establishment of a QDT in those situations where a country prohibits a trust from having a U.S. trustee, the House bill provides the Treasury Department with regulatory authority to waive the requirement that a QDT have a U.S. trustee. It is anticipated that such regulations, if any, provide an alternative mechanism under which the U.S. would retain jurisdiction and adequate security to impose U.S. transfer tax on transfers by the surviving spouse of the property transferred by the decedent.

Effective date.—The provision applies to decedents dying after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

C. GENERATION-SKIPPING TAX PROVISIONS

1. SEVERING OF TRUSTS HOLDING PROPERTY HAVING AN INCLUSION RATIO OF GREATER THAN ZERO (SEC. 14631 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A generation-skipping transfer tax ("GST" tax) generally is imposed on transfers to an individual who is in more than one generation below that of the transferor. An exemption of $1 million is provided for each person making generation-skipping transfers. The transferor (or his or her executor) may allocate the exemption to transferred property. If the value of the transferred property exceeds the amount of the GST exemption allocated to that property, an "inclusion ratio" and an "exclusion ratio" are determined with respect to the property. The exclusion ratio is equal to the amount of the GST exemption allocated to the property divided by the value of the property. The inclusion ration is equal to one minus the exclusion ratio. For any taxable event that occurs with respect to the property, the amount of GST tax generally is determined by multiplying highest estate tax rate by the inclusion ratio and the value of the taxable property at the time of the taxable event.

House bill

If a trust with an inclusion ratio of greater than zero is severed into two separate trusts, the bill allows the trustee to elect to treat one of the separate trusts as having an inclusion ratio of zero and the other separate trust as having an inclusion ratio of one. To qualify for this treatment, the separate trust with the inclusion ratio of one must receive an interest in each property held by the single trust (prior to severance) equal to the single trust's inclusion ratio, except to the extent otherwise provided by Treasury regulation. The remaining interests in each property will be transferred to the separate trust with the inclusion ratio of zero.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for severances of trusts occurring after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

2. CLARIFICATION OF WHO IS TRANSFEROR WHERE SUBSEQUENT GIFT BY REASON OF POWER OF APPOINTMENT (SEC. 14632 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The exercise or release of a general power of appointment (e.g., a power of withdrawal) generally is treated as a transfer of property by the person who possesses such power (sec. 2514(b)). Under section 2514(e), the lapse of a general power of appointment also is treated as a taxable transfer except to the extent that the power does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or five percent of the fair market value of the property with respect to which the power could have been exercised.

House bill

The House bill clarifies that an individual cannot be treated as a "transferor" with respect to any portion of property with respect to which another person is treated as the "transferor" by reason of the exercise, release or lapse of a general power of appointment with respect to such property.

Effective date.—The provision applies to the exercise, release or lapse of a general power of appointment occurring after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision, because the conferees believe that the House provision reflects present law.

3. TAXABLE TERMINATION NOT TO INCLUDE DIRECT SKIPS (SEC. 14633 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A generation-skipping transfer tax ("GST" tax) generally is imposed on transfers to an individual who is in more than one generation below that of the transferor. Transfers subject to the GST tax include direct skips, taxable terminations and taxable distributions. For this purpose, a direct skip is any transfer subject to estate or gift tax of an interest in property to a skip person (sec. 2612(c)(1)). A taxable termination is a termination (by death, lapse of time, release of power, or otherwise) of an interest in property held in trust unless, immediately after such termination, a non-skip person has an interest in the property, or unless at no time after the termination may a distribution (including a distribution upon termination) be made from the trust to a skip person (sec. 2612(a)). A taxable distribution is a distribution from a trust to a skip person (other than a taxable termination or a direct skip)(sec. 2612(b)).

Direct skips are subject to less GST tax than taxable terminations and distributions since the GST tax on direct skips is paid by the transferor (sec. 2603(a)(3)) and, therefore, the tax base for a direct skip is tax exclusive (like the Federal gift tax), while the GST tax on taxable terminations and distributions is paid by the trust or beneficiary (secs. 2603(a)(1) & (2)) and, therefore, the tax base on taxable terminations and distributions is tax inclusive (like the Federal estate tax).

House bill

The House bill provides that, when a transfer is described as both a direct skip and a taxable termination, the transaction will be treated as a direct skip (i.e., treatment as a direct skip takes precedence over treatment as a taxable termination).

Effective date.—Effective for generation skipping transfers occurring after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

XVII. EXCISE TAX SIMPLIFICATION PROVISIONS

A. PROVISIONS RELATING TO DISTILLED SPIRITS, WINES, AND BEER (SECS. 14701-14711 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Credit or refund for imported distilled spirits returned bonded premises.—When tax-paid distilled spirits which have been withdrawn from bonded premises of a distilled spirits plant are returned for destruction or redistilling, the excise tax is refunded. This provision does not apply to imported bottled distilled spirits because they are withdrawn from customs custody and not from bonded premises of a distilled spirits plant.

Authority to cancel or credit bonds without submission of records.—Bond generally must be furnished to the Treasury Department when distilled spirits are removed from bonded premises of a distilled spirits plant for exportation without payment of tax. These bonds are canceled or credited when evidence is submitted to the Treasury that the distilled spirits have been exported.

Required maintenance of records on premises of distilled spirits plant.—Distilled spirits plant proprietors are required to maintain records of their production, storage, denaturation, and other processing activities on the premises where the operations covered by the records are carried out.

Transfers from breweries to distilled spirits plants.—Under present law, beer may be transferred without payment of tax from a brewery to a distilled spirits plant to be used in the production of distilled spirits, but only if the brewery is contiguous to the distilled spirits plant.

Requirement that wholesale dealers in liquors post sign.—Wholesale liquor dealers (i.e., dealers, other than wholesale dealers in beer alone) are required to post a sign conspicuously on the outside of their place of business indicating that they are wholesale liquor dealers.

Refund of tax on wine returned to bond.—When unmerchantable wine is returned to bonded production premises, tax that has been paid is returned or credited to the proprietor of the bonded wine cellar to which the wine is delivered.

Use of ameliorating material in certain wines.—Tax law rules govern the extent to which ameliorating material (e.g., sugar) may be added to wines made from high acid fruits and the product still be labeled as a standard, natural wine.

Domestically produced beer for use by foreign embassies, etc.—Distilled spirits, wine, and imported beer may be removed from bond, without payment of tax, for transfer to any customs bonded warehouse for storage pending removal for the official or family use of representatives of foreign governments or public international organizations. No such provision exists under present law for domestically produced beer.

Withdrawal of beer for destruction.—Present law does not specifically permit beer to be removed from a brewery for destruction without payment of tax.

Records of exportation of beer.—Present law provides that a brewer is allowed a refund of tax paid on exported beer upon submission to Treasury Department of certain records indicating that the beer has been exported.

Transfer to brewery of beer imported in bulk.—Imported beer brought into the United States in bulk containers may not be transferred from customs custody to brewery premises without payment of tax. Under certain circumstances, distilled spirits imported into the United States in bulk containers may be transferred from customs custody to bonded premises of a distilled spirits plant where bottling will occur without payment of tax.

House bill

Credit or refund for imported bottled distilled spirits returned to bonded premises.—The House bill conforms the procedures for refunds of tax collected on imported bottled distilled spirits returned to bonded premises to the rules for domestically produced and imported bulk distilled spirits.

Authority to cancel or credit bonds without submission of records.—The House bill authorizes the Treasury Department to permit records of exportation to be maintained by the exporter, rather than requiring submission of proof of exportation to Treasury in all cases.

Repeal of required maintenance of records on premises of distilled spirits plant.—The House bill permits distilled spirits plant proprietors to maintain records of their activities at locations other than the premises where the operations covered by the records are carried out (e.g., corporate headquarters) provided that the records are available for inspection by the Treasury Department during business hours.

Fermented material from any brewery may be received at a distilled spirits plant.—The House bill allows beer to be transferred without payment of tax from a brewery to a distilled spirits plant to be used in the production of distilled spirits, regardless of whether the brewery is contiguous to the distilled spirits plant.

Repeal of requirement that wholesale dealers in liquors post sign.—The House bill repeals the requirement that wholesale liquor dealers post a sign outside their place of business indicating that they are wholesale liquor dealers.

Refund of tax on wine returned to bond not limited to unmerchantable wine.—The House bill repeals the requirement that wine returned to bonded premises be "unmerchantable" in order for tax to be refunded to the proprietor of the bonded wine cellar to which the wine is delivered.

Use of additional ameliorating material in certain wines.—The House bill modifies the wine labeling restrictions to allow any wine made exclusively from a fruit or berry with a natural fixed acid or made exclusively from a fruit or berry with a natural fixed acid of 20 parts per thousand or more (before any correction of such fruit or berry) to contain a volume of ameliorating material not in excess of 60 percent.

Domestically produced beer may be withdrawn free of tax for use by foreign embassies, etc.—The House bill extends to domestically produced beer the present-law rule which permits other alcoholic beverages to be withdrawn from the place of production without payment of tax for the official or family use of representatives of foreign governments or public international organizations.

Beer may be withdrawn free of tax for destruction.—The House bill permits beer to be removed from a brewery without payment of tax for destruction, subject to Treasury Department regulations.

Authority to allow drawback on exported beer without submission of records.—The House bill repeals the present-law requirement that proof of exportation be submitted to the Treasury Department in all cases as a condition of receiving a refund of tax.

Transfer to brewery of beer imported in bulk without payment of tax.—The House bill extends the present-law rule applicable to distilled spirits imported into the United States in bulk containers to beer imported into the United States in bulk containers.

Effective date.—Beginning 180 days after date of enactment. (The provision deleting the requirement that wholesale liquor dealers post a sign outside their place of business is effective on the date of the bill's enactment.)

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with a modification deleting the following provisions:

(1) Authority for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms ("BATF") to cancel or credit bonds without submission of records;

(2) Repeal of required maintenance of records on premises of distilled spirits plant;

(3) Repeal of requirement that wholesale dealers in liquors post sign;

(4) Relaxation of rules on use of ameliorating material in certain wines;

(5) Provision allowing domestically produced beer to be withdrawn free of tax for use by foreign embassies; and

(6) Authority for BATF to allow drawback on exported beer without submission of records.

B. CONSOLIDATION OF TAXES ON AVIATION GASOLINE (SEC. 14721 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Gasoline used in noncommercial (not for hire) aviation is subject to a 19.4-cents-per-gallon excise tax. 18.4 cents per gallon of this tax is collected when the gasoline is removed from a pipeline or barge terminal. The remaining 1 cent per gallon is imposed at the retail level.

House bill

The House bill consolidates imposition of the aviation gasoline excise tax, with the entire 19.4-cents-per-gallon rate being imposed when the gasoline is removed from a terminal facility.

Effective date.—Sales or uses beginning on or after January 1, 1996.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

C. OTHER EXCISE TAX PROVISIONS

1. AUTHORITY TO GRANT EXEMPTIONS FROM EXCISE TAX REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS (SEC. 14731 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Certain sales for exempt use of articles subject to Federal excise taxes may not be made without payment of tax unless the manufacturer, the first purchaser, and the second purchaser (if any), are all registered under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Treasury.

House bill

The House bill allows the IRS to provide exemptions from generally applicable excise tax registration requirements for certain classes of taxpayers (rather than only all taxpayers or individually identified taxpayers).

Effective date.—Sales occurring after 180 days after date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

2. CERTAIN COMBINATIONS NOT TREATED AS MANUFACTURE UNDER RETAIL SALES TAX ON HEAVY TRUCKS (SEC. 14732 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A 12-percent excise tax is imposed on the sale of trucks, tractors, and trailers having a gross vehicle weight in excess of specified amounts. The tax is imposed on the first retail sale of a taxable vehicle or addition thereto.

Generally, repairs of used vehicles are treated as remanufacture (giving rise to tax on the entire vehicle) if certain tests are met.

The mere addition of a fifth wheel to a taxable truck is not treated as remanufacture, although the fifth wheel itself would be taxed.

House bill

The House bill clarifies that the following activities do not constitute remanufacture when performed on a used truck or tractor chassis:

(1) removal of a fifth wheel and addition of a power take-off, hoist, and dump body; or

(2) simple addition of a power take-off, hoist, and dump body.

These activities will remain taxable to the extent of the modifications made.

Effective date.—Date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

3. REPEAL OF EXPIRED EXCISE TAX PROVISIONS (SEC. 14734 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Temporary reduction in tax on piggyback trailers

Piggyback trailers and semitrailers sold within the one-year period beginning on July 18, 1984, were permitted a temporary reduction in the retail excise tax rate on trailers.

Expiration of excise tax on deep seabed minerals

The Deep Seabed Mineral Resources Act (Public Law 96-283) imposed an excise tax on certain hard minerals mined on the deep seabed. The tax revenues were intended to fund obligations of the United States under a contemplated Law of the Sea Convention. Because the United States did not sign the treaty, this excise tax never became effective and the tax expired after June 28, 1990.

House bill

The House bill repeals the expired tax reduction for piggy back trailers and the excise tax on deep seabed hard minerals as "deadwood."

Effective date.—Date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

XVIII. ADMINISTRATIVE SIMPLIFICATION PROVISIONS

A. GENERAL PROVISIONS

1. REPEAL OF AUTHORITY TO DISCLOSE WHETHER A PROSPECTIVE JUROR HAS BEEN AUDITED (SEC. 14801 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

In connection with a civil or criminal tax proceeding to which the United States is a party, the Secretary must disclose, upon the written request of either party to the lawsuit, whether an individual who is a prospective juror has or has not been the subject of an audit or other tax investigation by the Internal Revenue Service (sec. 6103(h)(5)).

House bill

The House bill repeals the requirement that the Secretary disclose, upon the written request of either party to the lawsuit, whether an individual who is a prospective juror has or has not been the subject of an audit or other tax investigation by the Internal Revenue Service.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for judicial proceedings pending on, or commenced after, the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

2. CLARIFICATION OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS (SEC. 14802 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Passthrough entities (such as S corporations, partnerships, and certain trusts) generally are not subject to income tax on their taxable income. Instead, these entities file information returns and the entities' shareholders (or beneficial owners) report their pro rata share of the gross income and are liable for any taxes due.

Some believe that, prior to 1993, it may have been unclear as to whether the statute of limitations for adjustments that arise from distributions from passthrough entities should be applied at the entity or individual level (i.e., whether the 3-year statute of limitations for assessments runs from the time that the entity files its information return or from the time that a shareholder timely files his or her income tax return). In 1993, the Supreme Court held that the limitations period for assessing the income tax liability of an S corporation shareholder runs from the date the shareholder's return is filed (Bufferd v. Comm., 113 S. Ct. 927 (1993)).

House bill

The House bill clarifies that the return that starts the running of the statute of limitations for a taxpayer is the return of the taxpayer and not the return of another person from whom the taxpayer has received an item of income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

3. CERTAIN NOTICES DISREGARDED UNDER PROVISION INCREASING INTEREST RATE ON LARGE CORPORATE UNDERPAYMENTS (SEC. 14803 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The interest rate on a large corporate underpayment of tax is the Federal short-term rate plus five percentage points. A large corporate underpayment is any underpayment by a subchapter C corporation of any tax imposed for any taxable period, if the amount of such underpayment for such period exceeds $100,000. The large corporate underpayment rate generally applies to periods beginning 30 days after the earlier of the date on which the first letter of proposed deficiency, a statutory notice of deficiency, or a nondeficiency letter or notice of assessment or proposed assessment is sent. For this purpose, a letter or notice is disregarded if the taxpayer makes a payment equal to the amount shown on the letter or notice within that 30-day period.

House bill

For purposes of determining the period to which the large corporate underpayment rate applies, any letter or notice is disregarded if the amount of the deficiency, proposed deficiency, assessment, or proposed assessment set forth in the letter or notice is not greater than $100,000 (determined by not taking into account any interest, penalties, or additions to tax).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for purposes of determining interest for periods after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

4. CLARIFICATION OF AUTHORITY TO WITHHOLD PUERTO RICO INCOME TAXES FROM SALARIES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES (SEC. 14804 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

If State law provides generally for the withholding of State income taxes from the wages of employees in a State, the Secretary of the Treasury shall (upon the request of the State) enter into an agreement with the State providing for the withholding of State income taxes from the wages of Federal employees in the State. For this purpose, a State is a State, territory, or possession of the United States. The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit recently held in Romero v. United States (38 F. 3d 1204 (1994)) that Puerto Rico was not encompassed within this definition; consequently, the court invalidated an agreement between the Secretary of the Treasury and Puerto Rico that provided for the withholding of Puerto Rico income taxes from the wages of Federal employees.

House bill

The House bill makes any Commonwealth eligible to enter into an agreement with the Secretary of the Treasury that would provide for income tax withholding from the wages of Federal employees.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

B. TAX COURT PROCEDURES

1. OVERPAYMENT DETERMINATIONS OF TAX COURT (SEC. 14811 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The Tax Court may order the refund of an overpayment determined by the Court, plus interest, if the IRS fails to refund such overpayment and interest within 120 days after the Court's decision becomes final. Whether such an order is appealable is uncertain.

In addition, it is unclear whether the Tax Court has jurisdiction over the validity or merits of certain credits or offsets (e.g., providing for collection of student loans, child support, etc.) made by the IRS that reduce or eliminate the refund to which the taxpayer was otherwise entitled.

House bill

The House bill clarifies that an order to refund an overpayment is appealable in the same manner as a decision of the Tax Court. The House bill also clarifies that the Tax Court does not have jurisdiction over the validity or merits of the credits or offsets that reduce or eliminate the refund to which the taxpayer was otherwise entitled.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

2. AWARDING OF ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS (SEC. 14812 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Any person who substantially prevails in any action brought by or against the United States in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax, interest, or penalty may be awarded reasonable administrative costs incurred before the IRS and reasonable litigation costs incurred in connection with any court proceeding.

No time limit is specified for the taxpayer to apply to the IRS for an award of administrative costs. In addition, no time limit is specified for a taxpayer to appeal to the Tax Court an IRS decision denying an award of administrative costs. Finally, the procedural rules for adjudicating a denial of administrative costs are unclear.

House bill

The House bill provides that a taxpayer who seeks an award of administrative costs must apply for such costs within 90 days of the date on which the taxpayer was determined to be a prevailing party. The House bill also provides that a taxpayer who seeks to appeal an IRS denial of an administrative cost award must petition the Tax Court within 90 days after the date that the IRS mails the denial notice.

The House bill clarifies that dispositions by the Tax Court of petitions relating only to administrative costs are to be reviewed in the same manner as other decisions of the Tax Court.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

3. REDETERMINATION OF INTEREST PURSUANT TO MOTION (SEC. 14813 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

A taxpayer may seek a redetermination of interest after certain decisions of the Tax Court have become final by filing a petition with the Tax Court.

House bill

The House bill provides that a taxpayer must file a "motion" (rather than a "petition") to seek a redetermination of interest in the Tax Court.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

4. APPLICATION OF NET WORTH REQUIREMENT FOR AWARDS OF LITIGATION COSTS (SEC. 14814 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

Any person who substantially prevails in any action brought by or against the United States in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax, interest, or penalty may be awarded reasonable administrative costs incurred before the IRS and reasonable litigation costs incurred in connection with any court proceeding. A person who substantially prevails must meet certain net worth requirements to be eligible for an award of administrative or litigation costs. In general, only an individual whose net worth does not exceed $2,000,000 is eligible for an award, and only a corporation or partnership whose net worth does not exceed $7,000,000 is eligible for an award. (The net worth determination with respect to a partnership or S corporation applies to all actions that are in substance partnership actions or S corporation actions, including unified entity-level proceedings under sections 6226 or 6228, that are nominally brought in the name of a partner or a shareholder.)

House bill

The House bill provides that the net worth limitations currently applicable to individuals also apply to estates and trusts. The House bill also provides that individuals who file a joint tax return shall be treated as one individual for purposes of computing the net worth limitations. Consequently, the net worths of both spouses are aggregated for purposes of this computation. An exception to this rule is provided in the case of a spouse otherwise qualifying for innocent spouse relief.

Effective date.—The provision applies to proceedings commenced after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

C. AUTHORITY FOR COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS WITH STATE TAX AUTHORITIES (SEC. 14821 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

The IRS is generally not authorized to provide services to non-Federal agencies even if the cost is reimbursed (62 Comp. Gen. 323, 335 (1983)).

House bill

The House bill provides that the Secretary is authorized to enter into cooperative agreements with State tax authorities to enhance joint tax administration. These agreements may include (1) joint filing of Federal and State income tax returns, (2) single processing of these returns, and (3) joint collection of taxes (other than Federal income taxes).

The House bill provides that these agreements may require reimbursement for services provided by either party to the agreement. Any funds appropriated for tax administration may be used to carry out the responsibilities of the IRS under these agreements, and any reimbursement received under an agreement would be credited to the amount appropriated.

No agreement may be entered into that does not provide for the protection of confidentiality of taxpayer information that is required by section 6103.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

XIX. PUBLIC DEBT PROVISIONS

1. PUBLIC DEBT REDUCTION TRUST FUND (SECS. 6341 AND 6343 OF H.R. 1215)

Present law

The Presidential Election Campaign Fund ("Campaign Fund") provides for public financing of a portion of qualified Presidential election campaign expenditures and certain convention costs (sec. 9001 et seq.) The Campaign Fund is financed through the voluntary designation by individual taxpayers on their Federal income tax returns of $3 of tax liability, which is commonly known as the Presidential election campaign checkoff (sec. 6096). This checkoff can be made only by individuals (not corporations) and does not affect the individual's tax liability. The Treasury Department accumulates revenues in the Campaign Fund over a four-year period and then disburses funds to eligible candidates for President, Vice President, and conventions during the Presidential election year.

Individuals who itemize deductions (as well as corporations) are allowed a deduction, subject to certain limitations, for contributions made to qualified charitable organizations or to Federal, State, and local governments. Instructions to IRS income tax forms inform taxpayers that they may make a gift to the Federal Government to reduce the public debt by enclosing with their return a separate check made payable to the "Bureau of Public Debt." In addition, various public laws provide that contributions to specific Federal entities or programs are regarded as gifts to the United States. Such contributions to the Bureau of Public Debt and to specific Federal entities or programs are deductible if the donor itemizes deductions for the year in which the contribution is made.

Under the House bill, individual taxpayers will be allowed to designate an amount up to 10 percent of their Federal income tax liability for a taxable year to be earmarked to reduce the Federal public debt. Such a designation may be made only at the time the taxpayer files his or her income tax return for a particular taxable year. An individual's decision whether or not to make a designation under the provision will not affect his or her tax liability. If an individual has no Federal income tax liability for a taxable year—i.e., the individual owes no Federal income tax after claiming allowable credits (other than the EITC) and any designation to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund—then such individual will not be allowed to make a designation to reduce the Federal debt on his or her return for that year.

Under the House bill, amounts earmarked by taxpayers to reduce the public debt will be transferred into a Public Debt Reduction Trust Fund, which will be used only to retire or purchase Federal securities (other than obligations held by the Social Security Trust Fund, the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund, and the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund). Related provisions (contained in another section of the House bill) require either specific spending cuts or an across-the-board sequestration in Federal spending (with certain exceptions) to match the amounts designated by taxpayers for debt reduction.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years ending after the date of enactment, and will remain in effect until the entire outstanding Federal public debt is retired.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

2. INCREASE IN THE PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT (SEC. 13801 OF THE HOUSE BILL AND SEC. 7471 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

Present law

The statutory limit on the public debt currently is $4.9 trillion.

House bill

The House bill increases the statutory limit on the public debt to $5.5 trillion.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

XX. ADJUSTMENT TO CONTRACT WITH AMERICA TAX RELIEF ACT (SEC. 19002 OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

In order to bring the budget reconciliation bill into compliance with the budget resolution, the House bill generally provides various adjustments to the provisions of the Contract with America Tax Relief Act of 1995. (Title VI of H.R. 1215, as passed by the House, with certain modifications, and incorporated in the House bill by reference.)

In general, the effects of the changes in income and estate tax liability occurring as a result of the provisions of the Contract With America Tax Relief Act would be changed by 27 percent, with the following exceptions.

In the case of capital gains, the benefit of the corporate rate reduction on, and the individual deduction for, capital gain income would be reduced by 15 percent for 1995 and by 31 percent for 1996 and thereafter. In the case of the indexing of the basis of capital assets, the adjustment to basis would be reduced by 31 percent for 1996 and thereafter.

In the case of American Dream Savings accounts, taxpayers would be entitled to 69 percent of the benefits of the American Dream Savings accounts to which they otherwise are entitled.

In the case of the alternative minimum tax, after 1994, depreciation would no longer be treated as a preference item in the case of individuals and the alternative minimum tax rate applicable to corporations would be zero. The effects of this modification would be suspended for taxable years beginning in 1995 and 1996. Thus, for the first three taxable years beginning after 1996, taxpayers would be entitled to a refund equal to 1/3 of the amount of minimum tax paid by corporations and the amount of minimum tax liability attributable to depreciation in the case of individual taxpayers for taxable year beginning in 1995 and 1996.

The provisions relating to neutral cost recovery would be deleted.

Effective date.—Date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

XXI. TRADE PROVISIONS

A. TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS AND MISCELLANEOUS TRADE PROVISIONS

Present law

1. Section 642(c) of the Customs Modernization Act provides for interest accrual on entries from the date of deposit to the date of liquidation or reliquidation. Under this authority, interest is collected or refunded, as appropriate. Section 642 of the Customs Modernization Act does not include an effective date.

2a. Section 509(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides the U.S. Customs Service the authority to examine books and summon witnesses in its investigations and inquiries.

2b. Section 7 of the Tariff Act of 1930 requires certificates of importation for alcoholic beverages on small vessels.

2c. Section 434 of the Tariff Act of 1930 requires every vessel entering the U.S. to present a manifest in compliance with Customs regulations.

2d. Section 484(a)(1) of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides requirements for the entry of merchandise.

2e. Section 592 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides rules for the imposition of penalties for fraud, negligence, and gross negligence.

2f. Section 592(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides for the restoration of lawful duties if the U.S. has been deprived of such in the event of a violation.

2g. Section 401 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides miscellaneous definitions and section 508 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides the requirements, time periods and limitations for recordkeeping related to importing.

2h. Section 504 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides for limitations on liquidation of entries.

2i. Section 321(a)(2)(B) of the Tariff Act of 1930 originally applied to returning residents arriving from foreign countries other than the insular possessions but, due to a split in tariff classification numbers, the tariff numbers applicable to returning residents arriving from a foreign country were inadvertently dropped.

2j. Section 631(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides for the use of private collection agencies to recover indebtedness arising under the customs laws and owed to the U.S.

2k. Section 509 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides Customs with the authority to examine books and summon witnesses in its investigations and inquiries.

2l. Section 515 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides for reviews of protests, administrative review, modifications of decisions, and requests for accelerated dispositions.

3. Section 111(b) of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 provides that, in the case of agricultural products of the United States processed and packed in foreign trade zones, the ad valorem merchandise processing fee (MPF) shall be applied solely to the value of the foreign material used to make the container; it exempts the value of the domestic agricultural products from the MPF. The U.S. Customs Service has ruled that, for all products not covered by this provision and in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, the MPF would be assessed on both the domestic and foreign value of the merchandise entering from foreign trade zones.

4. Subsection (b) of section 484H of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 provides for the transportation in bond of Canadian lottery material.

5. Section 213(h) of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (CBERA) and section 204(c)(1) of the Andean Trade Preference Act (ATPA) provide for duty reductions on certain handbags, luggage, flat goods, work gloves, and leather wearing apparel.

6. Section 13031(b)(9)(A) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (COBRA) authorizes the Customs Service to provide reimbursable services to air couriers operating in express consignment carrier facilities and in centralized hub facilities. Customs has interpreted the present statute to prevent Customs from providing reimbursable services to centralized hub facilities during daytime hours.

7. Section 313(r) of the Tariff Act of 1930 requires that a drawback entry and all documents necessary to complete a drawback claim, including those issued by the Customs Service, shall be filed or applied for, as applicable, within three years after the date of exportation or destruction of the articles on which a drawback is claimed. Customs has no discretion to extend the deadline.

8. Sections 514 and 520 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provide for protests against decisions of the Customs Service, and refunds and errors, respectively.

9. Subchapter II of chapter 99 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States provides for temporary reductions in rates of duty. Heading 9902.98.04 provides for the duty-free entry of the personal effects, equipment and other materials of participants in, officials of, or accredited members of delegations to world athletic events including the XXVI Summer Olympiad and the 1996 Atlanta Paralympic Games.

10a. Section 313(s)(2)(B) of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides that a drawback successor may designate imported merchandise or certain other merchandise for which the successor received, before the date of succession, from the person who imported and paid any duty due on the imported merchandise, a certificate of delivery transferring the merchandise to the successor.

10b. Section 301(c)(4) of the Trade Act of 1974 provides the authority for the United States Trade Representative to carry out mandatory and discretionary trade actions under section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974.

11. Section 405(b) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act provides the authority for the President to impose a duty with respect to a special safeguard agricultural good.

12. General Note 6 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States provides guidelines for those articles eligible for duty-free treatment pursuant to the Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft.

13. Section 484E(b)(2)(B) of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 provides for a temporary exemption from duties imposed on the foreign repair of vessels.

14. Section 13031(b) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 provides for limitations on the collection of fees for Customs services.

15. Subheading 2933.90.02 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States provides for the entry of heterocyclic compounds with nitrogen hetero-atom(s) only; nucleic acids and their salts.

16. Section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930 requires that, with certain exceptions, every article of foreign origin imported into the United States, or its container, must be marked with the country of origin of the article.

17. Section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, outlines rules for protest against decisions of the Customs Service.

18. The Uruguay Round Agreements Act amended section 310 of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended by the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, to extend a revised "Super 301" procedure to review trade expansion priorities and identify priority foreign practices for the year 1995.

House Bill

1. Section 12001 of the House bill amends section 505(c) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide an exemption for interest accrual on duty paid or owed where an entry is liquidated or reliquidated due to an importer's claim for preference tariff treatment under the NAFTA. Further, the House bill amends section 642 to provide that this section is effective for claims made on or after April 25, 1995.

2a. Section 12002(a) amends section 509(a)(2) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to make a technical correction to a citation.

2b. Section 12002(b) repeals section 7 of the Tariff Act of 1930, which is an obsolete statute.

2c. Section 12002(c) amends section 431(c)(1) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to clarify that section 434 refers to vessel manifests and does not include any other types of manifests.

2d. Section 12002(d) amends section 484(a)(1) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to delete an obsolete statutory reference regarding the requirements for the entry of merchandise.

2e. Section 12002(e) amends section 592 of the Tariff Act of 1930 to replace references to "lawful duties" with "lawful duties, fees and taxes," as appropriate in order to recognize that Customs collects fees and taxes, as well as duties.

2f. Section 12002(f) amends section 592(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to require the restoration of duties, fees, and taxes if the U.S. was deprived of any duties, fees, or taxes.

2g. Section 12002(g) amends sections 401(s) and 508(c)(1) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to clarify that a reconciliation should be treated as an entry for purposes of recordkeeping laws. Thus, records pertaining to reconciliation should be retained for a period of five years from the date of filing of the reconciliation.

2h. Section 12002(h) amends section 504(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to ensure that an entry whose liquidation is suspended is not liquidated when the suspension is removed where an extension of liquidation is issued.

2i. Section 12002(i) amends section 321(a)(2)(B) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to allow Customs to apply administrative exemptions to returning residents arriving from foreign countries other than insular possessions.

2j. Section 12002(j) amends section 631(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to clarify that compensation paid to debt collection agencies applies to debts owed to Customs.

2k. Section 12002(k) amends section 509(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to delete "appropriate regional commissioner" and substitute "officer designated pursuant to regulations."

2l. Section 12002(l) amends section 515(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to delete "district director" and substitute "port director."

3. Section 12003 amends section 111(b) of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 and section 13031(b)(8) of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1985 to clarify that the MPF is to be applied only to the foreign value of merchandise entered from a foreign trade zone. Further, the House bill provides that the provision made by section 111(b)(2)(D)(iv) of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 regarding the application of the MPF to processed agricultural products will also apply to all entries for which liquidation has not been finalized from foreign trade zones.

4. Section 12004 amends subsection (b) of section 484H of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 to replace the phrase "entered or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption" in the "Effective Date" section with "entered for transportation in bond." This is necessary to clarify that Canadian lottery material is not entered into the U.S. for consumption.

5. Section 12005 amends section 213(h)(1) of the CBERA and 204(c)(1) of the ATPA to clarify that, effective 15 days after the date of enactment, the duty reductions specified in these sections do not apply to such articles made of textiles and subject to textile agreements.

6. Section 12006 amends section 13031(b)(9)(A) of the COBRA to clarify that Customs may provide daytime reimbursable services to centralized hub facilities during daytime hours. The provision also clarifies that Customs may be reimbursed for all services related to the determination to release cargo, and not just "inspectional" services. These services are reimbursable regardless of whether or not they are performed on site.

7. Section 12007 amends section 313(r) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to permit a one-year extension for filing drawback claims in cases where the President has declared a major disaster on or after January 1, 1994, and the claimant files a request for such extension with the Customs Service within one year from the date the claim is filed.

8. Section 12008 provides for the liquidation or reliquidation of certain entries in accordance with an administrative review by the International Trade Administration. The bill provides that any amounts owed by the United States pursuant to the liquidation or reliquidation of these entries shall be paid within 90 days after such liquidation or reliquidation.

9. Section 12009 adds subheading 9902.98.05 to provide for the duty-free entry of the personal effects, equipment and other materials of participants in, officials of, or accredited members of delegations to the 1998 Goodwill Games.

10. Section 12010 amends 313(s)(2)(B) of the Tariff Act of 1930 and section 301(c)(4) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2411(c)(4)) to make technical corrections to language in the provisions.

11. Section 12011 amends section 405(b) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act to make a technical correction to a citation.

12. Section 12012 amends General Note 6 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States to allow for the electronic filing of civil aircraft parts certifications.

13. Section 12013 amends section 484E(b)(2)(B) of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 to extend the temporary exemption for those entries made after December 31, 1992 and before January 1, 1995.

14. Section 12014 amends section 13031(b) of the COBRA to clarify the application of section 521 of the North American Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act to provide for the collection of fees only one time in the course of a single voyage for a passenger aboard a commercial vessel.

15. Section 12015 amends subheading 2933.90.02 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States to strike Quizalofop-ethyl.

16. Section 12016 amends section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930 to exempt certain metal forgings for hand tools, coffee products, teas and spices from country of origin marking requirements.

17. Section 12017 instructs the Customs Service to treat the re-entry of a single entry of four warp-knitting machines from Venezuela as a duty-free entry, and to refund any duties, with interest, which the company has paid as a result of the improper classification.

18. Section 12018 extends Super 301 (section 310 of the Trade Act of 1974), in its revised form, through the year 2000.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The House recedes.

B. GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES

1. BASIC AUTHORITY (SEC. 501)

Present law

Title V of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended, (Generalized System of Preferences) grants authority to the President to provide duty-free treatment on imports of eligible articles from designated beneficiary developing countries (BDCs), subject to certain conditions and limitations. Section 505(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 provides that no duty-free treatment under Title V shall remain in effect after July 31, 1995.

House bill

The House bill amends section 505(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 to authorize an extension through December 31, 1997. It also provides that, notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, the entry a) of any article to which duty-free treatment under title V of the Trade Act of 1974 would have applied if the entry had been made on July 31, 1995, and b) that was made after July 31, 1995, and before the enactment of this Act, shall be liquidated or reliquidated as free of duty and the Secretary of Treasury shall refund any duty paid, upon proper request filed with the appropriate customs officer, within 180 days after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes, with an amendment to authorize an extension of the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) through December 31, 1996.

2. DESIGNATION OF BENEFICIARY DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Present law

Section 502 sets forth both the procedures for designating countries as Beneficiary Developing Countries (BDCs) and the conditions of such designation. This section establishes conditions for designation which are mandatory and others which are discretionary. With regard to mandatory conditions, the President is prohibited from designating any country for GSP benefits which is a developed country listed in 502(b).

House bill

The House bill amends the definition of country to include "any territory" and deletes the reference in 502(b) to Austria, Finland, and Sweden which are now European Union Member states.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes.

3. MANDATORY CONDITIONS

Present Law

Under section 502(c) the President is prohibited from designating as a BDC a country which:

(1) is a Communist country, unless (a) its products receive non-discriminatory most-favored-nation (MFN) treatment, (b) it is a GATT Contracting Party and a member of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), and (c) it is not dominated or controlled by international communism;

(2) is an OPEC member, or a party to another arrangement, and participates in an action the effect of which is to withhold supplies of vital commodity resources from international trade or raise their price to an unreasonable level and to cause disruption of the world economy, subject to trade agreement exemptions consistent with objectives under the Trade Act of 1974;

(3) affords "reverse preferences" having or likely to have a significant adverse effect on U.S. commerce, unless the President receives satisfactory assurances of elimination before January 1, 1976;

(4) has nationalized or expropriated U.S. property, or taken similar actions, unless compensation is made, being negotiated, or in arbitration;

(5) fails to recognize as binding or enforce arbitral awards in favor of U.S. citizens;

(6) aids or abets, by granting sanctuary from prosecution to, any individual or group which has committed an act of international terrorism;

(7) has not taken or is not taking steps to afford internationally recognized worker rights to its workers.

House Bill

The House bill retains present law, except, with respect to mandatory conditions: in (1)(b), replace "is a GATT contracting party" with "is a Member of the World Trade Organization."; in (2), delete the reference to OPEC member and the exemption authority; in (3), delete the satisfactory assurances exemption for reverse preferences.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes.

4. DISCRETIONARY CRITERIA

Present law

Under section 502(c) the President must take into account a list of factors in determining whether to designate a country a BDC, including the extent to which the country is providing adequate and effective intellectual property protection.

House bill

The House bill substitutes "whether or not" for "the extent to which" in the intellectual property rights criterion, and clarifies that such protection may not be provided notwithstanding compliance with the Uruguay Round TRIPs Agreement. The bill also adds new discretionary criteria for country designation. In determining whether to designate any country as a beneficiary developing country under this title, the President must take into account the extent to which such country fails to cooperate with the United States in preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons, nuclear weapons components, and nuclear weapons delivery systems and in preventing illegal drug trafficking.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The House recedes.

5. GRADUATION OF BDCS

Present law

Countries are graduated from GSP eligibility if the per capita GNP of any BDC for any year exceeds a dollar limit ($11,800 in 1994), indexed annually under a formula from $8,500 in 1984. When the income level reaches this amount, such country is subject to a 25, rather than 50, percent competitive need import share limit on all eligible articles for up to the following two years. After that time, the country is no longer treated as a BDC.

House bill

Under the House bill, if the President determines that a beneficiary developing country has become a "high income" country as designated by the World Bank (about $8,600 per capita GNP in 1993), the President would be required to remove the country from eligibility under the program. The bill would eliminate the 25 percent competitive need limit during the two-year phase-out period.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes.

6. DESIGNATION OF ELIGIBLE ARTICLES

Present law

Under Section 503 the President may not designate any article as GSP eligible within the following categories of import-sensitive articles:

1. textile and apparel articles which are subject to textile agreements;

2. watches, except watches entered after June 30, 1989 that the President determines will not cause material injury to watch or watch band, strap, or bracelet manufacturing and assembly operations in the United States or U.S. insular possessions;

3. import-sensitive electronic articles;

4. import-sensitive steel articles;

5. footwear, handbags, luggage, flat goods, work gloves, and leather wearing apparel which were not GSP eligible articles on April 1, 1984;

6. import-sensitive semi-manufactured and manufactured glass products; and

7. any other articles the President determines to be import-sensitive in the context of GSP.

House bill

The House bill retains all provisions of present law, except, with respect to changes in the following statutory exemptions: in (1), it replaces the present provision with exemption of textile and apparel articles which were not GSP eligible on January 1, 1994; in (2), it deletes statutory exemption for watches; in (5), it applies exemption to footwear and related articles which were not GSP eligible on January 1, 1995.

The House bill also prohibits consideration of an article for designation of eligibility for three years following formal consideration and denial of that article. Further, the House bill provides specific authority for the President to designate any article that is the growth, product, or manufacture of a least-developed developing country (LDDC) as an eligible article with respect to imports from LDDCs, if the President determines such an article is not import-sensitive in the context of imports from LDDCs. This authority does not apply to statutorily exempt articles. LDDC designations are to be based upon the overall statutory considerations and discretionary designation criteria.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes, with an amendment to preserve the statutory exemption for watches in current law.

7. LIMITS ON PREFERENTIAL AUTHORITY

Present law

Under Section 504 of the Trade Act of 1974, the President may withdraw, suspend, or limit GSP duty-free treatment with respect to any article or any country, after considering the overall GSP and discretionary BDC designation factors. The President shall withdraw or suspend the BDC designation of any country if he determines that, as a result of changed circumstances, the country would be barred from designation.

House bill

The House bill adds a requirement that, except in exceptional circumstances, the President may not take action to withdraw, suspend, or terminate or limit GSP treatment with respect to any country without first providing a period for the submission of public comments.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The House recedes.

8. COMPETITIVE NEED LIMITS

Present law

Whenever the President determines that exports by any BDC to the United States of a GSP eligible article during any year—

1. exceed a dollar limit ($114 million in 1994) based on $25 million adjusted annually relative to changes in the U.S. GNP since 1974, or

2. equal or exceed a 50 percent share of the total value of U.S. imports of the article, then, no later than July 1 of the next year, such country is NOT treated as a BDC with respect to such article.

Not later than January 4, 1987, and periodically thereafter, the President must conduct a general review of eligible articles and, if he determines that a BDC has demonstrated a sufficient degree of competitiveness relative to other BDCs on any eligible article, then a lower competitive need dollar limit ($41.9 million in 1993, indexed annually from 1984 base) and 25 percent total import share limit apply.

House bill

The House bill reduces the basic competitive need limit to $75 million for any year beginning January 1, 1996, and substitutes a standard annual increase of $5 million for the indexing formula in current law. The House bill preserves the 50 percent market share competitive need limit. The House bill deletes the general review requirements and lower limits.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference Agreement

The Senate recedes.

9. AUTHORITY TO WAIVE COMPETITIVE NEED LIMITS

Present law

The President may waive the dollar and import share competitive need limits on any eligible article of any BDC if he (1) receives International Trade Commission (ITC) advice on the likely effect of the waiver; (2) determines, based on the overall GSP and discretionary country designation considerations and the ITC advice, that the waiver is in the U.S. national economic interest; and (3) publishes the determination in the Federal Register.

The import share competitive need limit may be disregarded if total U.S. imports of the eligible article during the preceding year do not exceed a de minimis amount of $5 million adjusted annually ($13.4 million in 1994) according to changes in U.S. GNP since 1979. The import share limit does not apply to any eligible article that was not produced in the United States as of January 3, 1985.

House bill

The House bill retains the present waiver authority and updates January 3, 1985 for no U.S. production to January 1, 1995. The House bill also retains the de minimis import provision, but substitutes $13 million in 1995 and a standard annual increase of $500,000 beginning January 1, 1996 for the indexing formula in current law. Further, the House bill provides for the refund of duties paid on buffalo leather from Thailand during the month of July 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes, with an amendment to strike the refund of duties paid on buffalo leather from Thailand.

10. OTHER PROVISIONS OF CURRENT LAW

Present law

Under section 504(c)(3)(D) of the Trade Act of 1974, the President may not exercise the competitive need waiver authority in any year on imports of eligible articles exceeding:

1. 30 percent of total GSP duty-free imports during the preceding year, or
2. 15 percent of total GSP duty-free imports during the preceding year from BDCs which had (a) a per capita GNP of $5,000 or more, or (b) exported to the United States more than 10 percent of total GSP duty-free imports during that year.

The President may waive competitive need limits in certain cases where there has been a historical preferential trade relationship between the United States and that country.

Appropriate U.S. agencies must assist BDCs to develop policies to assure that their agriculture sectors are not directed to export markets to the detriment of foodstuff production for their citizens.

House bill

The House bill deletes provisions in current law regarding waiver trade limits, historical preferences, and agriculture production.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The House recedes.

C. TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

MODIFICATION OF TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE

Present Law

Title II of the Trade Act of 1974 authorizes Trade Adjustment Assistance (TAA) programs for workers and firms adversely affected by increased imports. Eligibility of workers and firms is certified by the Employment and Training Administration (ETA) of the Department of Labor, and the Economic Development Administration (EDA) of the Department of Commerce, respectively.

Subchapter D of chapter 2 of Title II of the Trade Act of 1974 establishes TAA programs for workers adversely affected by increased imports or production relocation associated with the implementation of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA).

Workers certified by the Secretary of Labor for approved training qualify for Trade Adjustment Allowance (TRA) payments, following their exhaustion of unemployment insurance (UI) benefits, equal to their weekly UI amount for up to 52 weeks of UI and TRA combined. Workers may receive an additional 26 weeks of TRA benefits to complete approved training. Workers must enter training unless a waiver is granted by the Secretary of Labor where it is not feasible or appropriate to approve a training program.

Certified workers under NAFTA-related TAA receive training allowances in the same manner and to the same extent as workers under general TAA. However, certified workers must enroll in a training program within six weeks of certification, and the Secretary of Labor may not waive training requirements. Under both general TAA and NAFTA-related TAA, certified workers may receive job search and relocation allowances.

The "cap" on payments for training under general worker TAA for any fiscal year is $80 million, except for fiscal year 1997, during which the "cap" is $70 million. Under the NAFTA- related programs, the "cap" on payments for training for any fiscal year is $30 million.

Under TAA for firms, the Commerce Department provides eligible firms with technical assistance to prepare and implement economic adjustment plans, or for industry-wide assistance through twelve regional Trade Adjustment Assistance Centers (TAACs).

Appropriations for TAA for workers and TAA for firms are authorized through fiscal year 1998. These programs and NAFTA-related TAA programs terminate after fiscal year 1998.

House bill

Section 12201 of the House bill amends general TAA so that waivers of the training requirement may be granted only where a training program is not available. The effective date for this provision is October 1, 1996. The House bill also eliminates relocation allowances for both general TAA and NAFTA-related TAA eligible workers. The effective date for this provision is October 1, 1996. Lastly, the House bill would extend authorization of appropriations for general TAA for workers and TAA for firms through fiscal year 2000, after which the programs terminate. NAFTA-related TAA is authorized through fiscal year 1998 as under present law. No benefits may be granted under either the general worker TAA programs or TAA for firms after September 30, 2000.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The House recedes.

TITLE XII—TEACHING HOSPITALS AND GRADUATE MEDICAL EDUCATION; ASSET SALES; WELFARE; AND OTHER PROVISIONS

SUBTITLE A—BLOCK GRANTS TO STATES FOR TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES

1. OBJECTIVES

Present law

To provide for the general welfare by...enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for...dependent children... (Social Security Act, 1935)

House bill

To restore the American family, reduce illegitimacy, control welfare spending and reduce welfare dependence.

Senate amendment

To enhance support and work opportunities for families with children, reduce welfare dependence, and control welfare spending.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment as follows: To restore the American family, enhance support and work opportunities for families with children, reduce out-of-wedlock pregnancies, reduce welfare dependence, and control welfare spending.

2. SHORT TITLE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The Personal Responsibility Act of 1995.

Senate amendment

The Work Opportunity Act of 1995.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment as follows: The Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1995.

3. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS ON FAMILIES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

It is the sense of the Congress that marriage is the foundation of a successful society, and an essential social institution which promotes the interests of children and society at large. The negative consequences of an out-of-wedlock birth on the child, the mother, and society are well documented. Yet the nation suffers unprecedented and growing levels of illegitimacy. In light of this crisis, the reduction of out-of-wedlock births is an important government interest and the policy contained in provisions of this title address the crisis.

Senate amendment

Congress finds that marriage is the foundation of a successful society and an essential institution that promotes the interests of children. Promotion of responsible fatherhood and motherhood is integral to successful child-rearing and well-being of children. It is the sense of Congress that prevention of out-of-wedlock pregnancy and reduction in out-of-wedlock birth are very important government interests and that the policy contained in provisions of this title is intended to address the crisis.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

4. GRANTS TO STATES FOR NEEDY FAMILIES

A. PURPOSE

Present law

Title IV-A, which provides grants to States for aid and services to needy families with children (AFDC), is designed to encourage care of dependent children in their own homes by enabling States to provide cash aid and services, maintain and strengthen family life, and help parents attain maximum self-support consistent with maintaining parental care and protection.

House bill

Block grants for temporary assistance for needy families (Title IV-A) are established to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to:

(1) provide assistance to needy families so that children may be cared for in their homes or in the homes of relatives;

(2) end the dependence of needy parents on government benefits by promoting work and marriage; and

(3) discourage out-of-wedlock births.

Senate Amendment

Block grants for temporary assistance for needy families (Title IV-A) are established to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to:

(1) provide assistance to needy families with minor children;

(2) provide job preparation and opportunities for such families; and

(3) prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with a special emphasis on teen pregnancies, and establish annual goals for preventing and reducing these pregnancies for fiscal years 1996 through 2000.

Conference Agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. Eligible States; State Plan

Present Law

A State must have an approved State plan for aid and services to needy families containing 43 provisions, ranging from single-agency administration to overpayment recovery rules. State plans explain the aid and services that are offered by the State. Aid is defined as money payments. For most parents without a child under age 3, States must provide education, work, or training under the JOBS program to help needy families with children avoid long-term welfare dependence. To receive Federal funds, States must share in program costs. The Federal share of costs (matching rate) varies among States and is inversely related to the square of State per capita income. For AFDC benefits and child care, the Medicaid matching rate is used. This rate now ranges from 50 percent to 79 percent among States and averages about 55%. For JOBS activities, the rate averages 60%; for administrative costs, 50%. In fiscal year 1995, 20 percent of employable (nonexempt) adult recipients must participate in education, work, or training under JOBS, and at least one parent in 50 percent of unemployed-parent families must participate at least 16 hours weekly in an unpaid work experience or other work program. States must restrict disclosure of information to purposes directly connected to administration of the program and to any connected investigation, prosecution, legal proceeding or audit. Each State must offer family planning services to all "appropriate" cases, including minors considered sexually active. States may not require acceptance of these services. States must have in effect an approved child support program. States must also have an approved plan for foster care and adoption assistance. States must have an income and verification system (covering AFDC, Medicaid, unemployment compensation, food stamps, and—in outlying areas—adult cash aid) in accordance with Sec. 1137 of the Social Security Act.

House bill

An "eligible State" is a State that, during the 3-year period immediately preceding the fiscal year, had submitted a plan to the Secretary of HHS for approval. The plan must include:

(1) A written document describing how the State will:

a. conduct a program that provides cash benefits to needy families with children, and provides parents with help in preparing for and obtaining employment and becoming self-sufficient;

b. require at least one parent in a family that has received benefits for 24 months to engage in work activities defined by the State;

c. ensure that parents engage in work activities in accord with section 404;

d. treat interstate immigrants, if their benefits differ from State residents;

e. take such reasonable steps as State deems necessary to restrict use and disclosure of information about recipients;

f. take actions to reduce out-of-wedlock pregnancies, including helping unmarried mothers and fathers avoid subsequent pregnancies and provide care for their children; and

g. reduce teen pregnancy, including through the provision of education and counseling to male and female teens.

(2) Certification by the Governor that the State will operate a child support enforcement program.

(3) Certification by the Governor that the State will operate a child protection program, including a foster care and adoption program.

(4) The Secretary shall determine whether the State plan contains the material required.

Senate amendment

An "eligible State" is a State that annually submits to the Secretary: an outline of its program; a 3-year strategic plan; various certifications on programs offered by the State; and an estimate of State and local expenditures. The detailed requirements of State plan submissions to the Secretary are:

(1) A written document outlining how the State intends to:

a. provide aid to needy families with at least one minor child (or any expectant family); and provide a parent or (other) caretaker in these families with work activities and support services to enable them to leave the program and become self-sufficient;

b. conduct a program designed to serve all political subdivisions;

c. provide a parent or caretaker in such families with work experience, assistance in finding employment, and other work preparation activities and support services that the State considers appropriate to enable such families to leave the program and become self-sufficient;

d. require a parent or caretaker to engage in work, as defined by the State, after 24 months of benefits, or, if earlier, when the State finds the person ready for work (see i. below for community service rule after 3 months of benefits);

e. satisfy the minimum participation rate specified in section 404;

f. treat families with minor children moving into the State; and noncitizens of the U.S.;

g. safeguard and restrict use and disclosure of information about recipients;

h. establish goals and take action to prevent and reduce out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with emphasis on teenage pregnancies; and

i. unless the State opts out by notice to the Secretary, require participation in community service (with hours and tasks set by the State), after 3 months of benefits, by a parent or caretaker not exempt from work requirements (effective 2 years after enactment).

(2) A strategic plan that shall include:

a. a description of the goals of the 3-year strategic plan, including outcome-related goals of, and benchmarks for, program activities;

b. a description of how the above goals and benchmarks will be achieved, or progress made toward them, in the current year;

c. a description of performance indicators to be used in measuring/assessing output service levels and outcomes of activities;

d. information on external factors that could significantly affect attainment of goals and benchmarks;

e. information on a mechanism for conducting program evaluation, for use in comparing results with goals and benchmarks;

f. information on how minimum participation rates specified in section 404 will be satisfied; and

g. an estimate of the total amount of State and local expenditures under the program for the current fiscal year.

(3) Certification that the State will operate a child support enforcement program.

(4) Certification that the State will operate child protection programs, including a foster care and adoption programs, under parts B and E.

(5) Certification by the Chief Executive Officer that State will participate during the fiscal year in the income and eligibility verification system (IEVS) required by Section 1137 of Social Security Act.

(6) Certification by the Chief Executive Officer specifying which State agency or agencies will administer and supervise the program and ensuring that local governments and private sector organizations have been consulted about the plan and design of welfare services in the State.

(7) Certification by the Chief Executive Officer that the State shall provide the Secretary with required reports.

(8) Estimate of the total amount of State and local expenditures under the State program for the fiscal year.

(9) The Chief Executive Officer must certify that the State will provide Indians in each tribe that does not have a tribal family assistance plan with equitable access to assistance under the State block grant program.

(10) The State shall make available to the public a summary of the State plan and shall provide a copy to the "approved entity" conducting the audit of State expenditures from the block grant.

Conference Agreement

An "eligible State" is a State that once every two years submits to the Secretary an outline of its program and various certifications on programs offered by the State. The detailed requirements of State plan submissions to the Secretary are:

(1) A written document describing how the State will:

a. conduct a program that provides assistance to needy families with children (or families that include a pregnant mother) and provides parents with job preparation, work and support services to enable them to leave the program and become self-sufficient;

b. conduct a program designed to serve all political subdivisions;

c. require a parent or caretaker to engage in work, as defined by the State, after 24 months of benefits, or, if earlier, when the State finds the person ready for work;

d. ensure that families engage in work activities in accord with section 404;

e. treat families moving into the State from another State, if such families are to be treated differently than other families;

f. take such reasonable steps as State deems necessary to safeguard and restrict the use and disclosure of information about recipients;

g. establish goals and take action to prevent and reduce out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with emphasis on teenage pregnancies; and

h. treat noncitizens, if the State and local benefits for which they may be eligible will be different than those available to citizens.

(2) Certification by the chief executive officer that the State operate a child support enforcement program;

(3) Certification by the chief executive officer that the State will operate a child protection program and a foster care and adoption program under part B;

(4) Certification by the chief executive officer specifying which State agency or agencies will administer and supervise the program and ensuring that local governments and private sector organizations have had 60 days to submit comments about the plan and the design of welfare services in the State;

(5) Certification by the chief executive officer that the State will provide Indians in each tribe that does not have a tribal family assistance plan with equitable access to assistance under the program; and

(6) The State shall make available to the public a summary of the State plan.

For purposes of this section, the term "Eligibile State" means, with respect to fiscal year 1996, a State that has submitted to the Secretary the plan described above within 3 months after the date of enactment.

C. PAYMENTS TO STATES

ENTITLEMENTS

Present law

AFDC entitles States to Federal matching funds. Current law provides permanent authority for appropriations without limit for grants to States for AFDC benefits, administration, and AFDC-related child care. Over the years, because of court rulings, AFDC has evolved into an entitlement for individuals to receive cash benefits. In general, States must give AFDC to all persons whose income and resources are below State-set limits if they are in a class or category eligible under Federal rules.

There is no grants increased to reward states that reduce of out-of-wedlock births (illegitimacy ratio).

There is no adjustment for population growth. Instead, current law provides unlimited matching funds. When AFDC enrollment climbs, Federal funding automatically rises.

There is no adjustment for emergency assistance (EA) plan amendments. Current law provides unlimited matching funds for EA expenditures.

There is no job placement performance bonus, performance bonus, or high performance bonus.

The law imposes an aggregate ceiling on matching funds for AFDC, adult cash welfare (aged, blind, disabled), and foster care and adoption assistance in Guam, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and American Samoa (AFDC, foster care, and adoption assistance only). (Sec. 1108(a) and (d) of the Social Security Act.) The Federal matching rate is 75%, except for adoption assistance and foster care maintenance payments, whose matching rate is 50%. (Note: American Samoa has not implemented AFDC). Separate funding ceilings apply to matching funds for AFDC family planning services (75% Federal) and for Medicaid (50% Federal) in each territory (sec. 1108(b) and (c) of the Social Security Act). The outlying areas listed above are entitled to JOBS matching funds (75% Federal), allocated on the same basis as States (by share of AFDC adult recipients). (Sec. 403(1)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act.)

Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations receive no special treatment regarding AFDC, and tribes and native organizations do not administer AFDC funds. Indian and Alaska families with children receive AFDC benefits on the same terms as other families in their States or from State or local AFDC agencies. More than 80 tribes and native organizations in 24 States are JOBS grantees, having applied to conduct JOBS within 6 months of enactment of the law establishing it. Their allocation of JOBS funds is based on the percentage of AFDC adult recipients within the State who are in the tribal service area. Their JOBS allocation is subtracted from that of their State. JOBS funds granted to Indians and Alaska natives are 100% Federal, requiring no matching. Further, their JOBS programs need not meet participation rules of the regular JOBS program. In fiscal year 1995 the estimated allocation of JOBS funds for these groups totaled $8.9 million.

House Bill

Each eligible State is entitled to receive a grant from the Secretary for each of 5 fiscal years (1996–2000) in the amount equal to the State family assistance grant for the fiscal year. There is no individual entitlement (implicit in bill). For each fiscal year beginning with 1998, a State's grant amount is increased by 5 percent if the State illegitimacy ratio is 1 percentage point lower in that year than its 1995 illegitimacy ratio; the State grant is increased 10 percent if the illegitimacy ratio is 2 or more percentage points lower than its 1995 illegitimacy ratio. In 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000, a State's grant amount is increased by the State's percentage share of national population growth among growing States multiplied by $100 million. States that have negative population growth are omitted from the calculation. The House bill entitles territories to a cash block grant for temporary assistance to needy families (on same basis as States). It repeals AFDC and foster care/adoption assistance (and, accordingly, territorial ceilings for them and for AFDC family planning). (Sec. 104(e)(1) of H.R. 4.) It establishes new separate territorial ceilings for adult cash welfare. The bill retains territorial ceilings for Medicaid, but repeals ceilings for AFDC family planning (along with AFDC itself). As noted, the bill repeals JOBS. The basic cash block grant for outlying areas includes base-year level JOBS funds. Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations receive no special treatment regarding the cash block grant that will replace AFDC. Tribes and native organizations would not administer the new grants. The bill repeals JOBS (sec. 104(c)), and the basic cash block grant includes base-year level JOBS funds of each State (those funds include ones earmarked previously for administration by Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations). Tribes and native organizations would not administer the new grants.

Senate Amendment

The Secretary is required to pay each eligible State for each of 5 fiscal years (1996 - 2000) a grant equal to the State family assistance grant for the fiscal year. The amendment states that no person is entitled to any assistance under Title IV–A. For fiscal years 1998, 1999 and 2000, a State's grant amount is increased if the State illegitimacy ratio is at least 1 percentage point lower than its 1995 illegitimacy ratio and the State rate of "induced pregnancy terminations" is no higher than in 1995. The bonus equals $25 times the number of children in the State in families with income below the poverty line, according to the most recently available Census data. The bonus is $50 per poor child if the illegitimacy ratio is at least 2 percentage points lower and the abortion rate no higher than in 1995. The bonus shall not be paid if the Secretary finds that the illegitimacy ratio declined, or the abortion rate held steady, because of a change in State reporting methods. The amendment authorizes to be appropriated, and appropriates, sums necessary for these grants. For each of fiscal years 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000, qualifying States shall receive a supplemental grant amount equal to 2.5 percent of the block grant received in the preceding fiscal year. For this purpose, a qualifying State is one with an average level of State welfare spending per poor person in the preceding fiscal year below the national average and with an estimated rate of State population growth above the average growth rate for all States for the most recent fiscal year for which information is available. Additionally, States whose population rose more than 10% from April 1, 1990, to July 1, 1994, are deemed eligible, as are States with a fiscal year 1996 level of State welfare spending per poor person that is less than 35 percent of the national average level. State welfare spending per poor person is defined as the State cash block grant divided by the number of persons in the State who had an income below the poverty line, according to the 1990 decennial census. For these grants, a total of $878 million is authorized to be appropriated, and is appropriated to be spent in 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000. The Senate amendment makes available up to a total of $800 million for grants for years fiscal year 1996 through fiscal year 2000 equal to increased EA expenditures in fiscal year 1995 attributable to State EA plan amendments made during fiscal year 1994. If this amount is insufficient, State EA adjustment grants are to be reduced proportionately. For each of 2 years (fiscal years 1998 and 1999) the Secretary shall pay a job placement performance bonus to eligible States. This bonus fund shall equal 3% of the national cash block grant for fiscal year 1998 and 4% for fiscal year 1999. The DHHS Secretary shall develop a formula for allocating funds to States on the basis of the number of families who, during the previous year, lost eligibility for continued aid from the cash block grant program because of obtaining unsubsidized employment. The formula must provide a larger bonus for families who remain employed for longer periods or who are at greater risk of long-term welfare enrollment and take into account each State or geographic area's unemployment condition. For fiscal year 2000, the Secretary shall pay a performance bonus to each qualified State. To qualify for a performance bonus, a State must exceed overall average performance of all States in a measurement category (in the time period starting 6 months after enactment and ending on September 30, 1999) or improve its own performance in a category by at least 15% over that of fiscal year 1994. The 5 measurement categories are: reduction in average length of time families receive cash aid, increase in the percentage of recipient families that receive child support payments, increase in the number of families who lose eligibility for continued cash aid as a result of unsubsidized work, increase in earnings of recipient families, and reduction in percentage of families that become re-eligible for cash aid within 18 months after leaving the program. The bonus fund shall equal 5% of the national cash block grant and is to be deducted from that grant (by reducing each State's fiscal year 2000 grant by 5%). For fiscal year 2000, in addition, "high performance" States shall be entitled to a share of a high performance bonus fund. Appropriated for the high performance bonus fund is an amount equal to penalties imposed on States (and "collected" by reductions in State grants) for FYs 1996–1999. High performance bonuses will be awarded for each of the 5 measurement categories to the 5 States with the highest percentage of improvement over their fiscal year 94 baseline in the category and to the 5 States with the highest overall average performance in the category. Retains but increases aggregate ceilings in each of the territories for cash aid to needy families, cash aid to needy aged, blind or disabled adults, and foster care/adoption assistance. Ends requirement that territories share cost of cash aid for needy families. Ceilings for Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands would rise by $19.521 million (representing a 12.5 percent increase in the old ceilings, plus $8.446 million for their fiscal year 1994 JOBS funds). Retains territorial ceilings for Medicaid, but repeals ceilings for AFDC family planning (along with AFDC itself). The Senate amendment repeals JOBS, but increases ceilings for the outlying areas to include their base-year level JOBS funds. The Senate amendment allows block grant funds to be directly administered by Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations. The amount is the total of Federal AFDC payments to the State for fiscal year 1994 attributable to Indian families. The Senate amendment requires the DHHS Secretary to continue to pay Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations that have been JOBS grantees an annual grant equal to the amount they received in fiscal year 95 for JOBS for each of fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999 and 2000. For this purpose it appropriates $7,638,474 for each year. These funds are separate from, and in addition to, the national cash block grant.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment on grants for family assistance, so that each eligible State is entitled to receive a grant equal to the State family assistance grant from the Secretary for each of 5 fiscal years (1996-2000). With respect to the Senate amendment's explicit statement that no person is entitled to any assistance under Title IV-A of the Social Security Act, this provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

The conference agreement follows the House bill with respect to the amount of Grant Increases to Reward States that Reduce Out-of-Wedlock births (namely grant increases of 5% and 10%, based on reductions in illegitimacy). The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with respect to the determination of how States may qualify for grant increases for this purpose, including the prohibition on a State's receiving a grant increase for this purpose if the State rate of induced pregnancy terminations is higher than in 1995.

For purposes of this part, the Secretary is to disregard changes in rates of illegitimacy due to a change in State methods of reporting such data.

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with regard to the Adjustment for Population Growth, with the modification that $800 million is authorized and appropriated for this purpose.

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding the adjustment for Emergency Assistance Plan Amendments.

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding the Job Placement Performance Bonus.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the Performance Bonus, except that States that are most successful or most improved in moving families off welfare into work may reduce their 75 percent State maintenance of effort requirement by up to 8 percentage points.

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding the High Performance Bonus.

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment regarding the treatment of outlying areas, with certain modifications to the aggregate ceilings on cash benefits for the specified territories.

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment regarding the treatment of Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations, except that these groups will receive benefits through their State's block grant in fiscal year 1996 and will be eligible to receive separate payments in fiscal year 1997 and thereafter. With regard to the specific provision outlining the purpose of the section providing for direct funding and administration by Indian tribes, this provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

Definitions

Present Law

AFDC law defines "State" to include the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa. However, special funding ceilings apply to them.

House Bill

The "State family assistance grant" is determined by the greater of (1) the average of Federal obligations to the State for selected programs (AFDC benefits and administration, Emergency Assistance, and JOBS) authorized by Title IV-A for fiscal years 1992-1994; or (2) the amount of Federal obligations for fiscal year 1994, multiplied by the total amount of State outlays for these programs for fiscal year 1994, divided by the amount of Federal obligations for fiscal year 1994. The selected programs are all those authorized under Title IV-A of current law except the day care programs (the at-risk program, AFDC/JOBS day care, and transitional day care). If the sum of all the State shares, as calculated here, exceeds (or falls short of) the national block grant amount below ((2)(b)), each State's share will be reduced (or increased) proportionately.

In each fiscal year between 1996 and 2000, the "National Block Grant Amount" available to all eligible States will be equal to $15,390,296,000.

The State's "Illegitimacy Ratio" for a fiscal year is the sum of the number of out-of-wedlock births that occurred in the State during the most recent fiscal year for which the data are available and the amount, if any, by which the number of abortions performed in the State during the most recent year for which information is available exceeds the number of abortions performed in the State during the fiscal year that immediately precedes such most recent fiscal year, divided by the number of births that occurred in the State for the most recent fiscal year.

The term "State" includes the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

Senate Amendment

The State share of the block grant for each year equals the total Federal payments to the State under Title IV-A in Fiscal Year 1994 (for AFDC benefits and administration, Emergency Assistance, JOBS, and three child care programs— AFDC/JOBS child care, "transitional" child care, and "at-risk child care"); reduced by any amount set aside for tribal family assistance programs in the State and (fiscal year 2000 only) by 5% (for the performance bonus fund) and increased by the amount, if any, of increased fiscal year 95 Emergency Assistance spending attributable to fiscal year 94 amendments.

The block grant amount is $16,803,769,000. (Note: A major reason for the difference between the House and Senate block grant amount is that the House removed mandatory child care funds currently authorized under Title IV-A and placed most of the money in a separate discretionary child care block grant, while the Senate kept IV-A child care funds in the cash block grant but earmarked them for child care.)

The term "illegitimacy ratio" means the number of out-of-wedlock births that occurred in the State during the most recent fiscal year for which the data are available, divided by the number of births that occurred in the State during the most recent fiscal year for which the data are available.

The term "State" is identical to the House bill. However, for supplemental grants for population increases, the term "State" applies only to the 50 States.

In general, the terms "Indian," "Indian tribe," and "tribal organization" have the meaning given by section 4 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b). The Senate amendment provides that only 12 specified regional non-profit corporations of Alaska natives can administer tribal family assistance grants.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to the State family assistance grant, except that the State share of the block grant is determined by the greater of (1) the average of Federal payments for fiscal years 1992-94; (2) Federal payments in fiscal year 1994; or (3) Federal payments in fiscal year 1995. House conferees recede with regard to the proportionate reduction in State shares included in the House bill. For all programs except JOBS, Federal payments represent the Federal share of a State's total expenditures on these programs, as reported by the States. For JOBS, the payment represents the grant amount.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the definition of a State's Illegitimacy Ratio

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment regarding the definition of "State", but the House recedes to the Senate so that, for purposes of the supplemental grants for population increases only, the term "State" applies only to the 50 States and the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the definition of "Indian."

Use of Grant

Present Law

AFDC and JOBS funds are to be used in conformity with State plans. A State may replace a caretaker relative with a protective payee or a guardian or legal representative.

Current law sets aside some JOBS funds (deducting them from State allocations) for Indian tribes and Native Alaska organizations. See (4)(C)(1)(f).

Regulations permit States to receive Federal reimbursement funds (50% administrative cost-sharing rate) for operation of electronic benefit systems. To do so, States must receive advance approval from DHHS and must comply with automatic data processing rules.

House bill

States may use funds in any manner reasonably calculated to accomplish the purpose of this part (except for prohibitions listed below under (4)(F)). No part of the grant may be used to provide medical services. Explicitly allowed are noncash aid to mothers under the age of 18 and assistance to low-income households for heating and cooling costs.

The House bill has no set-aside provision.

In the case of families that have lived in a State for less than 12 months, States are authorized to provide them with the benefit level of the State from which they moved.

States may transfer up to 30 percent of the funds paid to the State under this section to any or all of the following: (1) child protection block grant; (2) social services block grant under title XX of the Social Security Act; (3) any food and nutrition block grant passed during the 104th Congress; and (4) the child care and development block grant program. Rules of the recipient program will apply to the transferred funds.

States are allowed to reserve some block grant funds received for any fiscal year for the purpose of providing emergency assistance under the block grant program.

States are encouraged to implement an electronic benefit transfer system for providing assistance under the State program funded under this part, and may use the grant for such purpose. In general, exempts State and local government electronic transfers of need-based benefits from certain rules issued by the Federal Reserve Board regarding electronic fund transfers, (i.e., Regulation E, which limits liability of cardholders).

Senate amendment

States may use funds in any manner reasonably calculated to accomplish the purpose of this part, provided that administrative costs not exceed 15% of the State's grant (except for prohibitions listed below, under section F).

The following rules apply to set-asides under the Senate amendment: (1) maintains current law set-asides for JOBS funding for Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations; (2) from the national cash block grant, the Senate amendment earmarks for child care annually the amount paid with Federal funds in fiscal year 1994 for AFDC-related child care (about $980 million); and (3) for the Performance fund (fiscal year 2000 only), each State's share of the family assistance block grant shall be reduced by 5%. These set-aside funds are to finance fiscal year 2000 performance bonuses.

With regard to the treatment of "interstate immigrants", the Senate amendment includes a similar provision, with slight differences in wording, in relation to the House bill.

States may transfer up to 30 percent of block grant funds to the child care and development block grant program.

A State may reserve amounts paid to the State for any fiscal year for the purpose of providing assistance under this part. Reserve funds can be used in any fiscal year. Any funds set aside for child care, if reserved, must be used only for child care.

States may use a portion of the temporary assistance block grant to make payments (or provide job placement vouchers) to State-approved agencies that provide employment services to recipients of cash aid.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment with respect to the general uses of the grant, clarifying that the grant may be used in any manner reasonably calculated to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to: (1) provide assistance to needy families so that children may be cared for in their own homes or in the homes of relatives; (2) end the dependence of needy parents on government benefits by promoting job preparation, work, and marriage; (3) prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and establish annual numerical goals for preventing and reducing the incidence of these pregnancies; and (4) encourage the formation and maintenance of two-parent families.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment's 15% cap on administrative spending. However, spending for information technology and computerization needed to implement the tracking and monitoring required by this title are excluded from this limitation.

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to set-asides for child care and the performance fund, and follows the Senate amendment with regard to the set-aside for Indians.

It is the intent of the conferees that States be permitted to determine the treatment of interstate immigrants, including whether to provide such persons with benefits equaling those they would have received in their former State, for a period of up to 12 months. A provision specifically authorizing such treatment was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to transfer of funds.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on reservation of funds. The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to the Electronic Benefit Transfer System.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on the authority of States to use funds to operate an employment placement program.

COST-SHARING

Present law

Current law requires States to share program costs. For administrative costs the rate is 50%. For other costs it varies among States (and, within limits, is inversely related to the square of State per capita income, compared to the square of national per capita income). For AFDC benefits and AFDC-related child care, the Medicaid Federal matching rate is used; it now ranges among States from a floor of 50% to 79%. For JOBS activities, the law provides an "enhanced" rate, ranging from 60% to 79%.

House bill

No cost-sharing required.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires State cost-sharing (maintenance of effort) for the temporary assistance block grant for 4 years, starting in fiscal year 1997. To receive the full grant for one of these years, States must spend in the preceding year from their own funds under their temporary assistance program at least 80% of the amount they spent in fiscal year 1994 on the replaced programs—AFDC benefits, AFDC-related child care, Emergency Assistance, and JOBS. Grants are to be reduced one dollar for each dollar by which a State falls short of this requirement. Cost-sharing also is required for "contingency" funds and additional child care funds. For contingency funds States must spend at least 100% of fiscal year 1994 expenditures on programs replaced by the cash block grant. For additional child care funds they must spend at least 100% of fiscal year 1994 expenditures on AFDC-related child care.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that States must spend at least 75 percent of the amount they spent in fiscal year 1995.

TIMING OF PAYMENTS

Present law

The Secretary pays AFDC funds to the State on a quarterly basis.

House bill

The Secretary shall make each grant payable to a State in quarterly installments.

Senate amendment

Similar to the House provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

PENALTIES

Present law

If the Secretary finds that a State has failed to comply with the State plan, she is to withhold all payments from the State (or limit payments to categories not affected by noncompliance).

There is no specific penalty for failure to submit a report, although the general noncompliance penalty could apply.

The Secretary is to reduce payments by 1% for failure to offer and provide family planning services to all appropriate AFDC recipients who request them.

Except as expressly provided, the Secretary may not regulate the conduct of the States or enforce any provisions of this paragraph.

The penalty against a State for noncompliance with child support enforcement rules—loss of AFDC matching funds—shall be suspended if a State submits and implements a corrective action plan.

House bill

The Secretary shall reduce the funds paid to a State by any amount found by audit to be in violation of this part, but the Secretary cannot reduce any quarterly payment by more than 25 percent. If necessary, funds will be withheld from the State's payments during the following year.

The Secretary must reduce by 3 percent the amount otherwise payable to a State for a fiscal year if the State has not submitted the annual report regarding the use of block grant funds within 6 months after the end of the immediately preceding fiscal year. The penalty is rescinded if the report has been submitted within 12 months.

The Secretary must reduce by 1 percent the amount of a State's annual grant if the State fails to participate in the IEVS designed to reduce welfare fraud.

With regard to failure to offer and provide family planning services, there is no penalty specified, but States are allowed to use block grant funds to pay for family planning services.

Except as expressly provided, the Secretary may not regulate the conduct of States under Part A of Title IV or enforce any provision of it.

There is no provision in the House bill regarding overdue repayments to the Federal rainy day loan fund, which is described below.

Senate amendment

For all penalties, the Secretary may not impose any of the penalties if she finds the State had reasonable cause for its failure to comply with the relevant provision. The State must spend on the block grant program a sum of its own funds to equal the amount of withheld Federal dollars. No quarterly payment may be reduced more than 25%. If necessary, penalty funds will be withheld from the State's payment for the next year. Except for the first item, all penalties take effect October 1, 1996.

The Secretary shall reduce funds paid to a State by any amount found by audit to be in violation of this part. If the State does not prove to the Secretary that the unlawful expenditure was not made intentionally, the Secretary shall impose an additional penalty of 5 percent of the basic block grant.

If a State fails to submit the annual report required by sec. 409 within 6 months after the end of a fiscal year, the Secretary shall reduce by 5 percent the amount otherwise payable to the State for the next year. However, the penalty shall be rescinded if the State submits the report before the end of the year in which the report was due.

The Secretary shall reduce by not more than 5 percent the annual grant of a State, if the State fails to participate in the IEVS designed to reduce welfare fraud.

If the Secretary determines that a State does not enforce penalties requested by the Title IV–D child support enforcement agency against recipients of cash aid who fail to cooperate in establishing paternity in accordance with Part D, the Secretary shall reduce the cash assistance block grant by not more than 5 percent.

Except as expressly provided, neither the DHHS Secretary nor the Treasury Secretary may regulate the conduct of States under Part A of Title IV nor enforce any provision of it.

If a State fails to pay any amount borrowed from the Federal Loan Fund for State Welfare Programs within the maturity period, plus any interest owed, the Secretary shall reduce the State's cash assistance block grant for the immediately succeeding fiscal year quarter by the outstanding loan amount, plus the interest owed on it. The Secretary may not forgive these overdue debts.

The Senate amendment requires the Federal government, before assessing a penalty against a State under any program established or modified by the act, to notify the State about the violation and allow it to enter into a corrective compliance plan within 60 days after notification. The Federal government shall have 60 days to accept or reject the plan; if it accepts the plan, and if the State corrects the violation, no penalty shall be assessed. If the State fails to make a timely correction, some or all of the penalty shall be assessed. An alternate corrective action section requires a State to correct the violation pursuant to its plan within 90 days after the Federal government accepts the plan.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on the general conditions for setting penalties (i.e. penalties may not be imposed if the Secretary finds the State had reasonable cause for its failure to comply; the State must spend on the block grant program a sum of its own funds to equal the amount of withheld Federal dollars; no quarterly payment may be reduced more than 25%; if necessary, penalty funds will be withheld from the State's payment for the next year; and that, except for the first item, all penalties take effect October 1, 1996).

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on penalties for use of the grant for unauthorized purposes. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding penalties for State failure to submit the required report, except that the penalty is to be 4 percent. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding penalties for State failure to participate in IEVS, except that the penalty is to be 2 percent.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on penalties for State failure to cooperate on child support enforcement. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding penalties for failure to offer and provide family planning services. The conference agreement includes penalties for failure to satisfy minimum work participation rates. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the limitation of Federal authority.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the penalty for failure to timely repay the Federal loan fund for State welfare programs. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the Corrective Action Plan.

FEDERAL RAINY DAY LOAN FUND

Present law

No provision. Instead, current law provides unlimited matching funds.

House bill

The Federal government will establish a fund of $1 billion modeled on the Federal Unemployment Account, which is part of the Unemployment Compensation system. The fund is to be administered by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, who must deposit into the fund any principal or interest payments received with respect to a loan made under this provision. Funds are to remain available without fiscal year limitation for the purpose of making loans and receiving payments of principal and interest. States must repay their loans, with interest, within 3 years. The rate of interest will equal the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the period to maturity of the loan. At any given time, no State can borrow more from the fund than half its annual share of block grant funds or $100 million, whichever is less. States may borrow from the fund if their total unemployment rate for any given 3 month period is more than 6.5 percent and is at least 110 percent of the same measure in the corresponding quarter of the previous 2 years.

Senate amendment

Establishes a $1.7 billion revolving loan fund called the "Federal Loan Fund for State Welfare Programs." The Secretary shall make loans, and the rate of interest will equal the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the period to maturity of the loan. Ineligible are States that have been penalized for misspending block grant funds as determined by an audit. Loans are to mature in 3 years, at the latest, and the maximum amount loaned to a State cannot exceed 10 percent of its basic block grant, and States face penalties for failing to make timely payments on their loan.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

CONTINGENCY FUND (FOR STATES WITH HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT)

Present law

No provision. Current law provides unlimited matching funds.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Establishes a "Contingency Fund for State Welfare Programs" and appropriates funds of up to $1 billion for a total period of 7 years (fiscal year 1996–2002). The fund would provide matching grants (at the Medicaid matching rate) to States that have unemployment rates above specified levels, provided they first spent from their own funds a yearly sum at least equal to their fiscal year 1994 expenditures on AFDC, AFDC-related child care, Emergency Assistance, and JOBS. The maximum contingency grant could not exceed 20 percent of a State's temporary assistance block grant. Eligible would be States that met the maintenance of effort requirement and had an average rate of total unemployment, seasonally adjusted, of at least 6.5 percent during the most recent 3 months with published data and a rate at least 10 percent above that of either or both of the corresponding 3-month periods in the 2 preceding calendar years.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that $800 million is appropriated for this purpose. The provision requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to annually report to Congress on the status of the fund was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

ADDITIONAL DAY CARE FUNDS

Present law

No provision. Current law provides unlimited matching funds for AFDC/JOBS child care and transitional child care (but a capped amount for "at-risk" care).

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment authorizes to be appropriated, and appropriates, $3 billion in matching grants to States for the 5-year period beginning in fiscal year 1996 for child care assistance (in addition to Federal funds set aside for child care in the family assistance block grant). The funds, which are allocated among the States on the basis of their share of the nation's child population, are to be used to reimburse a State, at the Medicaid matching rate, for child care spending in a fiscal year that exceeds its share of child care set-aside funds (100 percent Federal) plus the amount it spent from its own funds in fiscal year 1994 for AFDC/JOBS child care, transitional child care, and at-risk child care. Funds are to be used only for child care assistance under Part IV–A. In the last quarter of the fiscal year, fiscal year 2000, if any portion of a State allotment is not used, the Secretary shall make it available to applicant States. Notwithstanding section 658T of the Child Care and Development Block Grant Act, the State agency administering the family assistance block grant shall determine eligibility for all child care assistance provided under Title IV–A. (For budget scoring, the Amendment states that the baseline shall assume that no grant will be made after fiscal year 2000.)

Conference agreement

See discussion in Subtitle I of the conference agreement under Child Care and Development Block Grant.

D. CONTRACTS/CLIENT AGREEMENTS

TERMS

Present law

After assessing the needs and skills of recipients and developing an employability plan, States may require JOBS participants to negotiate and enter into an agreement that specifies their obligations.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

States must assess, through a case manager, the skills of each parent for use in developing and negotiating a personal responsibility contract (PRC). Each recipient family must enter into a contract developed by the State or into a limited benefit plan. The PRC means a binding contract outlining steps to be taken by the family and State to get the family "off of welfare" and specifying a negotiated time-limited period of eligibility for cash aid. An alternate provision requires the case manager to consult with the parent applicant (client) in developing a PRC, lists client activities that the PRC might require, specifies that clients must agree to accept a bona fide offer of an unsubsidized full-time job unless they have good cause not to, but does not require a time limit in the PRC nor make provision for a limited benefit plan. A State may exempt a battered person from entering into a PRC if its terms would endanger his/her well-being.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

PENALTIES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The PRC is to provide that if a family fails to comply with its terms, the family automatically will enter into a limited benefit plan (with a reduced benefit and later termination of aid, in accordance with a schedule determined by the State). If the State agency violates the PRC, the contract shall be invalid. The State is to establish a procedure, including the opportunity for hearing, to resolve disputes concerning participation in the PRC. The alternate PRC language provides these penalties: for the first act of noncompliance with the PRC, 33 percent reduction in the family's benefit for one month; for the second act, 66 percent reduction for 3 months; for third and subsequent acts of noncompliance, loss of eligibility for 6 months. Job refusal without good cause is treated as a third violation. However, in no case shall the penalty period extend beyond the duration of noncompliance.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

E. MANDATORY WORK REQUIREMENTS

WORK ACTIVITIES

Present law

JOBS programs must include specified educational activities (high school or equivalent education, basic and remedial education, and education for those with limited English proficiency); job skills training, job readiness activities, and job development and placement. In addition, States must offer at least two of these four items: group and individual job search; on-the-job training; work supplementation or community work experience program (CWEP) (or another work experience program approved by the DHHS Secretary). The State also may offer postsecondary education in "appropriate" cases.

House bill

"Work activities" are defined as unsubsidized employment, subsidized employment, subsidized public sector employment or work experience, on-the-job training, job search, education and training directly related to employment, and jobs skills training directly related to employment. Satisfactory attendance at secondary school, at State option, may be included as a work activity for a parent under 20 who has not completed high school.

Senate amendment

Establishes this list of work activities: unsubsidized employment, subsidized employment, on-the-job training, community service programs, job search (first 4 weeks only) and vocational educational training (12 months maximum). For work participation requirements, the proportion of persons counted as engaged in "work" through participation in vocational educational training cannot exceed 25 percent. For each tribe receiving a family assistance block grant, the Secretary, with participation of Indian tribes, shall establish minimum work participation rules, appropriate time limits for benefits, and penalties, similar to the general family assistance rules but consistent with the economic conditions and resources of the tribe.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with the modification that, for the work participation requirements, the proportion of persons counted as engaged in work through participation in vocational education cannot exceed 20 percent.

Participation Requirements: All Families

Present law

The following minimum percentage of nonexempt AFDC families must participate in JOBS:

Fiscal year:	Minimum percentage
1995 (last year)	20
1996 and thereafter	[1]0

[1] No requirement.

Exempt from JOBS are parents whose youngest child is under 3 (1, at State option). Other exemptions include persons who are ill, incapacitated or needed at home because of illness or incapacity of another person. Also exempt are parents of a child under 6, unless the State guarantees child care and requires no more than 20 hours weekly of JOBS activity.

Participation rates are calculated for each month. A State's rate, expressed as a percentage, equals the number of actual JOBS participants divided by the number of AFDC recipients required to participate (non-exempt from JOBS).

In calculating a State's overall JOBS participation rate, a standard of 20 hours per week is used. The welfare agency is to count as participants the largest number of persons whose combined and averaged hours in JOBS activities during the month equal 20 per week.

The law requires States to guarantee child care when needed for JOBS participants and for other AFDC parents in approved education and training activities. Regulations require States to guarantee care for children under age 13 (older if incapable of self-care) to the extent that it is needed to permit the parent to work, train, or attend school. States must continue child care benefits for 1 year to ex-AFDC working families, but must charge them an income-related fee.

House bill

The following minimum percentages of all families receiving cash assistance must engage in work activities:

Fiscal year:	Minimum percentage
1996	10
1997	15
1998	20
1999	25
2000	27
2001	29
2002	40
2003 or thereafter	50

If States achieve net caseload reductions, they receive credit for the number of families by which the caseload is reduced for purposes of meeting the overall family participation requirements. The minimum participation rate shall be reduced by the percentage by which the number of recipient families during the fiscal year falls below the number of AFDC families in fiscal year 1995, except to the extent that the Secretary determines that the caseload reduction was required by terms of Federal law.

The fiscal year participation rates are the average of the rates for each month during the year. The monthly participation rates are measured by the number of recipient families in which an individual is engaged in work activities for the month, divided by the total number of recipient families that include a person who is 18 or older.

To be counted as engaged in work activities for a month, the recipient must be making progress in qualified activities for at least the minimum average number of hours per week shown in the table below. Of these hours, at least 20 hours must be spent in unsubsidized employment, subsidized private sector employment, subsidized public sector employment, work experience, or on-the-job training. During the first 4 weeks of required work activity, hourly credit also is given for job search and job readiness assistance.

1996	20
1997	20
1998	20
1999	25
2000	30
2001	30
2002	35
2003 or thereafter	35

Although a person must work at least 20 hours weekly in order for any hours of their training or education to count toward required participation, the bill does not prohibit a State from offering cash recipients an opportunity to participate in education or training before requiring them to work. In this case, however, participation does not count toward fulfillment of the State mandatory participation rate. Note: although the above table is in a paragraph entitled "requirements applicable to all families receiving assistance," another paragraph establishes a higher hourly requirement (35 hours weekly) in all years for 2-parent families. See below.

Senate amendment

The following minimum percentages of all families receiving cash assistance (except those with a child under 1, if exempted by the State) must participate in work activities:

1996	25
1997	30
1998	35
1999	40
2000 or thereafter	50

The Secretary is directed to prescribe regulations for reducing the minimum participation rate required for a State if its caseload under the new program is smaller than in the final year of AFDC, but not if the decrease was required by Federal law or results from changes in eligibility criteria adopted by the State. With these qualifications, the regulations are to reduce the participation rate by the number of percentage points, if any, by which the caseload in a fiscal year is smaller than in fiscal year 1995.

States may exempt a parent or caretaker relative of a child under one year old and may exclude them from the participation rate calculation. States may exempt a battered person if their well-being would be endangered by a work requirement.

As in the House bill, the fiscal year participation rate is the average of the rates for each month of the year. However, overall monthly rates are measured by adding (1) the number of recipient families with an adult engaged in work for the month, (2) the number subject to a work refusal penalty in the month (if not subject to the penalty for more than 3 months out of the preceding 12), and (3) the number who worked their way off the program in the previous 6 months and that include an adult who is working for the month, and then dividing this total by the number of families enrolled in the program during the month that include an adult recipient. States have the option to include in the calculation of monthly participation rates families who receive assistance under a tribal family assistance plan if the Indian or Alaska Native is participating in work under standards comparable to those of the State for being engaged in work.

To be counted as engaged in work for a month, an adult must be participating in work for at least the minimum average number of hours per week shown in the table below (of which not fewer than 20 hours per week are attributable to a work activity). See list of work activities above.

Exception to the table: In fiscal year 1999 and thereafter, when required weekly hours rise above 20, a State may count a single parent with a child under age 6 as engaged in work for a month if the parent works an average of 20 hours weekly. Also, community service participants may be treated as engaged in work if they provide child care services for another participant for the number of hours deemed appropriate by the State.

1996	20
1997	20
1998	20
1999	25
2000	30
2001	30
2002	35
2003 or thereafter	35

Note: Although the above table is in a paragraph entitled "all families," another paragraph establishes a higher hourly requirement (35 hours weekly) in all years for 2-parent families. See below.

The Senate amendment states that nothing in sec. 421 (amounts for child care) shall be construed to provide an entitlement to child care services to any child.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment as follows:

The following minimum percentages of all families receiving cash assistance must participate in work activities:

Fiscal year	Minimum percentage
1996	15
1997	20
1998	25
1999	30
2000	35
2001	40
2002 or thereafter	50.

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment regarding reduction in the participation rate, with the modification that regulations shall not take into account families diverted from the State program as a result of differences in eligibility criteria under the State program (in comparison with the AFDC program that operated prior to the date of enactment). The regulations shall place the burden on the Secretary to prove that families were diverted as a direct result of differences in eligibility criteria.

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding exemptions from the work requirement for battered individuals. The provision regarding the state option to exempt families with a child under 1 was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding the calculation of the fiscal year rate. The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment regarding the calculation of monthly rates, except that the Senate recedes on counting people who have worked their way off the rolls in the previous 6 months and including sanctioned individuals in the numerator; conferees agree that sanctioned persons are to be subtracted from the denominator in determining monthly rates.

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to the number counted as engaged in work, except that the phrase "making progress in qualified activities" is replaced with "participating in qualified activities".

PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENTS: TWO-PARENT FAMILIES

Present law

The following minimum percentages of two-parent families receiving cash assistance must participate in specified work activities:

Fiscal year	Minimum percentage
1995	50
1996	60
1997	75
1998 (last year)	75
1999 and thereafter (no requirement)	0

Participation rates for a month equal the number of parents who participate divided by the number of principal earners in AFDC–UP families (but excluding families who received aid for 2 months or less, if one parent engaged in intensive job search).

One parent in the 2-parent family must participate at least 16 hours weekly in on-the-job training, work supplementation, community work experience program, or a State-designed work program.

House bill

The following minimum percentages of two-parent families receiving cash assistance must engage in work activities:

Fiscal year	Minimum percentage
1996	50
1997	50
1998	90
1999 and thereafter	90

Participation rates for a month are measured by the number of two-parent recipient families in which at least one adult is engaged in work activities for the month, divided by the total number of two-parent families that received cash aid during the month.

An adult in a 2-parent family is engaged in work activities when making progress in them for 35 hours per week, at least 30 of which are in unsubsidized employment, subsidized private sector employment, subsidized public sector employment, work experience, or on-the-job training (or job search and job readiness assistance for the first 4 weeks only).

Senate amendment

The following minimum percentages of two-parent families receiving cash assistance must participate in work:

Fiscal year	Minimum percentage
1996	60
1997	75
1998	75

Participation rates for 2-parent families are measured (like those for all families) by adding (1) the number of 2-parent recipient families with an adult engaged in work for the month; (2) the number of 2-parent families subject to a work refusal penalty in the month (if not subject to the penalty for more than 3 months out of the preceding 12); and (3) the number of 2-parent families who worked their way off the program in the previous 6 months and that include an adult who is working for the month, and then dividing this total by the number of 2-parent families enrolled in the program during the month that include an adult recipient.

An adult in a 2-parent family must participate in work for at least 35 hours per week during the month, and at least 30 hours weekly must be attributable to one or more of the 6 work activities listed above in "4.E. Mandatory Work Requirements," above.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment so that the following minimum percentages of two-parent families receiving cash assistance must participate in specified work activities:

Fiscal year	Minimum percentage
1996	50
1997	75
1998	75
1999 and thereafter	90

With regard to participation rates for a month, the conference agreement for 2-parent families matches the agreement for all families described above, so that the rates equal the number of two-parent recipient families in which at least one adult is engaged in work activities for the month, divided by the total number of two-parent families that received cash assistance minus sanctioned persons.

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding creditable activities, except the Senate recedes so that the percentage of the caseload able to be counted as engaged in a work activity through vocational education training cannot exceed 20 percent.

PENALTIES

Present law

For failure to meet JOBS requirements without good cause, AFDC benefits are denied to the offending parent and payments for the children are made to a third party.

In a 2-parent family, failure of 1 parent to meet JOBS requirements without good cause results in denial of benefits for both parents (unless the other parent participates) and third-party payment on behalf of the children. Repeated failures to comply bring potentially longer penalty periods.

If a State fails to achieve the two required participation rates (overall and for 2-parent families), the Federal reimbursement rate for its JOBS spending (which ranges among States from 60% to 79% for most JOBS costs) is to be reduced to 50%.

House bill

If recipients refuse to participate in required work activities, their cash assistance is reduced by an amount to be determined by individual States, subject to good cause and other exceptions that the State may establish.

Recipients in two-parent families who fail to work the required number of hours receive the proportion of their monthly cash grant that equals the proportion of required work hours they actually worked during the month, or less at State option.

No officer or employee of the Federal government may regulate the conduct of States under this paragraph (about penalties against individuals) or enforce this paragraph against any State.

States not meeting the required participation rates have their overall grant (calculated without the bonus for reducing out-of-wedlock births and before other penalties listed in C(5) above) reduced by up to 5 percent the following fiscal year; penalties shall be based on the degree of noncompliance as determined by the Secretary.

Senate amendment

If an adult recipient refuses to engage in required work, the State shall reduce the amount of assistance to the family pro rata (or more, at State option) with respect to the period of work refusal, or shall discontinue aid, subject to good cause and other exceptions that the State may establish. A State may not penalize a single parent caring for a child under age 6 for refusal to work if the parent has a demonstrated inability to obtain needed child care. Penalties against individuals in 2-parent families follow those against individuals, except that the penalties may apply against parents of children under 6 who refuse to work due to an inability to obtain child care.

No specific provision about regulation of penalties against individuals. However, the amendment provides that neither the DHHS Secretary nor the Treasury Secretary may regulate the conduct of States under Title IV–A or enforce any of its provisions, except to the extent expressly provided in the Act.

If a State fails to meet minimum work participation rates, the Secretary is to reduce the family assistance block grant as follows: For the first year of failure, by 5% (applied in the next year); for subsequent years of failure, by an additional 5% (thus, by 5.25%). The Secretary shall impose reductions on the basis of the degree of noncompliance.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding penalties against individuals, except with the modification that the burden of proof to demonstrate an inability to find needed child care rests on the parent of a child under age 6. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding penalties against individuals in two-parent families.

The conference agreement follows the House bill on penalties against States not meeting work requirements, except the House recedes to the Senate on corrective action provisions.

RULE OF INTERPRETATION (CONCERNING EDUCATION AND TRAINING)

Present law

JOBS programs must include specified educational activities and job skills training.

House bill

This part does not prohibit a State from establishing a program for recipients that involves education and training.

Senate amendment

No explicit statement. However, the amendment qualifies vocational educational training as a "work activity," with a 12-month maximum and a limit on the proportion of vocational educational trainees who can be counted in calculating work participation rates.

Conference agreement

The House recedes, so no specific provision.

RESEARCH (ABOUT WORK PROGRAMS)

Present law

Authorizes States to make "initial" evaluations (in fiscal year 1991) of demographic characteristics of JOBS participants and requires the DHHS Secretary, in consultation with the Labor Secretary, to assist the States as needed.

House bill

The Secretary is to conduct research on the costs and benefits of mandatory work requirements in the Act, and to evaluate promising State approaches in employing welfare recipients. See also "Research, Evaluations, and National Studies" below.

Senate amendment

The Secretary is to conduct research on the costs, benefits, and effects of operating different State programs of temporary assistance to needy families, including their time limits. Research shall include studies of effects on employment rates. See also "Research, Evaluations, and National Studies" below.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

EVALUATION OF INNOVATIVE APPROACHES TO EMPLOYING RECIPIENTS OF ASSISTANCE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary shall evaluate innovative approaches by the States to employ recipients of assistance.

Senate amendment

The Secretary may assist States in developing, and shall evaluate innovative approaches for reducing welfare dependency and increasing the well-being of minor children, using random assignments in these evaluations "to the maximum extent feasible."

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

ANNUAL RANKING OF STATES AND REVIEW OF WORK PROGRAMS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary must annually rank the States in the order of their success in moving recipients into long-term private sector jobs, and review the 3 most and 3 least successful programs. HHS will develop these rankings based on data collected under the bill.

Senate amendment

Taking account of the number of poor children in the State and funds provided for them, the Secretary of HHS shall rank the States annually in the order of their success in placing recipients into long-term private sector jobs, reducing the overall caseload, and, when a practicable method for calculation becomes available, diverting persons from application and entry into the program. The Secretary shall review the 3 most and 3 least successful programs that provide work experience, help in finding jobs, and provide other support services to enable families to become independent of the program.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

ANNUAL RANKING OF STATES AND REVIEW OF OUT-OF-WEDLOCK BIRTHS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Secretary also is to annually rank States in the order of their success in reducing out-of-wedlock births and to review the programs of the 5 ranked highest and 5 ranked lowest in decreasing their absolute out-of-wedlock birth ratios (defined as the total number of out-of-wedlock births in families receiving cash assistance, divided by the total number of births in recipient families).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

SENSE OF CONGRESS ON WORK PRIORITY FOR MOTHERS WITHOUT YOUNG CHILDREN

Present law

No provision.

House bill

It is the sense of Congress that States should give highest priority to requiring families with older preschool children or school-aged children to engage in work activities.

Senate amendment

Adds to highest priority group "adults in 2-parent families and adults in single-parent families with children that are older than preschool age."

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

WORK/SCHOOL REQUIREMENTS FOR NONCUSTODIAL PARENTS

Present law

The Secretary shall permit up to 5 States, on a voluntary or mandatory basis, to provide JOBS services to unemployed noncustodial parents unable to pay child support.

House bill

States must adopt procedures to ensure that persons owing past-due support to a child (or to a child and parent) receiving Title IV–A either work or have a plan for payment of that support. They must seek a court order requiring the parent to make payment, in accordance with a court-approved plan to work (unless incapacitated). It is the sense of Congress that States should require non-custodial, non-supporting parents under age 18 to fulfill community work obligations and attend appropriate parenting or money management classes after school.

Senate amendment

States must seek a court order or administrative order requiring a person who owes support to a child receiving Title IV–D services to pay the support in accordance with a court-approved plan or to work (unless incapacitated).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except that the sense of Congress that States should require non-custodial, non-supporting parents under age 18 to fulfill community work obligations and attend appropriate parenting or money management classes after school was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

DELIVERY OF WORK ACTIVITIES

Present law

Current law permits States to carry out JOBS programs directly or through arrangement or under contracts with administrative entities under the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA), with State and local educational agencies or with private organizations, including community-based organizations as defined in JTPA (Section 485(A) of Social Security Act.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires that work activities for recipients of the temporary family assistance program be delivered through the statewide workforce development system that was earlier included in the Work Opportunity Act, unless a required activity is not available locally through the statewide workforce development system. However, as passed, the amendment does not include the workforce development title.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

DISPLACEMENT OF WORKERS

Present law

Under JOBS law, no work assignment may displace any currently employer worker or position (including partial displacement such as a reduction in hours of non-overtime work, wages, or employment benefits). Nor may a JOBS participant fill a position vacant because of layoff or because the employer has reduced the workforce with the effect of creating a position to be subsidized.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides that no adult in a Title IV–A work activity shall be employed or assigned when another person is on layoff from the same or a substantially equivalent job, or when the employer has terminated the employment of a regular worker or otherwise caused an involuntary reduction of its workforce in order to fill the vacancy thus created with a subsidized worker. This provision does not preempt or supersede any State or local law providing greater protection from displacement.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

F. PROHIBITIONS

FAMILIES WITHOUT A MINOR CHILD

Present law

Only families with dependent children (under age 18, or 19 at State option if the child is still in secondary school or in the equivalent level of vocational or technical training) can participate in the program.

House bill

Only families with minor children (under 18 years of age or under 19 years of age for full-time students in a secondary school or the equivalent) can participate in the program.

Senate amendment

Similar to House bill, but specifies that the minor children must live with their parent or other caretaker relative.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with the modification that a pregnant individual may receive assistance under the block grant.

ASSISTANCE FOR ALIENS

Present law

Illegal aliens are ineligible, but legal aliens and others permanently residing under color of law are eligible for Federal means-tested benefit programs. States must operate a System for Verification of Eligibility (SAVE) for determination of immigration or citizenship status of applicants and must verify the immigration status of aliens with the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits to a non-citizen unless the individual is a refugee under section 207 of the Immigration and Nationality Act who has been in the U.S. for under 5 years, a legal permanent resident over age 75 who has lived in the U.S. at least 5 years, a veteran (or the spouse or unmarried dependent child of a veteran) honorably discharged from the U.S. Armed Forces, or a legal permanent resident unable because of disability or mental impairment to comply with certain naturalization requirements. In addition, legal permanent residents who are current beneficiaries retain eligibility for the first year after enactment.

Senate amendment

Aliens entering after enactment are barred from receiving benefits for 5 years, with exceptions similar to House bill. Separately, States have the option to deny non-citizens benefits using block grant funds. Eligibility may be affected by changes in the sponsor-to-alien deeming provisions. These changes may affect their eligibility even after aliens have attained citizenship.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment so that noncitizens arriving after the date of enactment may not receive benefits from the block grant during their first 5 years in the U.S.; the conference agreement modifies the Senate amendment so that there is a State option to provide block grant assistance to noncitizens currently residing in the U.S., except that noncitizens receiving AFDC benefits on the date of enactment would continue to be eligible to receive block grant benefits until January 1, 1997. The conference agreement makes specific exceptions to these restrictions for refugees, asylees, veterans and active duty military, and aliens who have worked at least 40 calendar quarters as defined under title II of the Social Security Act. For further details see Subtitle D: Noncitizens.

No Cash Assistance for Out-of-Wedlock Births

Present law

No provision forbidding eligibility. Current law permits a State to provide AFDC to an unwed mother under 18 and her child only if they live with their parent or another adult relative or in another adult-supervised supportive arrangement; exceptions are allowed (Sec. 402(A)).

AFDC law has no provision directly comparable for funding second-chance homes.

AFDC law requires States, to the extent resources permit, to require mothers under age 20 who failed to complete high school to participate in an educational activity, even if they otherwise would be exempt because of having a child under age 3 (or, at State option, under age 1). However, States may exempt some school dropout mothers under 18 years old from this requirement.

House bill

Temporary Assistance to Needy Families Block Grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits to a child born out-of-wedlock to a mother under age 18 or to the mother until the mother reaches age 18. States must exempt mothers to whom children are born as a result of rape or incest. Block grant funds can be used to provide non-cash (e.g. voucher) assistance to young mothers and their children.

Senate amendment

Explicitly permits States to decide whether or not to give assistance to a child born out-of-wedlock to a mother under 18 years old, and to the mother until she reaches 18. However, if a State elects to extend assistance to these families, the minor mother must live with a parent, legal guardian or other adult relative unless they have no such appropriate relative or the State agency determines (1) that they had suffered, or might suffer, harm in the relative's home or (2) that the requirement should be waived for the sake of the child.

The State shall provide or assist a minor mother in finding a suitable home, a second chance home, maternity home, or other appropriate adult-supervised supportive living arrangement. The amendment authorizes to be appropriated, and appropriates funding for second-chance homes for unmarried teenage parents ($25 million yearly for FYs 1996 and 1997 and $20 million yearly for FYs 1998-2000).

Further, if a State aids these unwed minor mothers, it must require those who have not completed high school, or its equivalent, to attend school unless their child is under 12 weeks old. If the mother fails to attend high school or an approved alternative training program, the State must reduce her benefit or end it.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, except that the provision extending a state option to deny cash assistance for out-of-wedlock births was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974). With regard to second chance homes, the conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that funding is authorized but not appropriated for this purpose. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the school requirement for unwed minor mothers.

No Additional Assistance for Additional Children

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide additional cash benefits for a child born to a recipient of cash welfare benefits, or an individual who received cash benefits at any time during the 10-month period ending with the birth of the child. Mothers to whom children are born as a result of rape or incest are exempted. Block grant funds can be used to provide non-cash (voucher) assistance to young mothers and their children.

Senate amendment

Explicitly permits States to deny aid to child born to a mother already receiving aid under the program or to one who received benefits from the program at any time during the 10 months ending with the baby's birth.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with the modification that the States may exempt up to 50% of their caseload from the 60-month limit.

No Assistance for More Than 5 Years

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits for the family of an individual who, after attaining 18 years of age, has received block grant funds for 60 months, whether or not successive; States are permitted to provide hardship exemptions from the 60-month time limit for up to 10 percent of their caseload.

Senate amendment

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits for the family of a person who has received block grant aid for 60 months (or less at State option), whether or not consecutive. States may give hardship exemptions to up to 20 percent of their caseload. (Exempted from the 60-month time limit is a person who received aid as a minor child and who later applied as the head of her own household with a minor child.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that no assistance may be provided beyond 5 years and that States may exempt up to 15 percent of their caseload from this limit. Battered individuals may qualify for this exemption, but States are not required to exempt such individuals.

No Assistance for Families Not Cooperating with Paternity Establishment

Present law

As a condition of eligibility, applicants or recipients must cooperate in establishing paternity of a child born out-of-wedlock, in obtaining support payments, and in identifying any third party who may be liable to pay for medical care and services for the child.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits to persons who fail to cooperate with the State child support enforcement agency in establishing the paternity of any child of the individual; the child support agency defines cooperation.

Senate amendment

Maintains current law. In addition, see "Payments To States" for penalty against a State that fails to enforce penalty requested by the IV–D agency against a person who does not cooperate in establishing paternity.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with the modification that States must deny a parent's share of the family welfare benefit if the parent fails to cooperate; the State may deny benefits to the entire family for failure to cooperate.

No Assistance for Families Not Assigning Support Rights to the State

Present law

As a condition of AFDC eligibility, applicants must assign child support and spousal support rights to the State.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits to a family with an adult who has not assigned to the State rights to child support or spousal support.

Senate amendment

Gives States the option to require applicants for temporary family assistance (and recipients) to assign child support and spousal support rights to the State.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Withholding Portion of Aid for Child Whose Paternity is Not Established

Present law

No provision.

House bill

If, at the time a family applies for assistance, the paternity of a child in the family has not been established, the State must impose a financial penalty ($50 or 15 percent of the monthly benefits of a family of that size, whichever the State chooses) until the paternity of the child is established. Once paternity is established, all the money withheld as a penalty must be remitted to the family if it is still eligible for aid. Mothers to whom children are born as a result of rape or incest are exempted from this penalty. Provision effective 1 year after enactment (2 years at State option).

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with the modification that States may impose a financial penalty if paternity is not established.

Denial of Benefits to Persons Who Fraudulently Received Aid in Two States

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Ineligible for block grant assistance for 10 years is any individual convicted of having fraudulently misrepresented residence (or found by a State to have made a fraudulent statement) in order to obtain benefits or services from two or more States from the block grant, Medicaid, Food Stamps, or Supplemental Security Income.

Senate amendment

Ineligible for block grant assistance for 10 years is any person convicted in Federal court or State court of having fraudulently misrepresented residence in order to obtain benefits or services from two or more States from the cash block grant, Medicaid, Food Stamps, or Supplemental Security Income.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

Denial of Aid for Fugitive Felons, Probation and Parole Violators

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No assistance may be provided to an individual who is fleeing to avoid prosecution, custody or confinement after conviction for a crime (or an attempt to commit a crime) that is a felony (or, in New Jersey, a high misdemeanor), or who violates probation or parole imposed under Federal or State law.

Any safeguards established by the State against use or disclosure of information about individual recipients shall not prevent the agency, under certain conditions, from providing the address of a recipient to a law enforcement officer who is pursuing a fugitive felon or parole or probation violator. This provision applies also to a recipient sought by an officer not because he is a fugitive but because he has information that the officer says is necessary for his official duties. In both cases the officer must notify the State that location or apprehension of the recipient is within his official duties.

Senate amendment

A State shall furnish law enforcement officers, upon their request, the address, social security number, and photograph (if available) of any recipient if the officers notify the agency that the recipient is a fugitive felon, or a violator of probation or parole, or that he has information needed by the officers to perform their duties, and that the location or apprehension of the recipient is within the officers' official duties.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

NO ASSISTANCE FOR MINOR CHILDREN WHO ARE ABSENT, OR RELATIVES WHO FAIL TO NOTIFY AGENCY OF CHILD'S ABSENCE

Present law

Regulations allow benefits to continue for children who are "temporarily absent" from home.

House bill

No assistance may be provided for a minor child who has been absent from the home for 45 consecutive days or, at State option, between 30 and 90 consecutive days. States may establish a good cause exemption as long as it is detailed in the State report to the Secretary. No assistance can be given to a parent or caretaker who fails to report a missing minor child within 5 days of the time it is clear that the child is absent.

Senate amendment

Similar provision to House bill, with different wording.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

G. INCOME/RESOURCE LIMITS, TREATMENT OF EARNINGS AND OTHER INCOME RESOURCE LIMITS

Present law

$1,000 per family in counted resources (excluding home and some of the value of an auto, funeral arrangements, burial plots, real property that the family is attempting to sell, and—for two months—refunds of the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC)).

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

INCOME LIMITS

Present law

Gross family income limit: 185% of the State standard of need.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

EARNINGS

Present law

Mandatory disregard: during first 4 months of a job, $120 and one-third, plus child care costs up to a limit; next 8 months, $120 plus child care; after 12 months, $90 plus child care.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT

Present law

Mandatory disregard: advance EITC payments must be disregarded.

House bill

Repeals mandatory EITC disregard (a provision of AFDC law). States would set policy about treatment of EITC payments by block grant program.

Senate amendment

Provision is identical to House position.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

CHILD SUPPORT

Present law

Mandatory disregard: first $50 monthly in child support collections is passed through to the family. In some States, child support payments that fill some or all of the gap between payment and need standard must be ignored.

House bill

In determining a family's eligibility and payment amount under the block grant, a State may not disregard child support collected by the State and distributed to the family.

Senate amendment

State option. Repeals required disregard of the first $50 monthly in child support collections distributed to the family (a provision of AFDC law).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

OTHER CASH AID

Present law

AFDC benefits may not be paid to a recipient of old-age assistance (predecessor to Supplemental Security Income (SSI) and now available only in Puerto Rico, Guam, and the U.S. Virgin Islands), SSI, or AFDC foster care payments.

House bill

If block grant funds are used to provide payments to a recipient of old-age assistance, SSI, or payments under the Child Protection Block grant, a State may not disregard these other payments in determining a family's eligibility for and payment amount from the block grant.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

H. VARIOUS PROCEDURAL AND POLICY RULES

STATEWIDE REQUIREMENT

Present law

AFDC must be available in all political subdivisions, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Under the State plan, a State must outline how it intends to conduct a family assistance program "designed to serve all political subdivisions in the State."

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

SINGLE STATE AGENCY

Present law

Single agency must administer or supervise administration of the plan.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The State's Chief Executive Officer must certify which State agency or agencies are responsible for administration and supervision of the program for the fiscal year.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that public and local agencies must have 60 days to submit comments.

STATE COST SHARING

Present law

State must share in program costs.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

For the basic temporary assistance block grant, for 4 years, for "contingency" funds, and for additional child care funds (beyond those earmarked in the block grant) States must share in program costs.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, with modifications to the amount of required state cost sharing.

AID TO ALL ELIGIBLES

Present law

State must furnish aid to eligible persons with reasonable promptness and give opportunity to make application to all wishing it.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

FAIR HEARING

Present law

State must give fair hearing opportunity to person whose claim is denied or not acted upon promptly.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

ADMINISTRATIVE METHODS

Present law

State must adopt administrative methods found necessary by the Secretary.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Zero Benefit Below $10, Rounding Benefits

Present law

State cannot pay AFDC below $10 monthly and must round down to the next lower dollar both the need standard and the benefit.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Pre-Eligibility Fraud Detection

Present law

State must have measures to detect fraudulent applications for AFDC before establishment of eligibility.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Correction of Erroneous Payments

Present law

State must promptly correct overpayments and underpayments.

House Bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the Treasury Secretary, upon notification from a State that it has overpaid a former recipient of temporary cash assistance and has attempted unsuccessfully to collect the overpayment, to collect the sum from Federal tax refunds.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

Appeal Procedure (for States)

Present law

Current law (sec. 1116 of the Social Security Act) entitles a State to a reconsideration, which DHHS must grant upon request, of any disallowed reimbursement claim for an item or class of items. The section also provides for administrative and judicial review, upon petition of a State, of DHHS decisions about approval of State plans. At the option of a State, any plan amendment may be treated as the submission of a new plan.

House bill

Repeals reference to Title IV–A in section 1116.

Senate amendment

Requires the Secretary to notify the Governor of a State of any adverse decision or action under Title IV–A, including any decision about the State's plan or imposition of a penalty. Provides for administrative review by a Departmental Appeals Board within DHHS and requires a Board decision within 60 days after an appeal is filed. Provides for judicial review (by a United States district court) within 90 days after a final decision by the Board. The Amendment also repeals the reference to Title IV–A in section 1116.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

I. Quality Control/Audits

Present law

The Secretary must operate a quality control system to determine the amount of Federal matching funds to be disallowed, if any, because of erroneous payments. The law also prescribes penalties for payment error rates above the national average. AFDC payments to States are subject to audits conducted under the Single Audit Act [Ch. 75, Title 31, U.S.C.]

House bill

Family assistance block grants are subject to the Single Audit Act. If an audit conducted under this Act finds that a State has used block grant funds in violation of the law, its grant for the next year is to be reduced by that amount (but no quarterly payment is to be reduced by more than one-fourth).

Senate amendment

Requires a State to offset loss of Federal funds with its own, maintaining the full block grant level. Also, the penalty shall not be imposed if the State proves to the Secretary that the violation was not intentional, and if the State implements an approved corrective action plan. Each State must audit its cash block grant expenditures annually and submit a copy to the State legislature, Treasury Secretary and DHHS Secretary. The audit must be conducted by an entity that is independent from any agency administering activities under title IV–A. Further, the DHHS Secretary is to develop a quality assurance system of data collection and reporting.Also subject to the Single Audit Act.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding audits to review States' use of funds. See also Penalties, e.g. against States misusing funds and against States failing to meet work requirements.

J. Data Collection and Reporting

Reporting Requirements

Present law

States are required to report the average monthly number of families in each JOBS activity, their types, amounts spent per family, length of JOBS participation and the number of families aided with AFDC/JOBS child care services, the kinds of child care services provided, and sliding fee schedules. States that disallow AFDC for minor mothers in their own living quarters are required to report the number living in their parent's home or in another supervised arrangement. States also must report data (including numbers aided, types of families, how long aided, payments made) for families who receive transitional Medicaid benefits. DHHS collects data about demographic characteristics and financial circumstances of AFDC families from its National Integrated Quality Control System (NIQCS) and publishes State and national information that represents average monthly amounts for a fiscal year. The NIQCS uses monthly samples of AFDC cases.

House bill

States are required, not later than 6 months after the end of each fiscal year, to transmit to the Secretary the following aggregate information on families receiving block grant benefits during the fiscal year:

(a) the number of adults receiving assistance;

(b) the number of children receiving assistance and the average age of children;

(c) the employment status and average earnings of employed adults;

(d) the number of one-parent families in which the sole parent is a widow or widower, is divorced, is separated, or is never married;

(e) the age, race, educational attainment, and employment status of parents;

(f) the average assistance provided to families;

(g) whether, at the time of application, the families or anyone in the families receive benefits from the following public programs: (1) Housing (2) Food Stamps (3) Head Start (4) Job Training;

(h) the number of months the families have been on welfare during their current spell;

(i) the total number of months for which benefits have been provided to the families;

(j) data necessary to indicate whether the State is in compliance with the State's plan;

(k) the components of any employment and training activities, and the average monthly number of adults in each component; and

(l) the number of part-time and full-time job placements made by the program, the number of cases with reduced assistance, and the number of cases closed due to employment.

Senate amendment

States are required to make quarterly reports based on sample case records providing disaggregated data for the quality assurance system, including:

(a) age of adults and children (including pregnant women) in each family;

(b) marital and familial status of each family member (including whether family includes 2 parents and whether child is living with an adult relative other than a parent);

(c) gender, educational level, work experience, and race of each family head;

(d) health status of each family member (including whether any is seriously ill, disabled, or incapacitated and is being care for by another family member);

(e) type and amount of any benefit or assistance received, including amount of and reason for any benefit reduction, and if help is ended, whether this is because of employment, sanction, or time limit;

(f) any benefit or assistance received by a family member with respect to housing, food stamps, job training, or Head Start;

(g) number of months since the family's most recent application for aid, and if application was denied, the reason;

(h) number of times a family applied for and received aid from the cash block grant program and the number of months were received in each "spell" of assistance;

(i) employment status of adults in family (including hours worked and amount earned);

(j) date on which an adult family member began to engage in work, hours worked, work activity performed, amount of child care assistance, if any;

(k) number of persons in each family receiving, and the number not receiving, assistance, and the relationship of each person to the youngest child in the family;

(l) citizenship status of each family member;

(m) housing arrangement of each family member;

(n) amount of unearned income, child support; assets and other financial factors relevant to eligibility;

(o) location in the State of each recipient family; and

(p) any other data determined by Secretary to be necessary for efficient and effective administration.

States are required to report the following aggregated monthly data about families who received temporary family assistance for each month in the calendar quarter preceding the one in which the data are submitted, families applying for assistance in the preceding quarter, and families that became ineligible for aid during that quarter: (1) number of families, (2) number of adults in each family, (3) number of children in each family, and (4) number of families whose assistance ended because of employment, sanctions, or time limits.

The Secretary shall determine appropriate subsets of the data listed above that a State is required to submit regarding applicant and no-longer eligible families.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, except that provisions that make reference to "race" are dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

Authority of States to Use Estimates

Present law

The National Integrated Quality Control System (above) uses monthly samples of AFDC cases. JOBS regulations require States to submit a sample of monthly unaggregated case record data.

House bill

States may use scientifically acceptable sampling methods to estimate the data elements required for annual reports.

Senate amendment

The Secretary shall provide States with case sampling plans and data collection procedures deemed necessary for statistically valid estimates.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, and clarifies that the Secretary may, in the case of States that use sampling methods, challenge the sampling plan as scientifically invalid.

Other State Reporting Requirements

Present law

Regulations require each State to submit quarterly estimates of the total amount (and the Federal share) of expenditures for AFDC benefits and administration.

Required quarterly reports include estimates of the Federal share of child support collections made by the State; see above for transitional child care and Medicaid reporting requirements.

House bill

The report submitted by the State each fiscal year must also include:

(1) a statement of the percentage of the funds paid to the State that are used to cover administrative costs or overhead;

(2) a statement of the total amount expended by the State during the fiscal year on programs for needy families; and

(3) the number of noncustodial parents in the State who participated in work activities as defined in the bill during the fiscal year.

Senate amendment

The report required by a State for a fiscal year must include:

(1) a statement of the total amount and percentage of Federal funds paid to the State under Title IV–A that are used for administrative costs or overhead;

(2) a statement of the total amount of State funds expended on programs for the needy;

(3) the number of noncustodial parents who participated in work activities during the fiscal year;

(4) the total amount of child support collected by the State IV-D agency on behalf of a family in the cash assistance program;

(5) the total amount spent by the State for child care under Title IV-A, with a description of the types of care, including transitional care for families who no longer receive assistance because of work and "at-risk" care for persons who otherwise might become eligible for assistance; and

(6) the total amount spent by the State for providing transitional services to a family that no longer receive assistance because of employment, along with a description of those services.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment as follows:

(1) administrative funds—follow House bill;

(2) State spending—follow House bill;

(3) noncustodial parent—follow House bill;

(4) child support—follow House bill;

(5) child care—follow House bill; and

(6) transition services—follow Senate amendment.

K. Reports Required by DHHS Secretary

Present Law

The law requires the DHHS Secretary to report promptly to Congress the results of State reevaluations of AFDC need standards and payment standards required at least every 3 years. The Secretary is to annually compile and submit to Congress annual State reports on at-risk child care. The Family Support Act required the Secretary to submit recommendations regarding JOBS performance standards by a deadline that was extended.

House bill

The DHHS Secretary must report to Congress within 6 months on the status of automatic data processing systems in the States and on what would be required to produce a system capable of tracking participants in public programs over time and checking case records across States to determine whether some individuals are participating in public programs in more than one State. The report should include a plan for building on the current automatic data processing system to produce a system capable of performing these funcitions as well as an estimate of the time required to put the system in place and the cost of the system.

The DHHS Secretary must report to Congress within 6 months on the status of automatic data processing systems in the States and on what would be required to produce a system capable of tracking participants in public programs over time and checking case records across States to determine whether some individuals are participating in public programs in more than one State. The report should include a plan for building on the current automatic data processing system to produce a system capable of performing these functions as well as an estimate of the time required to put the system in place and the cost of the system. The DHHS Secretary must, to the extent feasible, produce and publish for each State, county, and local unit of government for which data have been compiled in the most recent census of population, and for each school district, data about the incidence of poverty. Data shall include, for each school district, the number of children age 5 to 17 inclusive, in families below the poverty level, and, for each State and county for which data have been compiled by the Census Bureau, the number of persons aged 65 or older. Data shall be published for each State, county and local unit of government in 1996 and at least every second year thereafter; and for each school district, in 1998 and at least every second year thereafter. Data may be produced by means of sampling, estimation, or any other method that the Secretary determines will produce current, comprehensive, and reliable information. If reliable data could not be otherwise produced, the Secretary is given authority to aggregate school districts. The DHHS Secretary is to consult with the Secretary of Education in producing data about school districts. If unable to produce and publish the required data, the Secretary must submit a report to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House not later than 90 days before the start of the following year, enumerating each government or school district excluded and giving the reason for the exclusion.

The Secretary must, in cooperation with the States, study and analyze measures of program outcomes (as an alternative to minimum participation rates) for evaluating the success of State block grant programs in helping recipients leave welfare. The study must include a determination of whether outcomes measures should be applied on a State or national basis and a preliminary assessment of the job placement performance bonus established in the Act. The Secretary must report findings to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means not later than September 30, 1998.

The Secretary is to report by Dec. 31, 1997, to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Economic and Educational Opportunities of the House and the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, and the Special Committee on Aging of the Senate setting forth findings of a study on the effects of welfare changes made by the Act on grandparents who are primary caregivers for their grandchildren. The study is to identify barriers to participation in public programs by grandparent caregivers, including inconsistent policies, standards, and definitions of programs providing medical aid, cash, child support enforcement, and foster care.

Not later than March 31, 1998, and each fiscal year thereafter, the Secretary shall send Congress a report describing:

(1) whether States are meeting minimum participation rates and whether they are meeting objectives of increasing employment and earnings of needy families, increasing child support collections, and decreasing out-of-wedlock pregnancies and child poverty;

(2) demographic and financial characteristics of applicant families, recipient families, and those no longer ineligible for temporary family assistance;

(3) characteristics of each State program of temporary family assistance; and

(4) trends in employment and earnings of needy families with minor children.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment as follows:

(1) data processing—follow House bill;

(2) poverty—follow Senate amendment;

(3) alternatives—the provision in the Senate amendment was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974);

(4) grandparents—follow House bill; and

(5) State progress—follows Senate amendment with the modification that in evaluating innovative approaches to reducing welfare dependency, attention should be paid to welfare recipients who suffer from substance abuse or addiction.

L. Research, Evaluations, and National Studies

Present law

The law authorizes $5 million annually for cooperative research or demonstration projects, such as those relating to the prevention and reduction of dependency.

House bill

The Secretary may conduct research on the effects, costs, benefits, and caseloads of State programs funded under this part. The Secretary may assist the States in developing, and shall evaluate (using random assignment to experimental and control groups to the maximum extent feasible), innovative approaches to employing recipients of cash aid under this part. The Secretary may conduct studies of the welfare caseloads of States operating welfare reform programs. The Secretary shall develop innovative methods of disseminating information on research, evaluations, and studies.

Senate amendment

The Secretary may conduct research on the effects, benefits, and costs of operating different State programs of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families, including time limits for eligibility. The research shall include studies on the effects of different programs and the operation of the programs on welfare dependency, illegitimacy, teen pregnancy, employment rates, child well-being, and any other appropriate area. The Secretary may assist States in developing, and shall evaluate innovative approaches for reducing welfare dependency and increasing the well-being of minor children, using random assignments in these evaluations "to the maximum extent feasible."

The Secretary shall develop innovative methods of disseminating information on research, evaluations, and studies, including ways to facilitate sharing of information via computers and other technologies. The Senate amendment makes a State eligible to receive funding to evaluate its family assistance program if it submits an evaluation design determined by the Secretary to be rigorous and likely to yield credible and useful information. The State must pay 10 percent of the study's cost, unless the Secretary waives this rule. For these State-initiated evaluation studies of the family assistance program (and for costs of operating and evaluating demonstration projects begun under the AFDC waiver process) the amendment authorizes to be appropriated, and appropriates, a total of $20 million annually for 5 years (FYs 1996-2000).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that $15 million is appropriated annually for this purpose.

M. WAIVERS

Present law

The law authorizes DHHS Secretary to waive specified requirements of State AFDC plans in order to enable a State to carry out any experimental, pilot, or demonstration project that the Secretary judges likely to assist in promoting the program's objective. (Sec. 1115 of Social Security Act) Some 34 States have received waivers from the Clinton Administration for welfare reforms of their own.

House bill

Repeals AFDC. Also, expressly repeals authority for waiver of specified provisions of AFDC law (Sec. 402, State plan requirements, and Sec. 403, terms of payment to States) for demonstration projects.

Senate amendment

Provides that terms of AFDC waivers in effect, or approved, as of October 1, 1995, will continue until their expiration, except that beginning with fiscal year 1996 a State operating under a waiver shall receive the block grant described under Section 403 in lieu of any other payment provided for in the waiver. The amendment gives States the option to terminate waivers before their expiration, but requires that early-ended projects be summarized. The amendment provides that a State that submits a request to end a waiver by January 1, 1996, or 90 days after adjournment of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of enactment, shall be held harmless for accrued cost neutrality liabilities incurred under the waiver.

The Secretary is directed to encourage any State now operating a waiver to continue the project and to evaluate its result or effect. The amendment allows a State to elect to continue one or more individual waivers.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

N. Studies by the Census Bureau

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Census Bureau must expand the Survey of Income and Program Participation to evaluate the impact of welfare reforms made by this title on a random national sample of recipients and, as appropriate, other low-income families. The study should focus on the impact of welfare reform on children and families, and should pay particular attention to the issues of out-of-wedlock birth, welfare dependency, the beginning and end of welfare spells, and the causes of repeat welfare spells. Ten million dollars per year for 4 years in entitlement funds are authorized for this study.

Senate amendment

Expansion of SIPP is identical to House provision.

In addition, the Secretary of Commerce shall expand the Census Bureau's question (for the decennial census and mid-decade census) concerning households with both grandparents and their grandchildren so as to distinguish between households in which a grandparent temporarily provides a home and those where the grandparent serves as primary caregiver.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding the expansion of SIPP to evaluate welfare programs. The provision in the Senate amendment regarding census data on grandparents as caregivers was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

O. SERVICES FROM CHARITABLE, RELIGIOUS, OR PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS

Present law

The Child Care and Development Block Grant Act prohibits use of any financial assistance provided through any grant or contract for any sectarian purpose or activity. In general, it requires religious nondiscrimination, but it does allow a sectarian organization to require employees to adhere to its religious tenets and teachings.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Authorizes States to administer and provide family assistance services (and services under Supplemental Security Income and public housing) through contracts with charitable, religious, or private organizations. Authorizes States to pay recipients by means of certificates, vouchers, or other forms of disbursement that are redeemable with these private organizations. States that religious organizations are eligible, on the same basis as any other private organization, to provide assistance as contractors or to accept certificates and vouchers so long as their programs "are implemented consistent with" the Establishment Clause of the Constitution. Stipulates that any religious organization with a contract to provide welfare services shall retain independence from all units of government and that such a religious organization (or one that redeems welfare certificates) may require employees who render service related to the contract or certificates to adhere to the religious tenets and teaching of the organization and to its rules, if any, regarding use of drugs or alcohol. Provides that, except as otherwise allowed by law, a religious organization administering the program may not discriminate against beneficiaries on the basis of religious belief, or refusal to participate in a religious practice. Requires States to provide an alternative provider for a beneficiary who objects to the religious character of the designated organization. Provides that no funds provided directly to institutions or organizations to provide services and administer programs shall be spent for sectarian worship or instruction, but does not apply this limitation to financial assistance in the form of certificates or vouchers, if the beneficiary may choose where the aid is redeemed.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

5. TRANSFERS

A. CHILD SUPPORT PENALTIES

Present law

If a State's child support plan fails to comply substantially with Federal requirements, the Secretary is to reduce its AFDC matching funds by percentages that rise for successive violations (Sec. 403(h) of the Social Security Act).

House bill

The provision for child support review penalties—loss of Federal payments for cash assistance—now found in 403(h) of part A of the Social Security Act is retained in the block grant.

Senate amendment

No provision. However, there is a penalty assessed against States for failure to enforce penalties requested by child support agency against recipients who do not cooperate in establishing paternity.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

B. ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR FAMILY SUPPORT

Present law

An Assistant Secretary for Family Support, appointed by the President by and with consent of the Senate, is to administer AFDC, child support enforcement, and the Jobs Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS) program.

House bill

The provision for an Assistant Secretary for Family Support now found in section 417 of Part A of the Social Security Act is retained in the block grant (as sec. 409), but modified to remove the reference to JOBS (which the House bill repeals).

Senate amendment

Identical provision placed in sec. 415.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

6. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section makes a series of technical amendments that conform the provisions of the House bill with various titles of the Social Security Act and provide for the repeal of Part F of Title IV (the JOBS program).

Senate amendment

This section makes a series of amendments that conform provisions of the Senate amendment with various titles of the Social Security Act.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with changes made as appropriate.

7. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO OTHER LAWS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section makes a series of technical amendments to conform provisions of the House bill to the Internal Revenue Code, the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987, the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, and the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988.

Senate amendment

Section 107 makes a series of amendments that conform provisions of the Senate amendment to the Food Stamp Act, the Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act, the National School Lunch Act, and the Child Nutrition Act.

Section 108 makes a series of amendments that conform provisions of the Senate amendment to the Unemployment Compensation Amendments of 1976, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, the House and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, the Social Security Amendments of 1967, the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988, the Higher Education Act of 1965, the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, Public Law 99-88, the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the Wagner-Peyser Act, the Job Training Partnership Act, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981, the Family Support Act of 1988, the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the Immigration and Nationality Act, the Head Start Act, and the School-to-Work Opportunities Act of 1994.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with changes made as appropriate.

8. CONTINUED APPLICATION OF CURRENT STANDARDS UNDER MEDICAID PROGRAM

Present law

States must continue Medicaid (or pay premiums for employer-provided health insurance) for 6 months to a family that loses AFDC eligibility because of hours of, or income from, work of the caretaker relative, or because of loss of the earned income disregard after 4 months of work. States must offer an additional 6 months of medical assistance, for which it may require a premium payment if the family's income after child care expenses is not above the poverty guideline. For extended medical aid, families must submit specified reports. States must continue Medicaid for 4 months to those who lose AFDC because of increased child or spousal support.

House bill

Although AFDC would be repealed, its standards would continue to be used by the Medicaid program. States would have to give Medicaid to families who would have received AFDC if it still existed as in effect on March 7, 1995. The frozen AFDC rules would govern Medicaid eligibility for both recipients and non-recipients of the new block grant funds, including those categorically ineligible for cash benefits.

Senate amendment

Same as House provision except for date at which AFDC rules would be "frozen" (June 1, 1995, rather than March 7, 1995). If an AFDC waiver (as of June 1, 1995) affects Medicaid eligibility, the State has the option to continue to apply the waiver in regard to Medicaid after the date when the waiver otherwise would end.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with the clarification that States will determine Medicaid eligibility for recipients of block grant assistance (in conformity with other pending Medicaid changes).

9. EFFECTIVE DATES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The amendments and repeals made by this title take effect on October 1, 1995. The authority to reduce assistance for certain families that include a child whose paternity is not established will begin 1 year after the effective date or, at the option of the State, 2 years after the effective date.

Amendments made by Title I (Block Grants for Temporary Assistance for Needy Families) shall not apply to powers, duties, functions, rights, claims, penalties, or obligations applicable to aid, or services provided (under AFDC) before the effective date of the Act. Nor shall amendments of the bill apply to administrative actions and proceedings commenced or authorized before the effective date of the bill.

Senate amendment

AFDC is repealed effective October 1, 1995. Family assistance block grant provisions also take effect October 1, 1995 (except for penalties, most of which are effective October 1, 1996), but expire on September 30, 2000. A State may continue to operate its AFDC program for 9 months, until June 30, 1996. If it does so, its fiscal year 1996 cash block grant under the new program shall be reduced by the amount of Federal matching funds received for that year for AFDC expenditures.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

10. MISCELLANEOUS

A. COUNTY AUTHORITY FOR DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the DHHS Secretary and the Agriculture Secretary jointly to enter into negotiations with all counties having a population greater than 500,000 that desire to conduct a demonstration project in which: (1) the county shall have the authority and duty to administer the operation of the family assistance program as if the county were considered a State; (2) the State shall pass through directly to the county the portion of the block grant that the State determines is attributable to the residents of the county; and (3) the project shall last 5 years.

To be eligible: (1) a county already must be administering the Title IV–A program; (2) must represent less than 25 percent of the State's total welfare caseload; and (3) the State must have more than one county with a population of greater than 500,000.

Not later than 6 months after the end of a county demonstration project, the two Secretaries shall send a report to Congress that includes a description of the project, its rules, and innovations (if any).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

B. COLLECTION OF OVERPAYMENTS FROM FEDERAL TAX REFUNDS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the Treasury Secretary, upon notification from a State that it has overpaid a former recipient of temporary cash assistance and has attempted unsuccessfully to collect the overpayment, to collect the sum from Federal tax refunds.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

C. TAMPER-PROOF SOCIAL SECURITY CARD

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the Commissioner of Social Security to develop a prototype of a counterfeit-resistant social security card. The card must be made of a durable, tamper-resistant material such as plastic or polyester, employ technologies that provide security features, and be developed so as to provide individuals with reliable proof of citizenship or legal resident alien status. The Commissioner is to report to Congress on the cost of issuing a tamper-proof card for all persons over a 3-, 5-, and 10-year period. Copies of the report, along with a facsimile of the prototype card, shall be submitted to the Committees on Ways and Means and Judiciary of the House and the Committees on Finance and Judiciary of the Senate within one year of enactment.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

D. DISCLOSURE OF RECEIPT OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires disclosure of specified public funds received by 501(c) organizations, which are non-profit and tax-exempt. When a 501(c) organization that accepts Federal funds under the Work Opportunity Act makes any communication that intends to promote public support or opposition to any governmental policy (Federal, State or local) through any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or any other type of general public advertising, the communication must state: "This was prepared and paid for by an organization that accepts taxpayer dollars".

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

E. PROJECTS TO EXPAND JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR CERTAIN LOW-INCOME INDIVIDUALS (JOLI)

Present law

The Family Support Act of 1988 (Sec. 505) directed the Secretary to enter into agreement with between 5 and 10 nonprofit organizations to conduct demonstrations to create job opportunities for AFDC recipients and other low-income persons. For these projects, $6.5 million was authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, 1990–1992.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Strikes the word "demonstration" from the description of these projects and converts them to grant status. It requires the Secretary to enter into agreements with nonprofit organizations to conduct projects to create job opportunities for recipients of family assistance and other persons with income below the poverty guideline. It authorizes appropriations of $25 million annually for these projects.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

F. DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS TO EXPAND USE OF SCHOOLS

Present law

The 21st Century Community Learning Centers Act (established by P.L. 103–382) makes available funds directly to rural or inner-city schools, or consortia of them, to act as centers for providing education and human resources services. Services allowed include: literacy education, parenting skills education, employment counseling, training and placement. The Elementary and Secondary Education Act includes a program called "Extended Time for Learning and Longer School Year," which supports local educational agencies' efforts to lengthen learning time. Grantees may engage other community members in these efforts.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Secretary of Education is required to make grants to not more than 5 States for demonstration grants to increase the number of hours when public school facilities are available for use. Schools selected must have a significant percentage of students receiving family assistance benefits. The longer hours are intended to enable volunteers and parents or professionals paid from other sources to teach, tutor, coach, organize, advise, or monitor students. Grants are intended also to make school facilities available for clubs, civic associations, Boy and Girl Scouts and other groups. The amendment authorizes $10 million annually (FYs 1996–2000) for grants plus $1 million annually for administration by the Secretary.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

G. SECRETARIAL SUBMISSION OF LEGISLATIVE PROPOSAL FOR TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Not later than 90 days after enactment of this Act, the Secretary must submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a legislative proposal providing for technical and conforming amendments.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

SUBTITLE B—SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME

CHAPTER 1—ELIGIBILITY RESTRICTIONS

1. DENIAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME BENEFITS BY REASON OF DISABILITY TO DRUG ADDICTS AND ALCOHOLICS

A. IN GENERAL

Present law

Individuals whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability are eligible to receive SSI cash benefits for up to three years if they meet SSI income and resource requirements. These recipients must have a representative payee, must participate in an approved treatment program when available and appropriate, and must allow their participation in a treatment program to be monitored. Medicaid benefits continue beyond the 3-year limit, as long as the individual remains disabled, unless the individual was expelled from SSI for failure to participate in a treatment program.

House bill

Under the House provision, an individual is not considered disabled if drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to his or her disability. Individuals with drug addiction and/or alcoholism who cannot qualify based on another disabling condition will not be eligible for SSI benefits.

Senate amendment

Identical to House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

B. REPRESENTATIVE PAYEE REQUIREMENTS

Present law

SSI law requires that the SSI payments of individuals whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability must be made to another individual, or an appropriate public or private organization (i.e., the individual's "representative payee") for the use and benefit of the individual or eligible spouse.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Under the Senate amendment, if a disabled person also has an alcoholism or drug addiction condition (as determined by the Commissioner of Social Security), their SSI checks must be sent to a representative payee.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with modification to require that a representative payee be appointed only in those cases in which the Commissioner determines that payment to a representative payee would serve the interest of the beneficiary because such individual also has an alcoholism or drug addiction condition that prevents such individual from managing his or her own benefits.

C. TREATMENT REFERRALS FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH AN ALCOHOLISM OR DRUG ADDICTION CONDITION

Present law

Federal law requires SSI recipients whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability to undergo appropriate treatment, if it is available.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires the Commissioner of Social Security to refer to the appropriate State agency administering the State plan for substance abuse services any disabled SSI recipient who is identified as having an alcoholism or drug addiction condition. Any individual who refuses to accept the referred services without good cause is no longer eligible for SSI benefits.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification to require that only those SSI disability recipients who are unable to manage their own benefits as a result of an alcoholism or drug addiction condition be referred to the State agencies administering such treatment. While additional treatment funds are being provided to States in a separate provision, it is not the intent of the conferees that States are required to provide treatment.

Although this legislation eliminates drug addiction and alcoholism as the basis for awarding disability benefits to an SSI claimant, the conferees believe it is important that SSI recipients with severe drug or alcohol abuse continue to be referred to treatment sources. While the conferees do not expect that the Commissioner will routinely inquire in all representative payee cases whether drug addiction or alcoholism causes an individual's inability to manage his or her own affairs, it is expected that whenever there is any indication that this may be the case, the Commissioner will investigate to determine whether referral is appropriate.

D. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

E. FUNDING OF CERTAIN PROGRAMS FOR DRUG ADDICTS AND ALCOHOLICS

Present law

SSI cash benefits are limited to 3 years for recipients whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability. These individuals must undergo "appropriate substance abuse treatment." While the Social Security Administration currently contracts with agencies for referral, monitoring and reporting of compliance with treatment, it does not pay for treatment. Medicaid benefits are to continue beyond the 3-year limit, as long as the individual remains disabled, unless the individual was expelled from SSI for noncompliance with treatment.

House bill

For four years beginning with fiscal year 1997, $100 million of the savings realized from denying cash SSI payments and Medicaid coverage to individuals whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability will be targeted to drug treatment and drug abuse research. Each year, $95 million will be expended through the Federal Capacity Expansion Program (CEP) to expand drug treatment availability and $5 million will be allocated to the National Institute on Drug Abuse to be expended solely on the medication development project to improve drug abuse and drug treatment research.

Senate amendment

For two years beginning with fiscal year 1997, $50 million will be spent to fund additional drug (including alcohol) treatment programs and services through Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Block Grant. The conferees expect that States will use funds made available under this provision to provide treatment to current and former SSI recipients as their first priority.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

F. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

This section of the bill becomes effective on October 1, 1995, and applies with respect to months beginning on or after that date.

Senate amendment

Generally, changes apply to applicants for benefits for months beginning on or after the date of enactment. An individual receiving benefits on the date of enactment whose eligibility would end would continue to be eligible for benefits until January 1, 1997. The Commissioner of Social Security shall notify individuals losing eligibility within three months of the date of enactment.

In addition, in the case of an individual with an alcoholism or drug addiction condition who is receiving SSI benefits on the date of enactment, the representative payee requirement will apply on or after the first continuing disability review occurring after enactment. For recipients with an addiction who are over the age of 65, the Commissioner will determine appropriate representative payee requirements.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification that the referral to treatment requirement for an individual with an alcoholism or drug addiction condition receiving benefits on the date of enactment will apply on or after the first continuing disability review occurring after enactment.

Reapplication

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Individuals receiving SSI benefits on the date of enactment who are notified of their termination of eligibility and who desire to reapply for benefits must do so within four months after the date of enactment. The Commissioner of Social Security will determine within one year after the date of enactment the eligibility of individuals who reapply.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with technical modification.

2. DENIAL OF SSI BENEFITS FOR 10 YEARS TO INDIVIDUALS FOUND TO HAVE FRAUDULENTLY MISREPRESENTED RESIDENCE IN ORDER TO OBTAIN BENEFITS SIMULTANEOUSLY IN 2 OR MORE STATES

Refer to Title I.

3. DENIAL OF SSI BENEFITS FOR FUGITIVE FELONS AND PROBATION AND PAROLE VIOLATIONS

Refer to Title I.

CHAPTER 2—BENEFITS FOR DISABLED CHILDREN

1. DEFINITION AND ELIGIBILITY RULES

A. DEFINITION OF CHILDHOOD DISABILITY

Comparable Severity Repealed

Present law

A needy individual under age 18 is determined eligible for SSI "if he suffers from any medically determinable physical or mental impairment of comparable severity" with that of an adult considered work disabled and otherwise eligible for SSI benefits.

House bill

The "comparable severity" test in statute for determining disability of children (defined as individuals under 18) is repealed.

Senate amendment

Similar to the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

DISABILITY DEFINITION

Present law

There is no definition of childhood disability in the statute. Under current disability evaluation procedures, to be found disabled, a child must have a medically determinable physical or mental impairment that substantially reduces his or her ability to independently and effectively engage in age-appropriate activities. This impairment must be expected to result in death or to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months.

House bill

Eligibility, as determined by the Commissioner of Social Security, for cash benefits or new medical or non-medical services described below will be based solely on: (1) meeting the non-disability-related requirement for eligibility; (2) meeting or equalling the current Listing of Impairments set forth in the Code of Federal Regulations (i.e., the Listing which is currently in regulations is to be codified in statute); and (3) being a disabled SSI recipient in the month prior to this provision's effective date or being in a hospital, skilled nursing facility, residential treatment facility, intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded, or otherwise would be placed in such a facility if the child were not receiving personal assistance necessitated by the impairment. Personal assistance refers to assistance with activities of daily living such as eating and toileting.

Senate amendment

Adds a new statutory definition of childhood disability. An individual under the age of 18 is considered disabled for the purposes of this section if the individual has a medically determinable physical or mental impairment, which results in marked and severe functional limitations, and which can be expected to result in death or which has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with technical modification and provides that the Commissioner of Social Security shall submit for review to the committees of jurisdiction in the Congress any final regulation with supporting documentation pertaining to the eligibility of individuals under age 18 for SSI benefits at least 45 days before the effective date of such regulation.

By this definition, the conferees intend that only needy children with severe disabilities be eligible for children's SSI and that the Listing and other disability determination regulations as modified by the conference agreement properly reflect the severity of disability contemplated by the statutory definition. In those areas of the Listing that involve domains of functioning, the conferees expect no less than two marked limitations in no fewer than two domains or extreme limitations in at least one domain as the standard for qualification. The conferees are also aware that the Social Security Administration uses the term "severe" to often mean "other than minor" in an initial screening procedure for disability determination and in other places. The conferees, however, use the term "severe" in its common sense meaning.

The conferees do not intend to suggest by this definition of childhood disability that every child need be especially evaluated for functional limitations, or that this definition creates a supposition for any such examination. Under current procedures for writing individual listings, level of functioning is an explicit consideration in deciding which impairment, with what medical or other findings, are of sufficient severity to be included in the Listing. Nonetheless, the conferees do not intend to limit the use of functional assessments and functional information, if reflecting sufficient severity and are otherwise appropriate.

B. CHANGES TO CHILDHOOD SSI REGULATIONS

Reliance on "Listing of Impairments"

Present law

Under the disability determination process for children, individuals whose impairments do not meet or equal the "Listing of Impairments" in Federal regulations are subject to an "Individualized Functional Assessment (IFA)". This assessment examines whether the child can engage in age-appropriate activities effectively. If the child cannot, he or she is determined disabled.

House bill

The Commissioner of Social Security must annually report to Congress on the Listings and recommend any needed revisions. Individualized functional assessments are no longer grounds for determination of disability.

Senate amendment

The Commissioner of Social Security shall discontinue the individualized functional assessment for children set forth in the Code of Federal Regulations.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees agree that a significant amount of the growth of the children's SSI program resulted from regulations issued in 1991 by the Social Security Administration establishing the individualized functional assessment which liberalized program eligibility criteria beyond Congressional intent. Children with modest conditions or impairments were made eligible for SSI due to the individualized functional assessment, and therefore should not be eligible for SSI benefits.

MULTIPLE REFERENCES TO "MALADAPTIVE BEHAVIOR" ELIMINATED

Present law

Under the disability determination process for children, the Social Security Administration first determines if a child meets or equals the Listings of Impairments. Under the Listings that relate to mental disorders, maladaptive behavior may be scored twice, in domains of social functioning and of personal/behavior functioning.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the Commissioner of Social Security to eliminate references in the Listing to maladaptive behavior among medical criteria for evaluation of mental and emotional disorders in the domain of personal/behavioral function.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

C. AMOUNT OF BENEFITS

Present law

A child who is determined to be disabled and who is eligible on the basis of his income and resources shall be paid benefits. If the child lives at home, the parents' financial resources are deemed available to the child. If the same child is institutionalized, after the first month away from home only the child's own financial resources are deemed to be available for the child's care. The child may then qualify for a reduced ("personal needs allowance") SSI benefit and for Medicaid coverage. Because of these "deeming" rules, some children who could have been cared for at home might remain in institutions because, if they were to return home, they would lose Medicaid benefits. Medicaid "waivers" allow States to disregard the deeming rule, provide Medicaid coverage, and pay for support services to help families keep children at home.

House bill

Children may be eligible for cash SSI payments in one of three circumstances:

(1) if a child who is currently (defined as during the month prior to the first month for which this provision takes effect) receiving cash SSI payments by reason of disability will continue to be eligible for cash SSI benefits if the child has an impairment that meets or equals an impairment specified in the Listing of Impairments. Children receiving cash benefits under the grandfather provision whose financial eligibility is suspended would continue to receive cash benefits if financial eligibility is restored;

(2) for all other children, a child may only receive cash SSI payments if the child has an impairment which meets or equals an impairment specified in the Listings of Impairments cited above, and is either in a hospital, skilled nursing facility, residential treatment facility, intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded, or otherwise would be placed in such a facility if the child were not receiving personal assistance necessitated by the impairment. Personal assistance refers to assistance with activities of daily living such as eating and toileting; and

(3) if a child who is overseas as a dependent of a member of the U.S. Armed Forces and who is eligible for block grant services but not eligible for cash benefits under the new criteria shall be eligible for cash benefits. Cash benefits cease when the child returns to the United States.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows a modified version of the House bill. Once an eligible child is determined to meet the definition of disability, the amount of the individual's cash benefit will be based on whether the child meets the newly developed criteria for needing personal assistance enabling the child to remain with their family at home. This criteria is as follows:

For a child under age 6—such individual has a medical impairment that severely limits the individual's ability to function in a manner appropriate to individuals of the same age and who without special personal assistance would require specialized care outside the individual's home; or

For a child age 6 or over—such individual requires personal care assistance with: (a) at least two activities of daily living, (b) continual 24-hour supervision or monitoring to avoid causing injury or harm to self or others, or (c) the administration of medical treatment; and who without such assistance would require full-time or part-time specialized care outside the individual's home.

The conferees have provided a different definition of the eligibility for children under age 6 and over age 6 because of the differing expectations of age appropriate behavior for children above and below this age. As described below, the conferees have requested the Commissioner of Social Security to undertake a study on ways to improve these definitions and the disability determination process.

Children with disabilities meeting this criteria will receive 100 percent of the benefit amount provided by current law. Disabled children who do not meet this criteria will receive seventy-five percent of the benefit amount provided by current law. The conferees note that the SSI benefit under either tier is very generous. In 1995, the average SSI benefit for a child recipient is $5,040. Seventy-five percent of that benefit would be $3,780. Both the maximum children's SSI benefit or seventy-five percent of the maximum benefit is greater than the maximum 1995 AFDC benefit for a family of three in many States.

The conferees acknowledge that many families of disabled children incur expenses beyond those by families of nondisabled children. However, the conferees agree that the extra expenses related to a child's disability vary widely depending on the nature and degree of disability and the availability of Federal, State, and local health care and/or disability programs. In order to reduce the inequity of the current system which provides one benefit level to all families without regard to additional disability-related financial needs, the conferees agree to establish a two-tiered benefit system. The higher tier is intended for families of children with the most severe disabilities who require full or part-time personal assistance which would prevent a parent from working full-time or which would require the presence of a personal assistance provider.

The conferees also believe that Congress should investigate whether the unmet needs of families of disabled children could be better and more efficiently met through services, such as mental health treatment or purchase of items of assistive technology, rather than cash payments. In the 23 years since the SSI program was created, substantial new Federal programs have been authorized to assist children with disabilities, including Federal, State and local funding of special education and expansion of Medicaid. The impact of these programs on cash needs of children with disabilities merits further investigation by Congress. In order to have better data on the cost incurred by a family with a disabled child, the conferees request that the General Accounting Office undertake a study of the extra expenses incurred by such families with a child receiving SSI benefits, including what expenses are covered by other benefits such children receive through Federal, State, and local programs, and the lost income to families because of care they provide their child.

Lastly, the conferees remain concerned about the adequacy of the Listing of Impairments. The conferees strongly urge the Social Security Administration to contract with the National Academy of Sciences, or another independent entity, to conduct a study aimed at improving both the process of disability determination and the validity of the Listing of Impairments in light of current scientific knowledge.

D. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Changes apply to benefits for months beginning ninety or more days after enactment, without regard to whether regulations have been issued. Recipients of SSI cash benefits during the month of enactment who would lose eligibility under the House bill may continue to receive SSI benefits for up to 6 months.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment changes apply to applicants for months beginning on or after the date of enactment, without regard to whether regulations have been issued. However, the Commissioner must issue necessary regulations within two months of enactment. For child SSI recipients who were eligible for SSI on the date of enactment but who would lose eligibility under the Senate amendment, the changes would not take effect until January 1, 1997. The Commissioner is to redetermine the eligibility of these persons within one year of enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification that the effective date for the two-tiered benefit system is January 1, 1997, for current recipients and new applications. The conferees agreed to require the Commissioner to report to Congress within 180 days regarding the progress made in implementing the SSI children's provisions, however this provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

NOTICE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Not later than one month after the date of enactment, the Commissioner must notify individuals whose eligibility for SSI benefits will terminate.

Senate amendment

Within three months of enactment, the Commissioner must notify individuals whose eligibility for SSI benefits will terminate.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

NEW PROVISION FOR ADMINISTRATIVE FUNDS FOR THE SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conferees recognize that implementation of the SSI provisions by the Social Security Administration is a big job and have provided $300 million to assist the agency meeting their obligations. The conferees are very mindful of the problems encountered by the Social Security Administration in the early 1980s in conducting a large number of redeterminations and continuing disability reviews, and strongly urge the Commissioner to conduct the redeterminations and continuing disability reviews required in this bill in an orderly and careful manner.

BLOCK GRANTS TO STATES FOR CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES

ENTITLEMENT TO GRANTS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Each State that meets the requirements listed below for fiscal year 1997 or later years shall be entitled to receive a grant equal to the State's allotment for that fiscal year. The Commissioner of Social Security will make block grants to States for the purpose of providing specified medical and non-medical benefits for children who have an impairment which meets or equals an impairment specified in the Listing of Impairments. Grants are an entitlement to eligible States on behalf of qualifying children, not an entitlement to any such child.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

REQUIREMENTS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Each State must establish a program to provide block grant services. The State will submit to the Commissioner an application for the grant. In the application, the State agrees it must spend grant funds to provide authorized services designed to meet the unique needs of qualifying children. The application must also contain information, agreements, and assurances required by the Commissioner. In providing authorized services, States will make every reasonable effort to obtain payment for the services from other Federal or State programs that provide such services. States will expend the grant only to the extent that payments from other programs are not available.

In order to receive a block grant under this section, the State must agree to maintain non-Federal spending for any purposes designed to meet the needs of qualifying children with physical or mental impairments.

States have discretion to select the purposes for which the State expends non-Federal amounts, within the purposes of providing for the needs of qualifying children. The Consumer Price Index will be used to adjust for inflation in judging whether the State meets the maintenance of effort requirements in future years.

No child who has an impairment which meets or equals an impairment specified in the Listing of Impairments will be denied the opportunity to apply for services and to have his or her case assessed to determine the child's service needs.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

AUTHORITY OF STATE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The following decisions are in the discretion of a State:

(1) which authorized services to provide;

(2) who among qualifying children receives services; and

(3) the number of services provided a qualifying child and their duration.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

AUTHORIZED SERVICES

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The Commissioner shall issue regulations designating the purposes for which grants may be spent by States. The Commissioner must ensure that services on the list are designed to meet the unique needs of qualifying children that arise from their physical and mental impairments, that both medical and non-medical services are included, and that cash assistance is not available through the block grant.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Necessary regulations are to be issued, but payments under the block grant must begin not later than January 1, 1997, regardless of whether final rules have been issued.

The value of the authorized services provided through the block grant cannot be taken into account in determining eligibility for, or the amount of, benefits or services under any Federal or Federally-assisted program. For the purposes of Medicaid, each qualifying child shall be considered to be a recipient of Supplemental Security Income benefits under this title.

States are encouraged to use an existing delivery system to administer block grant services.

States that do not participate in offering block grant services are not permitted to use social security numbers in the administration of any tax, public assistance, driver's license or motor vehicle registration law. (Because of the extreme duress this would impose on States, this is regarded as effectively a "requirement.")

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

DEFINITIONS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

A State's "Allotment" of block grant funds equals the product of 75 percent of the average cash SSI benefit in the State and the number of children in the State receiving non-cash SSI benefits under this section.

"Authorized Service" means each service authorized by the Commissioner.

A "Qualifying Child" means an individual under 18 years of age who is eligible for cash benefits under this title by reason of disability; or an individual under 18 years of age who is eligible for SSI non-cash benefits as described above. The Commissioner will determine whether individuals meet the criteria to be eligible for block grant services.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Block grants are available to eligible States beginning in fiscal year 1997.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

2. ELIGIBILITY REDETERMINATIONS AND CONTINUING DISABILITY REVIEWS

A. CONTINUING DISABILITY REVIEWS FOR CERTAIN CHILDREN

Present law

Federal law requires that SSI recipients be subject to a Continuing Disability Review (CDR) at least once every 3 years, except for recipients whose impairments are judged to be permanent. The Commissioner is required to conduct periodic CDRs of at least 100,000 disabled SSI recipients per year for a period of 3 years (i.e., fiscal year 1996–1998) and report to Congress on CDRs for disabled SSI recipients no later than October 1, 1998.

House bill

In addition to the provisions of current law, at least once every 3 years the Commissioner must conduct CDRs for SSI benefits of children receiving benefits. For children who are eligible for benefits and whose medical condition is not expected to improve, the requirement to perform such reviews does not apply.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill, with minor differences in wording. At the time of review the parent or guardian must present evidence demonstrating that the recipient is and has been receiving appropriate treatment for his or her disability.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with modification requiring evidence of needed treatment for continued representative payee status.

B. DISABILITY REVIEW REQUIRED FOR SSI RECIPIENTS WHO ATTAIN 18 YEARS OF AGE

Present law

Current law also specifies that the Commissioner must reevaluate under adult disability criteria the eligibility of at least one-third of SSI children who turn age 18 in each of the fiscal years 1996, 1997, and 1998 (the CDR must be completed before these children reach age 19) and report to Congress no later than October 1, 1998, on CDRs for disabled children.

House bill

The eligibility for all children qualifying for SSI benefits must be redetermined using the adult criteria within one year after turning 18 years of age. The review will be considered a substitute for any other review required under the changes made in this section.

Not later than October 1, 1998, the Commissioner of Social Security must submit to the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance a report on disability reviews for children enrolled in SSI.

The "minimum number of reviews" and the "sunset" provisions of section 207 of the Social Security Independence and Program Improvements Act of 1994 are eliminated.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill with differences in wording. Like the House bill, the Senate amendment repeals section 207 of the Social Security Independence and Program Improvements Act of 1994.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill with modification that the Commissioner does not have to submit a report to Congress on disability reviews for SSI children.

C. DISABILITY REVIEW REQUIRED FOR LOW BIRTH WEIGHT BABIES WHO HAVE RECEIVED SSI BENEFITS FOR 12 MONTHS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

A review for continuing disability must be performed for all children qualifying for SSI due to low birth weight when the child has received benefits for 12 months.

Senate amendment

A review must be conducted 12 months after the birth of a child whose low birth weight is a contributing factor to the child's disability. At the time of review, the parent or guardian must present evidence demonstrating that the recipient is and has been receiving appropriate treatment for his or her disability.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification requiring evidence of needed treatment for continued representative payee status.

D. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

This section applies to benefits for months beginning ninety or more days after enactment, regardless of whether regulations have been issued.

Senate amendment

Applies to benefits for months beginning on or after the date of enactment, regardless of whether regulations have been issued.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

3. ADDITIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY REQUIREMENTS

A. Disposal of Assets

Present law

No provision. There is a transfer of assets provision in Medicaid law that is similar to H.R. 4 provision (Sec. 1917(c) of the Social Security Act).

House bill

The House bill delays eligibility for any child applicant whose parents or guardians, in order to qualify a child for benefits, dispose of assets for less than fair market value within 36 months of the date of application. The provision stipulates that any assets in a trust in which the child (i.e., parent or representative payee) has control shall be considered assets of the child and subject to the 36-month "look-back" rule. The delay (in months) is equal to the amount of assets divided by the SSI standard benefit.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with technical modifications.

Requirement to Establish Account

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

At the request of the representative payee (i.e., the parent), the Commissioner of Social Security may pay any lump sum payment for the benefit of a child into a dedicated savings account for the purpose of covering the costs of needs related to the child's disability and/or increasing the child's independence. The dedicated savings account could only be used to purchase education and job skills training, special equipment or housing modifications related to the child's disability, and appropriate therapy and rehabilitation. The funds in these accounts would not be counted as resources in determining SSI eligibility. This provision would take effect upon enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with modification requiring the dedicated savings account (instead of it being optional at the request of the representative payee), expanding the list of allowable expenses, and requiring the Commissioner to establish a system for accountability monitoring.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The House bill makes a number of conforming amendments, reflecting the addition of non-cash SSI benefits as described above.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate Amendment (i.e., no provision).

IMPROVEMENTS TO DISABILITY EVALUATIONS FOR CHILDREN

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment directs the Commissioner of Social Security, within sixty days of enactment, to issue a request for comments in the Federal Register regarding improvements in the disability evaluation and determination procedures for children under age 18. The Commissioner must review the comments and issue regulations implementing changes within 18 months after enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (i.e., no provision).

TEMPORARY ELIGIBILITY FOR CASH BENEFITS FOR POOR DISABLED CHILDREN RESIDING IN STATES APPLYING ALTERNATIVE INCOME ELIGIBILITY STANDARDS UNDER MEDICAID

Present law

States generally are required to provide Medicaid coverage for recipients of SSI. However, States may use more restrictive eligibility standards for Medicaid than those for SSI if they were using those standards on January 1, 1972 (before implementation of SSI). States that have chosen to apply at least one more restrictive standard are known as "section 209(b)" States, after the section of the Social Security Amendments of 1972 (P.L. 92–603) that established the option. These States may vary in their definition of disability, or in their standards related to income or resources. There are 12 section 209(b) States: Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, and Virginia.

House bill

The House bill provides for temporary eligibility for cash SSI benefits (through the end of fiscal year 1996) for children who live in States that apply alternative income eligibility standards under Medicaid (also known as "209(b)" States).

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

4. REDUCTION OF CASH BENEFITS PAYABLE TO INSTITUTIONALIZED CHILDREN WHOSE MEDICAL COSTS ARE COVERED BY PRIVATE INSURANCE

Present law

Federal law stipulates that when an individual enters a hospital or other medical institution in which more than half of the bill is paid by the Medicaid program, his or her monthly SSI benefit standard is reduced to $30 per month. This personal needs allowance is intended to pay for small personal expenses, with the cost of maintenance and medical care provided by the Medicaid program.

House bill

Cash SSI payments to institutionalized children would be reduced for those whose medical costs are covered by private insurance.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

ADDITIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY REQUIREMENTS FOR PARENTS OR GUARDIANS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires a disabled child's representative payee (usually the parent) to document expenditures. These expenditures would be subject to increased review by the Social Security Administration. Effective for benefits paid after enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (i.e., no provision).

5. REGULATIONS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The Commissioner of Social Security and the Secretary of HHS will prescribe necessary regulations within three months after enactment of this Act.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

EXAMINATION OF MENTAL LISTINGS USED TO DETERMINE ELIGIBILITY OF CHILDREN FOR SSI BENEFITS BY REASON OF DISABILITY

Present law

Section 202 of the Social Security Independence and Program Improvements Act of 1994 established a Childhood Disability Commission to study the desirability and methods of increasing the extent to which benefits are used in the effort to assist disabled children in achieving independence and engaging in substantial gainful activity. The Commission was also charged with examining the effects of the SSI program on disabled children and their families.

House bill

The Childhood Disability Commission must review the mental listings used by the Social Security Administration to determine child SSI eligibility. The Commission should conduct this investigation to ensure that the criteria in these listings are appropriate and that SSI eligibility is limited to children with serious disabilities for whom Federal assistance is necessary to improve the child's condition or quality of life.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision) due to the Childhood Disability Commission having completed their final report.

LIMITATION ON PAYMENTS TO PUERTO RICO, THE U.S. VIRGIN ISLANDS AND GUAM UNDER PROGRAMS OF AID TO THE AGED, BLIND, OR DISABLED

Refer to Title I.

REPEAL OF MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT REQUIREMENT APPLICABLE TO OPTIONAL STATE PROGRAMS FOR SUPPLEMENTATION OF SSI BENEFITS

Present law

Since the beginning of the SSI program, States have had the option to supplement (with State funds) the Federal SSI payment. The purpose of section 1618 was to encourage States to pass along to SSI recipients the amount of any Federal SSI benefit increase. Under section 1618, a State that is found to be not in compliance with the "pass along/maintenance of effort provision" is subject to loss of its Medicaid reimbursements. Section 1618 allows States to comply with the "pass along/ maintenance of effort" provision by either maintaining their State supplementary payment levels at or above 1983 levels or by maintaining total annual expenditures for supplementary payments (including any Federal cost-of-living adjustment) at a level at least equal to the prior 12-month period, provided the State was in compliance for that period. In effect, section 1618 requires that once a State elects to provide supplementary payments it must continue to do so. [Sec. 1618 of the Social Security Act]

House bill

The House bill repeals the maintenance of effort requirements (Sec. 1618) applicable to optional State programs for supplementation of SSI benefits effective date of enactment.

Senate amendment

Similar to the House bill.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

LIMITED ELIGIBILITY OF NONCITIZENS FOR SSI BENEFITS

Refer to Title IV.

ANNUAL REPORT ON SSI

Present law

To date, the Department of Health and Human Services and now the Social Security Administration have collected, compiled, and published annual and monthly SSI data, but Federal law does not require an annual report on the SSI program.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires the Commissioner of Social Security to prepare and provide to the President and the Congress an annual report on the SSI program, which includes specified information and data. The report is due May 30 of each year.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

STUDY OF DISABILITY DETERMINATION PROCESS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Within 90 days of enactment, the Commissioner must contract with the National Academy of Sciences or another independent entity to conduct a comprehensive study of the disability determination process for SSI and SSDI. The study must examine the validity, reliability and consistency with current scientific standards of the Listings of Impairments cited above.

The study must also examine the appropriateness of the definitions of disability (and possible alternatives) used in connection with SSI and SSDI; and the operation of the disability determination process, including the appropriate method of performing comprehensive assessments of individuals under age 18 with physical or mental impairments.

The Commissioner must issue interim and final reports of the findings and recommendations of the study within 18 months and 24 months, respectively, from the date of contract for the study.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE STUDY

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires the General Accounting Office to study and report on the impact of title II of the Senate amendment on the SSI program by January 1, 1998.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON THE FUTURE OF DISABILITY

A. ESTABLISHMENT

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission is established and expenses are to be paid from funds appropriated to the Social Security Administration.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. DUTIES

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission must study all matters related to the nature, purpose and adequacy of all Federal programs for the disabled, and especially SSI and SSDI.

The Commission must examine: projected growth in the number of individuals with disabilities and the implications for program planning; possible performance standards for disability programs; the adequacy of Federal rehabilitation research and training; and the adequacy of policy research available to the Federal government and possible improvements.

The Commission must submit to the President and the proper Congressional committees recommendations and possible legislative proposals effecting needed program changes.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

C. MEMBERSHIP

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission is to be composed of 15 members, appointed by the President and Congressional leadership. Members are to be chosen based on their education, training or experience, with consideration for representing the diversity of individuals with disabilities in the U.S.

The Comptroller General must serve as an ex officio member of the Commission to advise on the methodology of the study. With the exception of the Comptroller General, no officer or employee of any government may serve on the Commission.

Members are to be appointed not later than 60 days after enactment. Members serve for the life of the Commission, which will be headquartered in D.C. and meet at least quarterly.

The Senate amendment includes a number of specific requirements on the Commission regarding quorums, the naming of chairpersons, member replacement, and benefits.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

D. STAFF AND SUPPORT SERVICES

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission will have a director, appointed by the Chair, and appropriate staff, resources, and facilities.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

E. POWERS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission may conduct public hearings and obtain information from Federal agencies necessary to perform its duties.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

F. REPORTS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission must issue an interim report to Congress and the President not later than 1 year prior to terminating. A final public report must be submitted prior to termination.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

G. TERMINATION

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission will terminate 2 years after first having met and named a chair and vice chair.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

CHAPTER 6—RETIREMENT AGE ELIGIBILITY

13. ELIGIBILITY FOR SSI BENEFITS BASED ON SOCIAL SECURITY RETIREMENT AGE

Present law

The SSI program guarantees a minimum level of cash income to all aged, blind, or disabled persons with limited resources. The SSI program defines "aged" as persons age 65 and older.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment deletes references to age 65 and instead defines as "aged" those persons who reach "retirement age" as defined by the Social Security program. The Social Security "retirement age"—the age at which retired workers receive benefits that are not reduced for "early retirement"—gradually will rise from 65 to 67. It will do so in two steps. First, the retirement age will increase by 2 months for each year that a person was born after 1937, until it reaches age 66 for those born in 1943 (i.e., those who attain age 66 in 2009). Second, it will again increase by 2 months for each year that a person was born after 1954 until it reaches age 67 for those born after 1959.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

SUBTITLE C—CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

CHAPTER 1—ELIGIBILITY FOR SERVICES; DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS

1. REFERENCES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Any reference in this title expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of a section or other provision is made to the Social Security Act.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

2. STATE OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT SERVICES

Present law

States are required to establish paternity for children born out of wedlock if they are recipients of AFDC or Medicaid, and to obtain child and spousal support payments from noncustodial parents of children receiving AFDC, Medicaid benefits, or foster care maintenance payments. States must provide child support collection or paternity determination services to persons not otherwise eligible if the person applies for services. Federal law requires States to cooperate with other States in establishing paternity (if necessary), locating absent parents, collecting child support payments, and carrying out other child support enforcement functions.

House bill

States must provide services, including paternity establishment and establishment, modification, or enforcement of support obligations, for children receiving benefits under part A (Temporary Assistance for Needy Families block grant-TANF), part B (child protection block grant), Medicaid, and any child of an individual who applies for services. States must enforce support obligations with respect to children in their caseload and the custodial parents of such children. States must also make child support enforcement services available to nonresidents on the same terms as to residents. The provision also makes minor technical amendments to SSA section 454.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision with one exception: instead of reference to part B as in House bill, reference is to part E-foster care and adoption assistance.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment except the House recedes by agreeing States be required to provide child support services only to children actually receiving foster care payments.

3. DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD SUPPORT COLLECTIONS

A. DISTRIBUTION OF COLLECTED SUPPORT

Present law

To receive AFDC benefits, a custodial parent must assign to the State her right to collect child support payments. This assignment covers current support and any arrearages, and lasts as long as the family receives AFDC. Federal law requires that child support collections be distributed as follows: First, up to the first $50 in current support is paid to the AFDC family (a "disregard" that does not affect the family's AFDC benefit or eligibility status). Second, the Federal and State governments are reimbursed for the AFDC benefit paid to the family in that month. Third, if there is money left, the family receives it up to the amount of the current month's child support obligation. Fourth, if there is still money left, the State keeps it to reimburse itself for any arrearages owed to it under the AFDC assignment (with appropriate reimbursement of the Federal share of the collection to the Federal government). If no arrearages are owed the State, the money is used to pay arrearages to the family; such moneys are considered income under the AFDC program and would reduce the family's AFDC benefit.

House bill

To receive funds from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) block grant, a custodial parents must assign to the State their right to child support payments. (p. 39) The bill ends the $50 child support disregard to (TANF) families. Families receiving cash assistance—States are given the option of passing the entire child support payment through to families. If States elect this option, they must pay the Federal share of the collection to the Federal government. Families that formerly received cash assistance—Current child support payments go to the family. Payments on arrearages that accrued before or after the custodial parent received cash assistance are paid to the family first if the family leaves welfare. Only after all arrearages owed to the custodial parent and children have been repaid are arrearages owed to the State and Federal government repaid. Payments on arrearages that accrued while the family received assistance must be retained by the State. The State is required to keep the State share of the collected amount, and pay to the Federal government the Federal share of the amount collected (to the extent necessary to reimburse amounts paid to the family as cash assistance). As a general rule, States must pay to the Federal government the Federal share of child support collections for parents on the Temporary Family Assistance program. This share is calculated using the State's Medicaid match rate in effect in 1995 or in subsequent years, whichever is greater. Families that never received cash assistance—All child support payments go directly to the family.

Senate amendment

Any rights to child support that were assigned to the State before the effective date of the amendment are to remain so assigned. Gives States the option of requiring TANF applicants and recipients to assign to the State their rights to child support payments. The amendment eliminates references (in both the TANF block grant title of the amendment and the CSE title) to the $50 child support disregard, but does not explicitly eliminate the $50 child support disregard—Families receiving cash assistance—States are given the option of passing the entire child support payment through to families. If States elect this option, they must pay the Federal share of the collection to the Federal government. Families that formerly received cash assistance—Current child support payments go to the family. Payments on arrearages that accrued after the custodial parent left welfare are paid to the family. With respect to payments on arrearages that accrued before or while the family received assistance, the State may retain all or part of the State share, and if the State does so, it must retain and pay to the Federal Government the Federal share (to the extent the amount retained does not exceed the cash assistance paid to the family). The Federal share is calculated using the State's Medicaid match rate in effect in 1995 or in subsequent years, whichever is greater. Families that never received cash assistance—All child support payments go directly to the family. In addition, in the case of a family receiving cash assistance from an Indian tribe, the child support collection is to be distributed according to the agreement specified in the State plan.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement modifies the House bill and Senate amendment as follows: (1) the $50 passthrough is ended; (2) beginning October 1, 1997, arrearages that accumulate during the period after the family leaves welfare and that are paid through the tax intercept are paid to the State; payments made by any other method are paid to the family; and (3) beginning October 1, 2000, arrearages that accumulated during the period before the mother went on welfare and that are paid through the tax intercept are paid to the State; arrearage payments made by any other method are paid to the family. Conferees also agree that if the amount of pre-welfare arrearages paid to the family exceeds the amount saved by a given State by ending the $50 passthrough and by other methods of improving collections contained in this legislation, the Federal government will pay that State an amount equal to the difference between pre-welfare arrearage payments to the family and State savings caused by this legislation. Finally, child support assignment rules are modified to conform to the changes described above in distribution rules.

B. CONTINUATION OF SERVICES FOR FAMILIES CEASING TO RECEIVE ASSISTANCE

Present law

Federal law requires States to continue providing child support enforcement services to AFDC, Medicaid, and foster care families who no longer qualify for AFDC benefits on the same basis as in the case of those who receive benefits or services, except that no application or request for services is required.

House bill

When families leave the TANF program, States are required to continue providing child support enforcement services to them subject to the same conditions and on the same basis as in the case of individuals who receive assistance.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

C. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The effective date for provisions relating to distribution of support collected for families who formerly received cash assistance is October 1, 1995. For all others it is October 1, 1999.

Senate amendment

The effective date for distribution of support collected for families receiving cash assistance is October 1, 1999. The effective date for the clerical amendments and provisions relating to the distribution of child support collected for families who formerly received cash assistance or who never received cash assistance is October 1, 1995.

Conference agreement

The effective date for ending the $50 pass-through is October 1, 1996 or sooner at State option. The effective date for implementing the new distribution rules applying to post-welfare arrearages is October 1, 1997; for pre-welfare arrearages, the effective date is October 1, 2000.

4. PRIVACY SAFEGUARDS

Present law

Federal law limits the use or disclosure of information concerning recipients of Child Support Enforcement Services to purposes connected with administering specified Federal welfare programs.

House bill

States must implement safeguards against unauthorized use or disclosure of information related to proceedings or actions to establish paternity or to enforce child support. These safeguards must include prohibitions on release of information where there is a protective order or where the State has reason to believe a party is at risk of physical or emotional harm from the other party. This provision is effective October 1, 1997.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

5. RIGHTS TO NOTIFICATION AND HEARING

Present law

Most States have procedural due process requirements with respect to wage withholding. Federal law requires States to carry out withholding in full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Parties to child support cases under Title IV–D must receive notice of proceedings in which child support is established or modified and must receive a copy of orders establishing or modifying child support within 14 days of issuance. Individuals served by the child support program must also have access to a fair hearing or other complaint procedures. These rules and procedures become effective on October 1, 1997.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

CHAPTER 2—LOCATE AND CASE TRACKING

6. STATE CASE REGISTRY

A. CONTENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The automated State Case Registry must contain a record on each case in which services are being provided by the State agency, as well as each support order established or modified in the State on or after October 1, 1998.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. LINKING OF LOCAL REGISTRIES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Registry may be established by linking local case registries of support orders through an automated information network.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. USE OF STANDARDIZED DATA ELEMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The registry record will contain data elements on both parents, such as names, Social Security numbers and other uniform identification numbers, dates of birth, case identification numbers, and any other data the Secretary may require.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

D. PAYMENT RECORDS

Present law

Federal law, with respect to wage withholding, requires that wage withholding be administered by a public agency capable of documenting payments of support and tracking and monitoring such payments.

House bill

Each case record will contain the amount of support owed under the order and other amounts due or overdue, any amounts that have been collected and distributed, the birth date of any child for whom the order requires the provision of support, and the amount of any lien imposed by the State.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

E. UPDATING AND MONITORING

Present law

Federal law requires that child support orders be reviewed and adjusted, as appropriate, at least once every 3 years.

House bill

The State agency operating the registry will promptly establish and maintain and regularly update case records in the registry with respect to which services are being provided under the State plan. Updating will be based on administrative actions and administrative and judicial proceedings and orders relating to paternity and support, as well as information obtained from comparison with Federal, State, and local sources of information, information on support collections and distributions, and any other relevant information.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

F. INFORMATION COMPARISONS AND OTHER DISCLOSURES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The State automated system will be used to extract data for purposes of sharing and matching with Federal and State data bases and locator services, including the Federal Case Registry of Child Support Orders, the Federal Parent Locator Service, Temporary Assistance for Needy Families and Medicaid agencies, and intra- and interstate information comparisons.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

7. COLLECTION AND DISBURSEMENT OF SUPPORT PAYMENTS

A. STATE DISBURSEMENT UNIT

Present law

No provision. But States may provide that, at the request of either parent, child support payments be made through the child support enforcement agency or the agency that administers the State's income withholding system regardless of whether there is an arrearage. States must charge the parent who requests child support services a fee equal to the cost incurred by the State for these services, up to a maximum of $25 per year.

House bill

By October 1, 1998, State child support agencies are required to operate a centralized, automated unit for collection and disbursement of payments on child support orders enforced by the child support agency. The specifics of how States will establish and operate their State Disbursement Unit must be outlined in the State plan.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. OPERATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The State Disbursement Unit must be operated directly by the State agency, by two or more State agencies under a regional cooperative agreement, or by a contractor responsible directly to the State agency.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. LINKING OF LOCAL DISBURSEMENT UNITS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The State Disbursement Unit may be established by linking local disbursement units through an automated information network. The Secretary must agree that the system will not cost more nor take more time to establish than a centralized system. In addition, employers shall be given one location per State to which income withholding is sent.

Senate amendment

Similar provision except that whereas the House requires only that the system not cost more or take more time to establish, the Senate adds the condition that the system also cannot take more time to operate.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate provision allowing States to establish their State Disbursement Unit by linking local disbursement units only if linking units does not cost more money nor take more time to establish and to operate.

D. REQUIRED PROCEDURES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Disbursement Unit will be used to collect and disburse support payments, to generate orders and notices of withholding to employers, to keep an accurate identification of payments, to promptly distribute money to custodial parents or other States, and to furnish parents with a record of the current status of support payments. The Unit shall use automated procedures, electronic processes, and computer-driven technology to the maximum extent feasible, efficient, and economical.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

E. TIMING OF DISBURSEMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Disbursement Unit must distribute all amounts payable within 2 business days after receiving money and identifying information from the employer or other source of periodic income, if sufficient information identifying the payee is provided.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except permits the retention of arrearages in the case of appeals until they are resolved.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment except that the House recedes to the Senate requirement that States be allowed to retain arrearages in the case of appeals until they are resolved.

F. USE OF AUTOMATED SYSTEM

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States must use their automated system to facilitate collection and disbursement including at least:

(1) transmission of orders and notices to employers within 2 days after receipt of the withholding notice;

(2) monitoring to identify missed payments of support; and

(3) automatic use of enforcement procedures when payments are missed.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

G. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section of the bill will go into effect on October 1, 1998.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

8. STATE DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES

A. STATE PLAN REQUIREMENT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

State plans must include the provision that by October 1, 1997 States will operate a Directory of New Hires (as outlined below).

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. ESTABLISHMENT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States are required to establish a State Directory of New Hires to which employers and labor organizations in the State must furnish a report for each newly hired employee, unless reporting could endanger the safety of the employee or compromise an ongoing investigation or intelligence mission as determined by the head of an agency.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with the clarification that States that already have new hire reporting laws may continue to follow the provisions of their own law until October 1, 1996, at which time States must conform to Federal law.

C. EMPLOYER INFORMATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Employers must furnish to the State Directory of New Hires the name, address, and Social Security number of every new employee and the name and identification number of the employer. Multistate employers may report to the State in which they have the most employees.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, but allows multistate employers to report to the State they designate. The employer must notify the DHHS Secretary as to the name of the designated State.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment except that the House recedes to the Senate provision allowing multistate employers to report to the State of their choice. Employers must notify the Secretary of the name of the designated State.

D. TIMING OF REPORT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Employers must report new hire information within 15 days of the hire or on the date the employee first receives wages.

Senate amendment

Employers must report new hire information within 30 days of the hire or if the employer reports by magnetic or electronic means, the employer can report by the first business day of the week following the date on which the employee first receives wages.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree on two general rules for timing of new hire reports. First, except as noted below, employers must report new hire information within 20 days of the date of hire.

E. REPORTING FORMAT AND METHOD

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The report required in this section will be made on a W–4 form or the equivalent, and can be transmitted magnetically, electronically, or by first class mail.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, but only allows the report to be filed on a W–4 form, not the equivalent.

Conference agreement

The conferees agreed to follow both the House and Senate provisions except that the Senate would recede to the House provision allowing employers, at their option, to use an equivalent form. The decision of which reporting method to use is entirely up to employers.

F. CIVIL MONEY PENALTIES ON NONCOMPLYING EMPLOYERS

Present law

In general, no provision.

Section 1128 of the Social Security Act is an antifraud provision which excludes individuals and entities that have committed fraud from participation in Medicare and State health care programs. Section 1128A pertains to civil monetary penalties and describes the appropriate procedures and proceedings for such penalties.

House bill

An employer failing to make a timely report is subject to a $25 fine for each unreported employee. There is also a $500 penalty on employers for every employee for whom they do not transmit a W–4 form if, under the laws of the State, there is shown to be a conspiracy between the employer and the employee to prevent the proper information from being filed.

The House bill makes several but not all provisions of section 1128 applicable to employers that violate reporting requirements.

Senate amendment

States have the option of setting a civil money penalty which shall be not less than $25 or $500 if, under State law, the failure is the result of a conspiracy between the employer and employee. The Senate amendment does not make any provisions of section 1128 applicable to employers.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions except that the House recedes to the Senate provision of making the penalties a State option.

G. ENTRY OF NEW HIRE INFORMATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

New hire information must be entered into the State data base within 5 business days of receipt from employer.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement of requiring States to enter New Hire information in their data base within 5 business days.

H. INFORMATION COMPARISONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

By October 1, 1997, each State Directory of New Hires must conduct automated matches of the Social Security numbers of reported employees against the Social Security numbers of records in the State Case Registry being enforced by the State agency and report the name, Social Security number, and employer identification number on matches to the State child support agency.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires comparisons to begin by October 1, 1998 rather than 1997.

Conference agreement

Conferees agreed to follow the House and Senate provisions but to compromise on the date by which comparisons must begin by adopting a May 1, 1998 effective date.

I. TRANSMISSION OF INFORMATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Within two business days of the entry of data in the registry, the State must transmit a withholding order directing the employer to withhold wages in accord with the child support order. Within four days, the State Directory of New Hires must furnish employee information to the National Directory of New Hires for matching with the records of other State case registries. The State Directory of New Hires must also report quarterly to the National Directory of New Hires information on wages and unemployment compensation taken from the quarterly report to the Secretary of Labor now required by Title III of the Social Security Act.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires State Directory to report to the National Directory within two, rather than four, days.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement is to follow the House and Senate provisions and to compromise on the reporting date by allowing States three days to report to the National Directory of New Hires.

J. OTHER USES OF NEW HIRE INFORMATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The State child support agency must use the new hire information for purposes of establishing paternity as well as establishing, modifying, and enforcing child support obligations. New hire information (pursuant to section 1137 of the Social Security Act) must also be disclosed to the State agency administering the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, Medicaid, Unemployment Compensation, Food Stamp, SSI, and territorial cash assistance programs for income eligibility verification, and to State agencies administering unemployment and workers' compensation programs to assist determinations of the allowability of claims.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires State and local government agencies to be included in quarterly wage reporting unless the agency performs intelligence or counterintelligence functions and it is determined that wage reporting could endanger the safety of the employee or compromise the investigation or intelligence mission.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House and Senate provisions except that the House recedes to the Senate provision allowing State and local government agencies to exempt employees doing intelligence or counterintelligence work whose safety might be compromised by the reporting.

9. AMENDMENTS CONCERNING INCOME WITHHOLDING

Present law

Since November 1, 1990, all new or modified child support orders that were being enforced by the State's child support enforcement agency have been subject to immediate income withholding. If the noncustodial parent's wages are not subject to income withholding (pursuant to the November 1, 1990 provision), such parent's wages would become subject to withholding on the date when support payments are 30 days past due. Since January 1, 1994, the law has required States to use immediate income withholding for all new support orders, regardless of whether a parent has applied for child support enforcement services. There are two circumstances in which income withholding does not apply: 1) one of the parents demonstrates and the court or administrative agency finds that there is good cause not to do so, or 2) a written agreement is reached between both parents which provides for an alternative arrangement. States must implement procedures under which income withholding for child support can occur without the need for any amendment to the support order or for any further action by the court or administrative entity that issued the order. States are also required to implement income withholding in full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State, and States must send advance notice to each nonresident parent to whom income withholding applies (with an exception for some States that had income withholding before enactment of this provision that met State due process requirements). States must extend their income withholding systems to include out-of-State support orders.

House bill

States must have laws providing that all child support orders issued or modified before October 1, 1996, which are not otherwise subject to income withholding, will become subject to income withholding immediately if arrearages occur, without the need for judicial or administrative hearing. State law must also allow the child support agency to execute a withholding order through electronic means and without advance notice to the obligor. Employers must remit to the State disbursement unit income withheld within 2 working days after the date such amount would have been paid or credited to the employee.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, but requires all child support orders which are not part of the State IV-D program to be processed through the State disbursement unit. In addition, States must notify noncustodial parents that income withholding has commenced and inform them of procedures for contesting income withholding.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House and Senate provisions except that the House recedes to the Senate provision requiring all child support orders which are not part of the State IV-D program to be processed through the State disbursement unit. In addition, States must notify noncustodial parents that income withholding has commenced and inform them of procedures for contesting income withholding.

10. LOCATOR INFORMATION FROM INTERSTATE NETWORKS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

All State and the Federal Child Support Enforcement agencies must have access to the motor vehicle and law enforcement locator systems of all States.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

11. EXPANSION OF THE FEDERAL PARENT LOCATOR SERVICE

A. EXPANDED AUTHORITY TO LOCATE INDIVIDUALS AND ASSETS

Present law

The law requires that the Federal Parent Locator Service (FPLS) be used to obtain and transmit information about the location of any absent parent when that information is to be used for the purpose of enforcing child support.

House bill

The purposes of the Federal Parent Locator Service are expanded. For the purposes of establishing parentage, establishing support orders or modifying them, or enforcing support orders, the Federal Parent Locator Service will provide information to locate individuals who owe child support or against whom an obligation is sought or to whom such an obligation is owed. Information in the FPLS includes Social Security number, address, name and address of employer, and wages and employee benefits (including information about health care coverage).

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except clarifies current law by stating that information from the Federal Parent Locator Service can be used to enforce visitation orders. Senate also allows FPLS to contain and provide information on assets and debts.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement is similar to both the House bill and the Senate amendment. The agreement clarifies the statute so that nonresident parents are given access to information from the FPLS if these requests are made through a court or through the State child support agency.

B. REIMBURSEMENTS

Present law

Federal law requires that any department or agency of the United States must be reimbursed for costs incurred for providing requested information to the FPLS.

House bill

The Secretary is authorized to set reasonable rates for reimbursing Federal and State agencies for the costs of providing information to the FPLS and to set reimbursement rates that State and Federal agencies that use information from the FPLS must pay to the Secretary.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. NEW COMPONENTS OF FPLS

(1) FEDERAL CASE REGISTRY OF CHILD SUPPORT ORDERS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The House bill establishes within the FPLS an automated registry known as the Federal Case Registry of Child Support Orders. The Federal Case Registry contains abstracts of child support orders and other information specified by the Secretary (such as names, Social Security numbers or other uniform identification numbers, State case identification numbers, wages or other income, and rights to health care coverage) to identify individuals who owe or are owed support (or for or against whom support is sought to be established), and the State which has the case. States must begin reporting this information in accord with regulations issued by the Secretary, by October 1, 1998.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(2) NATIONAL DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The House bill establishes within the FPLS a National Directory of New Hires containing information supplied by State Directories of New Hires, beginning October 1, 1996. When fully implemented, the Federal Directory of New Hires will contain identifying information on virtually every person who is hired in the United States. In addition, the FPLS will contain quarterly data supplied by the State Directory of New Hires on wages and Unemployment Compensation paid. The Secretary of the Treasury must have access to information in the Federal Directory of New Hires for the purpose of administering section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code and the Earned Income Tax Credit.

Senate amendment

The Senate provision is similar to the House provision with two exceptions: 1) the Senate amendment includes the requirement that the information for the National Directory of New Hires must be entered within 2 days of receipt; and2) the Senate amendment requires the DHHS Secretary to maintain within the National Directory of New Hires a list of multistate employers who choose a State to send their report to and the name of the State so designated.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow both the House bill and Senate amendment except that the House recedes on the points of difference. Thus, the National Directory must enter new information within 2 days and the Secretary must maintain a list of the States to which multistate employers send their new hire information.

D. INFORMATION COMPARISONS AND OTHER DISCLOSURES

Present law

Upon request, the Secretary must provide to an "authorized person" (i.e., an employee or attorney of a child support agency, a court with jurisdiction over the parties involved, the custodial parent, legal guardian, or attorney of the child) the most recent address and place of employment of any absent parent if the information is contained in the records of the Department of Health and Human Services, or can be obtained from any other department or agency of the United States or of any State. The FPLS also can be used in connection with the enforcement or determination of child custody and in cases of parental kidnapping. Federal law requires the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Health and Human Services to enter into an agreement to give the FPLS prompt access to wage and unemployment compensation claims information useful in locating a noncustodial parent or his employer.

House bill

The Secretary must verify the accuracy of the name, Social Security number, birth date, and employer identification number of individuals in the Federal Parent Locator Service with the Social Security Administration. The Secretary is required to match data in the National Directory of New Hires against the child support order abstracts in the Federal Case Registry at least every 2 working days and to report information obtained from matches to the State child support agency responsible for the case within 2 days. The information is to be used for purposes of locating individuals to establish paternity, and to establish, modify, or enforce child support orders. The Secretary may also compare information across all components of the FPLS to the extent and with the frequency that the Secretary determines will be effective. The Secretary will share information from the FPLS with several potential users including State agencies administering the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program, the Commissioner of Social Security (to determine the accuracy of Social Security and Supplemental Security Income), and researchers under some circumstances.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

E. FEES

Present law

"Authorized persons" who request information from FPLS must be charged a fee.

House bill

The Secretary must reimburse the Commissioner of Social Security for costs incurred in performing verification of Social Security information and to States for submitting information on New Hires. States or Federal agencies that use information from FPLS must pay fees established by the Secretary.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

F. RESTRICTION ON DISCLOSURE AND USE

Present law

Federal law stipulates that no information shall be disclosed if the disclosure would contravene the national policy or security interests of the United States or the confidentiality of Census data.

House bill

Information from the FPLS cannot be used for purposes other than those provided in this section, subject to section 6103 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

G. INFORMATION INTEGRITY AND SECURITY

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary must establish and use safeguards to ensure the accuracy and completeness of information from the FPLS and restrict access to confidential information in the FPLS to authorized persons and purposes.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

H. QUARTERLY WAGE REPORTING

Present law

Requires the Secretary of Labor to provide prompt access for the DHHS Secretary to wage and unemployment compensation claims information and data maintained by the Labor Department or State employment security agencies.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Each department in U.S. shall submit name, Social Security number and wages paid the employee, on a quarterly basis to the FPLS. Quarterly wage reporting shall not be filed for a Federal or State employee performing intelligence or counter-intelligence functions, if it is determined that filing such a report could endanger the employee or compromise an ongoing investigation.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

I. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section makes several conforming amendments to Titles III and IV of the Social Security Act and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except amends section 303(h) to require State unemployment insurance agencies to report quarterly wage information to the Secretary of HHS or suffer financial penalties, while the House bill amends section 303(a) and simply requires quarterly reports to the Secretary of HHS.

Conference agreement

Conferees agreed to follow both the House and Senate provisions but to follow the Senate amendment by requiring State unemployment insurance agencies to file quarterly wage reports with the Secretary or pay penalties.

J. AUTHORIZED PERSON FOR INFORMATION REGARDING VISITATION RIGHTS

Present law

FPLS can also be used to provide information to authorized individuals and agencies making or entering a child custody order (see Sec. 463 of Social Security Act).

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Expands functions of FPLS by requiring that information be made available to noncustodial parents for purposes of seeking or enforcing child visitation orders.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate amendment on this provision but with the agreement that nonresident parents cannot obtain information directly from the FPLS but must present their request through the courts or through the State child support agency. In addition, the agreement requires State child support agencies to treat requests for information from nonresident parents on the same basis and with the same priority as requests from resident parents.

12. COLLECTION AND USE OF SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS FOR USE IN CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

Present law

Federal law requires that in the administration of any law involving the issuance of a birth certificate, States must require each parent to furnish their Social Security number for the birth records. The State is required to make such numbers available to child support agencies in accordance with Federal or State law. States may not place Social Security numbers directly on birth certificates.

House bill

States must have laws requiring that Social Security numbers be placed on applications for professional licenses, commercial drivers licenses, and occupational licenses, marriage licenses, and in the records for divorce decrees, child support orders, and paternity determination or acknowledgment orders. Individuals who die will have their Social Security number placed in the records relating to the death and recorded on the death certificate. There are several conforming amendments.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except gives States the option of not including Social Security numbers on applications for licenses and bars the placement of Social Security numbers on marriage licenses.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment except that the House recedes to the Senate requirements that States have the option of not including Social Security numbers on applications and that States be barred from placing Social Security numbers on marriage licenses.

CHAPTER 3—STREAMLINING AND UNIFORMITY OF PROCEDURES

13. ADOPTION OF UNIFORM STATE LAWS

Present law

States have several options available for pursuing interstate child support cases including direct income withholding, interstate income withholding, and long-arm statutes which require the use of the court system in the State of the custodial parent. In addition, States use the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) and the Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (RURESA) to conduct interstate cases. Moreover, Federal law imposes a Federal criminal penalty for the willful failure to pay past-due child support to a child who resides in a State other than the State of the obligor. In 1992, the National Conference of Commissioners on State Uniform Laws approved a new model State law for handling interstate CSE cases. The new Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA) is designed to deal with desertion and nonsupport by instituting uniform laws in all 50 States that limit control of a child support case to a single State. This approach ensures that only one child support order from one court or child support agency will be in effect at any given time. It also helps to eliminate jurisdictional disputes between States that are impediments to locating parents and enforcing child support orders across State lines. As of March, 1995, 23 States had enacted UIFSA, 15 verbatim and 8 with minor changes.

House bill

By January 1, 1997, all States must have enacted the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA) and have the procedures required for its implementation in effect. States are required to apply UIFSA to any case involving an order established or modified in one State that is sought to be modified in another State. States must also have a new provision on long-arm statutes and petitioning for modifications of orders, and are required to recognize as valid any method of service of process used in another State that is valid in that State.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except permits but does not require States to apply UIFSA to all interstate cases.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement is that States must adopt UIFSA by January 1, 1998. The House recedes to the Senate on when UIFSA is used.

14. IMPROVEMENTS TO FULL FAITH AND CREDIT FOR CHILD SUPPORT ORDERS

Present law

Federal law requires States to treat past-due support obligations as final judgments that are entitled to full faith and credit in every State. This means that a person who has a support order in one State does not have to obtain a second order in another State to obtain support due should the debtor parent move from the issuing court's jurisdiction. P.L. 103-383 restricts a State court's ability to modify a support order issued by another State unless the child and the custodial parent have moved to the State where the modification is sought or have agreed to the modification.

House bill

The provision clarifies the definition of a child's home State, makes several revisions to ensure that full faith and credit laws can be applied consistently with UIFSA, and clarifies the rules regarding which child support orders States must honor when there is more than one order.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions but the House recedes on "more than 1 court".

15. ADMINISTRATIVE ENFORCEMENT IN INTERSTATE CASES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States are required to have laws that permit them to send orders to and receive orders from other States without registering the underlying order unless the enforcement action is contested by the obligor on the grounds of mistake of fact or invalid order. The transmission of the order itself serves as certification to the responding State of the arrears amount and of the fact that the initiating State met all procedural due process requirements. No court action is required or permitted by the responding State. In addition, each responding State must, without requiring the case to be transferred to their State, match the case against its data bases, take appropriate action if a match occurs, and send the collections, if any, to the initiating State. States must keep records of the number of requests they receive, the number of cases that result in a collection, and the amount collected. States must respond to interstate requests within 5 days.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

16. USE OF FORMS IN INTERSTATE ENFORCEMENT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary must issue forms that States must use for income withholding, for imposing liens, and for issuing administrative subpoenas in interstate cases. The forms must be issued by June 30, 1996 and States must be using the forms by October 1, 1996.

Senate amendment

Requires the DHHS Secretary to establish an advisory committee which must include State child support directors, and not later than June 30, 1996, after consultation with the advisory committee to issue forms that States must use for income withholding, for imposing liens, and for issuing administrative subpoenas in interstate cases. The forms must be issued by June 30, 1996 and States must be using the forms by October 1, 1996.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow both the House and Senate provisions with a compromise on requiring the Secretary to consult with States. Rather than forming an advisory committee, the conference agreement requires the Secretary to consult with States before issuing the interstate forms. It is the intention of conferees to facilitate timely issuance of the forms but also to mandate that the Secretary work closely with State child support directors in developing the forms.

17. STATE LAWS PROVIDING EXPEDITED PROCEDURES

A. Administrative Action by State Agency

Present law

States must have procedures under which expedited processes are in effect under the

State judicial system or under State administrative processes for obtaining and enforcing support orders and for establishing paternity.

House Bill

States must adopt a series of procedures to expedite both the establishment of paternity and the establishment, enforcement, and modification of support. These procedures provide for: (1) ordering genetic testing in appropriate cases; (2) entering a default order upon a showing of service of process and any other showing required by State law to establish paternity if the putative father refuses to submit to genetic testing and to establish or modify a support order when a parent fails to appear for a hearing; (3) issuing subpoenas to obtain information necessary to establish, modify or enforce an order, with appropriate sanctions for failure to respond to the subpoena; (4) obtaining access to records including: records of other State and local government agencies, law enforcement records, and corrections records, including automated access to records maintained in automated data bases; (5) directing the parties to pay support to the appropriate government entity; (6) ordering income withholding; (7) securing assets to satisfy arrearages by intercepting or seizing periodic or lump sum payments from States or local agencies; these payments include Unemployment Compensation, workers' compensation, judgements, settlements, lottery winnings, assets held by financial institutions, and public and private retirement funds; and (8) increasing automatically the monthly support due to include amounts to offset arrears.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires States to include the following additional procedures: (1) requiring all entities in the State (including for-profit, nonprofit, and governmental employers) to provide information on employment, compensation and benefits of any employee or contractor in response to a request from the State IV–D agency; (2) obtaining access to a variety of public and private records including: vital statistics, State and local tax records, real and personal property, occupational and professional licenses and records concerning ownership and control of corporations, partnerships and other business entities, employment security records, public assistance records, motor vehicle records, corrections records, customer records of public utilities and cable TV companies, and records of financial institutions; (3) imposing liens to force the sale of property and distribution of proceeds; (4) requiring financial institutions (subject to the limitation on liabilities arising from affording such access) to provide information held by them on individuals who owe or are owed child support (or against or with respect to whom a support obligation is sought) to State child support agencies; and (5) requiring that due process safeguards be followed.

The amendment does not include the House provision regarding default orders in paternity cases upon a showing of service of process.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate on the five additional expedited procedures and includes the House provision regarding default orders in paternity cases upon a showing of service of process.

B. Substantive and Procedural Rules

Present law

Federal regulations provide a number of safeguards, such as requiring that the due process rights of the parties involved be protected.

House bill

States must follow a series of procedural rules that apply to all of the expedited procedures outlined in the preceding section:

(1) Locator Information and Notice—requires parties in paternity and child support actions to file and update information about identity, address, and employer with the tribunal and with the State Case Registry upon entry of the order. The tribunal can deem due process requirements for notice and service of process to be met in any subsequent action upon delivery of written notice to the most recent residential or employer address filed with the tribunal.

(2) Statewide Jurisdiction—grants the child support agency and any administrative or judicial tribunal with authority to hear child support and paternity cases, to exert Statewide jurisdiction over the parties, and to grant orders that have Statewide effect; also permits transfer of cases between administrative areas without additional filing or service of process.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment except House recede to Senate language by replacing the term "administrative areas" with the term "local jurisdictions" in the section on Statewide jurisdiction.

C. Automation of State Agency Functions

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The automated systems being developed by States are to be used, to the maximum extent possible, to implement the expedited procedures.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Chapter 4—Paternity Establishment

18. STATE LAWS CONCERNING PATERNITY ESTABLISHMENT

A. Establishment Process Available From Birth Until Age 18

Present law

Federal law requires States to strengthen their paternity establishment laws by requiring that paternity may be established until the child reaches age 18. As of August 16, 1984, these procedures would apply to a child for whom paternity has not been established or for whom a paternity action was brought but dismissed because of statute of limitations of less than 18 years was then in effect in the State.

House bill

Same as current law.

Senate Amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires that paternity may be established until age 21 rather than 18.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes so that States are required to have laws that permit paternity establishment until at least age 18 (or a higher limit at State option).

B. Procedures Concerning Genetic Testing

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement laws under which the child and all other parties must undergo genetic testing upon the request of a party in contested cases.

House bill

The child and all other parties must undergo genetic testing upon the request of a party, where the request is supported by a sworn statement establishing a reasonable possibility of parentage or nonparentage. When the tests are ordered by the State agency, States must pay for the costs, subject to recoupment at State option from the father if paternity is established.

Senate amendment

Similar provision. House mandates genetic tests in certain cases while Senate allows States with laws against genetic testing in some cases to follow State law.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both House and Senate provisions but the House recedes on the provision allowing States to exempt certain cases from the requirement for mandatory genetic testing. No State exemption, however, can permit a putative father to avoid paternity establishment procedures.

C. Voluntary Paternity Acknowledgment

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures for a simple civil process for voluntary paternity acknowledgment, including hospital-based programs.

House bill

(1) Simple Civil Process. States must have procedures that create a simple civil process for voluntary acknowledging paternity under which benefits, rights and responsibilities of acknowledgement are explained to unwed parents;

(2) Hospital Program. States must have procedures that establish a paternity acknowledgement program through hospitals and birth record agencies (and other agencies as designated by the Secretary).

(3) Paternity Services. States must have procedures that require the agency responsible for maintaining birth records to offer voluntary paternity establishment services. The Secretary must issue regulations, including regulations on other State agencies that may offer voluntary paternity acknowledgement services and the conditions such agencies must meet.

(4) Affidavit. States must have procedures that require agencies to use a uniform affidavit developed by the Secretary that is entitled to full faith and credit in any other State.

Senate amendment

(1) Simple Civil Process. Similar to House provision; Senate does not include language requiring that the explanation of alternatives, legal consequences, and rights and responsibilities be "in a language that each can understand".

(2) Hospital Program. Similar to House provision, except States must also establish good cause exceptions for not trying to establish paternity.

(3) Paternity Services. Identical to House provision.

(4) Affidavit. Similar provision but Senate amendment allows States to develop their own voluntary paternity acknowledgement form as long as they follow all the basic elements of a form developed by the Secretary.

Conference agreement

(1) Simple Civil Process. The conference agreement follows the House and Senate provisions except the House agrees to drop its requirement that the explanation be "in a language that each [parent] can understand".

(2) Hospital Program. Conferees agree to follow the House and Senate provisions but with a modification of the Senate language on "good cause" exceptions so that such exceptions become a State option.

(3) Paternity Services. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(4) Affidavit. The House recedes to allow States to develop their own voluntary acknowledgment form as long as the form contains all the basic elements of a form developed by the Secretary.

D. Status of Signed Paternity Acknowledgment

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures under which the voluntary acknowledgment of paternity creates a rebuttable presumption, or at State option, a conclusive presumption of paternity.

House bill

(1) Legal Finding. States must have procedures under which a signed acknowledgement of paternity is considered a legal finding of paternity unless rescinded within 60 days.

(2) Contest. States must have procedures under which a paternity acknowledgment can be challenged in court only on the basis of fraud, duress, or material mistake of fact.

(3) Rescission. States must have procedures under which minors who sign a voluntary paternity acknowledgement are allowed to rescind it until age 18 or the date of the first proceeding to establish a support order, visitation, or custody rights.

Senate amendment

(1) Legal Finding. Adds the requirement that the name of the father appear in the birth records only if there is a paternity acknowledgement signed by both parents or paternity has been established by court order;

(2) Contest. Identical to House provision.

(3) Rescission. No provision.

Conference agreement

(1) Legal Finding. The House recedes to the Senate requirement that the father's name appear in the birth records only if certain conditions are met;

(2) Contest. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(3) Rescission. The House agrees to drop the rescission requirement, thereby leaving this decision up to States.

E. Bar on Acknowledgment Ratification Proceedings

Present Law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures under which such voluntary acknowledgment is admissible as evidence of paternity and the voluntary acknowledgment of paternity must be recognized as a basis for seeking a support order without requiring any further proceedings to establish paternity.

House bill

No judicial or administrative proceedings are required or permitted to ratify a paternity acknowledgement which is not challenged by the parents.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

F. Admissibility of Genetic Testing Results

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures which provide that any objection to genetic testing results must be made in writing within a specified number of days before any hearing at which such results may be introduced into evidence. If no objection is made, the test results must be admissible as evidence of paternity without the need for foundation testimony or other proof of authenticity or accuracy.

House bill

States must have procedures for admitting into evidence accredited genetic tests, unless any objection is made within a specified number of days, and if no objection is made, clarifying that test results are admissible without the need for foundation or other testimony.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

G. PRESUMPTION OF PATERNITY IN CERTAIN CASES

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures which create a rebuttable or, at State option, conclusive presumption of paternity based on genetic testing results indicating a threshold probability that the alleged father is the father of the child.

House bill

States must have laws that create a rebuttable or, at State option, conclusive presumption of paternity when results from genetic testing indicate a threshold probability that the alleged father is the father of the child.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

H. DEFAULT ORDERS

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures that require a default order to be entered in a paternity case upon a showing of service of process on the defendant and any additional showing required by State law.

House bill

A default order must be entered in a paternity case upon a showing of service of process on the defendant and any additional showing required by the State law.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

I. NO RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL

Present law

No provision.

House bill

State laws must state that parties in a contested paternity action are not entitled to a jury trial.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

J. TEMPORARY SUPPORT BASED ON PROBABLE PATERNITY

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Upon motion of a party, State law must require issuance of a temporary support order pending an administrative or judicial determination of parentage if paternity is indicated by genetic testing or other clear and convincing evidence.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

K. PROOF OF CERTAIN SUPPORT AND PATERNITY ESTABLISHMENT COSTS

Present Law

No provision.

House bill

Bills for pregnancy, childbirth, and genetic testing must be admissible in judicial proceedings without foundation testimony.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

L. STANDING OF PUTATIVE FATHERS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Putative fathers must have a reasonable opportunity to initiate paternity action.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

M. FILING OF ACKNOWLEDGMENTS AND ADJUDICATIONS IN STATE REGISTRY

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Both voluntary acknowledgements and adjudications of paternity must be filed with the State registry of birth records for data matches with the central Case Registry of Child Support Orders established by the State.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

N. NATIONAL PATERNITY ACKNOWLEDGMENT AFFIDAVIT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary is required to develop an affidavit to be used for voluntary acknowledgement of paternity which includes the Social Security number of each parent.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House and Senate provisions but includes a clarification that the Secretary, after consulting with the State child support directors, should list the common elements that States must include on their forms.

19. OUTREACH FOR VOLUNTARY PATERNITY ESTABLISHMENT

Present law

States are required to regularly and frequently publicize, through public service announcements, the availability of child support enforcement services.

House Bill

States must publicize the availability and encourage the use of procedures for voluntary establishment of paternity and child support.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

20. COOPERATION BY APPLICANTS FOR AND RECIPIENTS OF TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES

Present law

AFDC applicants and recipients are required to cooperate with the State in establishing the paternity of a child and in obtaining child support payments unless the applicant or recipient is found to have good cause for refusing to cooperate. Under the "good cause" regulations, the child support agency may determine that it is against the best interests of the child to seek to establish paternity in cases involving incest, rape, or pending procedures for adoption. Moreover, the agency may determine that it is against the best interest of the child to require the mother to cooperate if it is anticipated that such cooperation will result in the physical or emotional harm of the child, parent, or caretaker relative.

House bill

Individuals who apply for or receive public assistance under the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program must cooperate with child support enforcement efforts (establishing paternity, establishing, modifying or enforcing a support order) by providing specific identifying information about the other parent, unless the applicant or recipient is found to have good cause for refusing to cooperate. "Good cause" is defined by States. States may also require the applicant and child to submit to genetic testing. (See also Prohibitions in Title I, Section 101 of the House bill.)

Senate amendment

The Senate provision is similar to the House provision except the Senate amendment places additional specific requirements on State procedures. These include requiring the custodial parent to appear at interviews, hearings, and legal proceedings; requiring the State child support agency to notify the custodial parent and the IV–A and Medicaid agencies of whether she is cooperating and if not what she must do to cooperate; and requiring that when determining the custodial parent's cooperation States take into account the best interests of the child. Also requires the individual and the child to submit to genetic tests pursuant to a judicial or administrative order. Responsibility for determining failure to cooperate is shifted from the agency that administers the Temporary Assistance program to the agency that administers the child support program.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate's additional requirements for cooperation by adults applying for or receiving IV–A benefits.

CHAPTER 5—PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION AND FUNDING

21. FEDERAL MATCHING PAYMENTS

Present law

The Federal Government currently reimburses each State at the rate of 66 percent for the cost of administering its child support enforcement program. The Federal Government also reimburses States 90 percent of the laboratory costs of establishing paternity, and through fiscal year 1995, 90 percent of the costs of developing comprehensive Statewide automated systems. (There is no maintenance of effort provision in current law.)

House bill

The Federal matching payment for child support activities is maintained at 66 percent. The bill also adds a maintenance of effort requirement that the non-Federal share of IV–D funding for fiscal year 1997 and succeeding years not be less than such funding for fiscal year 1996.

Senate amendment

No provision. Maintains present law with respect to the Federal match rate of 66 percent.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

22. PERFORMANCE-BASED INCENTIVES AND PENALTIES

A. INCENTIVE ADJUSTMENTS TO FEDERAL MATCHING RATE

Present law

The Federal government reimburses approved administrative expenditures of States at a rate of 66%. In addition, the Federal government pays States an incentive amount ranging from 6 percent to 10 percent of both AFDC and non-AFDC collections.

House bill

Beginning in 1999, a new incentive system will reward good State performance by increasing the State's basic matching rate by up to 12 percentage points for outstanding performance in establishing paternity and by up to an additional 12 percentage points for overall performance (as measured by the percentage of cases that have support orders, the percentage of cases in which support is being paid, the ratio of child support collected to child support due, and cost-effectiveness). The Secretary will design the specific features of the system. In doing so, she will maintain overall Federal reimbursement of State programs through the combined matching rate and incentives at the level projected for the current combined matching and incentive payments to States. The effect of this provision is to change Federal financing so that relatively more Federal dollars will be awarded to States for good performance. The State must spend the money from incentive payments on their child support enforcement program.

Senate amendment

As under current law, the Senate amendment provides for an incentive payment to States, the funds for which come from the reimbursement of cash welfare payments to the Federal Government that is the Federal share of child support collections paid on behalf of families. Not later than 60 days after enactment, the DHHS Secretary is required to establish a committee, which must include State child support directors, which must develop for the Secretary's approval a formula for the distribution of incentive payments to the States. The State's incentive payment is based on its comparative performance as measured by five criteria and seven factors that are stipulated in the amendment.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Two conforming amendments are made in Section 454 of the Social Security Act.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes to the two conforming amendments in the House bill.

C. CALCULATION OF IV–D PATERNITY ESTABLISHMENT PERCENTAGE

Present law

States are required to meet Federal standards for the establishment of paternity. The standard relates to the percentage obtained by dividing the number of children in the State who are born out of wedlock, are receiving AFDC or child support enforcement services, and for whom paternity has been established by the number of children who are born out of wedlock and are receiving AFDC or child support enforcement services. To meet Federal requirements, this percentage in a State must be at least 75 percent or meet the following standards of improvement from the preceding year: 1) if the State paternity establishment ratio is between 50 and 75 percent, the State ratio must increase by 3 or more percentage points from the ratio of the preceding year; 2) if the State ratio is between 45 and 50, the ratio must increase at least 4 percentage points; 3) if the State ratio is between 40 and 45 percent, it must increase at least 5 percentage points; and 4) if the State ratio is below 40 percent, it must increase at least 6 percentage points. If an audit finds that the State's child support enforcement program has not substantially complied with the requirements of its State plan, the State is subject to a penalty. In accord with this penalty, the Secretary must reduce a State's AFDC benefit payment by not less than 1 percent nor more than 2 percent for the first failure to comply; by not less than 2 percent nor more than 3 percent for the second consecutive failure to comply; and by not less than 3 percent nor more than 5 percent for third or subsequent consecutive failure to comply.

House bill

The IV–D paternity establishment percentage for a fiscal year is equal to: (1) the total number of children in the State who were born out-of-wedlock, who have not reached age 1 and for whom paternity is acknowledged or established during the fiscal year, divided by (2) the total number of children born out-of-wedlock in the State during the fiscal year. The requirements for meeting the standard are the same as current law except the 75 percent rule is increased to 90 percent. The noncompliance provisions of the child support program are modified so that the Secretary must take overall program performance into account and the minimum paternity establishment percentage is raised from 75 to 90.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

D. EFFECTIVE DATES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The new incentive payments go into effect on October 1, 1997, but procedures for computing the State incentive payments are not actually based on the new system until fiscal year 1999; the changes in penalty procedure become effective upon enactment.

Senate amendment

Effective upon enactment, except present law applies for purposes of incentive payments for fiscal years before fiscal year 2000.

Conference agreement

Effective upon enactment.

23. FEDERAL AND STATE REVIEWS AND AUDITS

A. STATE AGENCY ACTIVITIES

Present law

States are required to maintain a full record of child support collections and disbursements and to maintain an adequate reporting system.

House bill

States are required to annually review and report to the Secretary, using data from their automatic data processing system, both information adequate to determine the State's compliance with Federal requirements for expedited procedures and timely case processing as well as the information necessary to calculate their levels of accomplishment and rates of improvement on the performance indicators in the bill.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except does not include requirement that States submit process information on State compliance with Federal mandates on timely case processing.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions but the House recedes on its requirement that States submit information on timely case processing.

B. FEDERAL ACTIVITIES

Present law

The Secretary must collect and maintain, on a fiscal year basis, up-to-date State-by-State statistics on each of the services provided under the child support enforcement program. The Secretary is also required to evaluate the implementation of State child support enforcement programs and conduct audits of these programs as necessary, but not less often than once every 3 years (or annually if a State has been found to be out of compliance with program rules).

House bill

The Secretary is required to determine the amount (if any) of incentives or penalties. The Secretary must also review State reports on compliance with Federal requirements and provide States with recommendations for corrective action. Audits must be conducted at least once every 3 years, or more often in the case of States that fail to meet Federal requirements. The purpose of the audits is to assess the completeness, reliability, accuracy, and security of data reported for use in calculating the performance indicators and to assess the adequacy of financial management of the State program.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

C. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

These provisions take effect beginning with the calendar quarter that begins 12 months after enactment.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

24. REQUIRED REPORTING PROCEDURES

Present law

The Secretary is required to assist States in establishing adequate reporting procedures and must maintain records of child support enforcement operations and of amounts collected and disbursed, including costs incurred in collecting support payments.

House bill

The Secretary is required to establish procedures and uniform definitions for State collection and reporting of information necessary to measure State compliance with expedited processes and timely case processing.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except does not mention timely case processing.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions except, as in the State Agency Activities provision (see 23A above), the House recedes by dropping State reports on timely case processing.

25. AUTOMATED DATA PROCESSING REQUIREMENTS

A. IN GENERAL

Present law

Federal law (P.L. 104-35) requires that by October 1, 1997, States have an operational automated data processing and information retrieval system designed to control, account for, and monitor all factors in the support enforcement and paternity determination process, the collection and distribution of support payments, and the costs of all services rendered.

House bill

States are required to have a single Statewide automated data processing and information retrieval system which has the capacity to perform the necessary functions, as described in this section.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

B. PROGRAM MANAGEMENT

Present law

Federal law requires that the automated data processing system be capable of providing management information on all IV-D cases from initial referral or application through collection and enforcement.

House bill

The State data system must be used to perform functions the Secretary specifies, including controlling and accounting for the use of Federal, State, and local funds and maintaining the data necessary to meet Federal reporting requirements in carrying out the program.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

C. CALCULATION OF PERFORMANCE INDICATORS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The automated system must maintain the requisite data for Federal reporting, calculate the State's performance for purposes of the incentive and penalty provisions, and have in place systems controls to ensure the completeness, reliability, and accuracy of the data.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

D. INFORMATION INTEGRITY AND SECURITY

Present law

Federal law requires that the automated data processing system be capable of providing security against unauthorized access to, or use of, the data in such system.

House bill

The State agency must have safeguards to protect the integrity, accuracy, and completeness of, and access to, data in the automated systems (including restricting access to passwords, monitoring of access to and use of the system, training, and imposing penalties).

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

E. REGULATIONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary shall prescribe final regulations for implementation of this section no later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

F. IMPLEMENTATION TIMETABLE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The statutory provisions for State implementation of Federal automatic data processing requirements are revised to provide that, first, all requirements enacted on or before the date of enactment of the Family Support Act of 1988 are to be met by October 1, 1995. The requirements enacted on or before the date of enactment of this bill must be met by October 1, 1999. The October 1, 1999 deadline will be extended by one day for each day by which the Secretary fails to meet the 2-year deadline for regulations.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except allows States to meet requirements of the Family Support Act by October 1, 1997 rather than 1995.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both House and Senate provisions but the completion date for data requirements imposed on States by the Family Support Act follows the Senate provision of October 1, 1997.

G. SPECIAL FEDERAL MATCHING RATE FOR DEVELOPMENT COSTS OF AUTOMATED SYSTEMS

Present law

The Federal Government, through FY 1995, reimburses States at a 90 percent matching rate for the costs of developing comprehensive Statewide automated systems.

House bill

The Federal government will provide 90 percent matching funds for fiscal year 1996 that will be applied to all State activities related to developing a comprehensive Statewide automated system. For fiscal years 1997 through 2001, the matching rate for the provisions of this bill and other authorized provisions will be the higher of 80 percent or the matching rate generally applicable to the State IV–D program, including incentive payments (which could be as high as 90 percent).

Senate amendment

Similar provision except Senate amendment continues the 90 percent matching rate for 1996 and 1997 in the case of provisions outlined in advanced planning documents submitted before May 1, 1995.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment but the House recedes on the provision to continue 90 percent reimbursement of data processing activities that were included in any advanced planning document submitted by States and approved by the Secretary before May 1, 1995. The 90 percent funding, which continues through October 1, 1997, includes approved expenditures by States that were made between October 1, 1995 and the date of passage of this legislation.

H. TEMPORARY LIMITATION ON PAYMENTS UNDER SPECIAL FEDERAL MATCHING RATE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary must create procedures to cap these payments at $260,000,000 over 5 years (fiscal year 1996–2000) to be distributed among States by a formula set in regulations which takes into account the relative size of State caseloads and the level of automation needed to meet applicable automatic data processing requirements.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment, except the limitation on payments is increased from $260,000,000 to $400,000,000.

26. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Present law

Annual appropriations are made to cover the expenses of the Administration for Children and Families, which includes the Federal Office of Child Support Enforcement (OCSE). Among OCSE's administrative expenses are the costs of providing technical assistance to the States.

House bill

The Secretary can use 1 percent of the Federal share of child support collections on behalf of families in the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program the preceding year to provide technical assistance to the States. Technical assistance can include training of State and Federal staff, research and demonstration programs, and special projects of regional or national significance. The Secretary must use up to 2 percent of the Federal share of collections for operation of the Federal Parent Locator Service to the extent that costs of the Parent Locator Service are not recovered by user fees.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

27. REPORTS AND DATA COLLECTION BY THE SECRETARY

Present law

The Secretary is required to submit to Congress, not later than 3 months after the end of the fiscal year, a complete report on all child support enforcement activities.

House bill

In addition to current reporting requirements, the Secretary is required to report the following data to Congress in her annual report each fiscal year:

(1) the total amount of child support payments collected;

(2) the cost to the State and Federal governments of furnishing child support services;

(3) the number of cases involving families that became ineligible for aid under part A with respect to whom a child support payment was received:

(4) the total amount of current support collected and distributed;

(5) the total amount of past due support collected and distributed as arrearages; and

(6) the total amount of support due and unpaid for all fiscal years.

These requirements apply to fiscal year 1996 and succeeding fiscal years.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires the Secretary to include information on the degree to which States met Federal statutory time limits in responding to interstate requests and in distributing child support collections.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow the provisions in both bills except that the House recedes on the additional requirements the Senate included in the Secretary's report to Congress.

CHAPTER 6—ESTABLISHMENT AND MODIFICATION OF SUPPORT ORDERS

28. NATIONAL CHILD SUPPORT GUIDELINES COMMISSION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Establishes a National Child Support Guidelines Commission that is responsible for deciding whether it is appropriate to develop national child support guidelines for consideration by the Congress or for adoption by individual States and the benefits and deficiencies of such models. Several matters the Commission must consider, such as the feasibility of adapting uniform terms in all child support orders, are outlined. The Commission is to be comprised of 12 individuals, 2 each appointed by the Chairman of Finance and Ways and Means, 1 each by the ranking member of Finance and Ways and Means, and 6 by the Secretary. The Commission report must be issued within 2 years.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes to the House provision of no National Guidelines Commission.

29. SIMPLIFIED PROCESS FOR REVIEW AND ADJUSTMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT ORDERS

Present law

A child support order legally obligates noncustodial parents to provide financial support for their child and stipulates the amount of the obligation and how it is to be paid. In 1984, P.L. 98–378 required States to establish guidelines for establishing child support orders. In 1988, P.L. 100–485 made the guidelines binding on judges and other officials who had authority to establish support orders. P.L. 100–485 also required States to review and adjust individual child support orders once every 3 years under some circumstances. States are required to notify both resident and nonresident parents of their right to a review.

House bill

States must review and, as appropriate, adjust the support order every 3 years. States may adjust child support orders by either applying the State guidelines and updating the reward amount or by applying a cost of living increase to the order. Both parties must be given 30 days after notice of adjustment to contest the results. States may use automated methods to identify orders eligible for review, conduct the review, identify orders eligible for adjustment, and apply the appropriate adjustment to the orders based on the threshold established by the State. States must also review and, upon a showing of a change in circumstances, adjust orders pursuant to the child support guidelines upon request of a party. States are required to give parties one notice of their right to request review and adjustment, which may be included in the order establishing the support amount.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except adds that review and adjustment must be done "upon the request of either parent or the State." If neither parent requests a review, States have the option of avoiding the 3-year review requirement.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow the House and Senate provisions with one exception. The House recedes to the Senate provision that States are not required to conduct reviews unless requested by either parent but with the additional requirement that States inform mothers at least once every 3 years in writing of their right to a review.

30. FURNISHING CONSUMER REPORTS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES RELATING TO CHILD SUPPORT

Present law

P.L. 102–537 amends the Fair Credit Act to require consumer reporting agencies to include in any consumer report information on child support delinquencies provided by or verified by a child support enforcement agency, which antedates the report by 7 years.

House bill

This section amends the Fair Credit Reporting Act. In response to a request by the head of a State or local child support agency (or a State or local government official authorized by the head of such an agency), consumer credit agencies must release information if the person making the request:

certifies that the consumer report is needed to establish an individual's capacity to make child support payments or determine the level of payments; gives the consumer credit agency 10 days notice that the report is being requested; and provides assurances that the consumer report will be kept confidential, will be used solely for child support purposes, and will not be used in connection with any other civil, administrative, or criminal proceeding or for any other purpose. Consumer reporting agencies must also give reports to a child support agency for use to set an initial or modified award.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires that the consumer must have been shown to be the father (i.e., paternity must be established).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions except that the House receded to the Senate requirement that the consumer must have been shown to be the father.

31. NONLIABILITY FOR DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS PROVIDING FINANCIAL RECORDS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Depository institutions are not liable for information provided to child support agencies. Child support agencies can disclose information obtained from depository institutions only for child support purposes. Individuals who knowingly disclose information from financial records can have civil actions brought against them in Federal district court; the maximum penalty is $1,000 for each disclosure or actual damages plus, in the case of "willful disclosure" resulting from "gross negligence," punitive damages, plus the costs of the action.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement that Sates have laws protecting depository institutions when information is provided to child support agencies.

CHAPTER 7—ENFORCEMENT OF SUPPORT ORDERS

32. FEDERAL INCOME TAX REFUND OFFSET

A. CHANGED ORDER OF REFUND DISTRIBUTION UNDER INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Present law

Since 1981 in AFDC cases, and 1984 in non-AFDC cases, Federal law has required States to implement procedures under which child support agencies can collect child support arrearages through the interception of Federal income tax refunds.

Child support arrearages obtained through Federal income tax refunds are distributed to the State and are retained by the State for arrearages owed to it under the AFDC assignment. States must reimburse the Federal government for their share of these arrearage payments. If no arrearages are owed the State, the money is used to pay arrearages to the family.

House bill

The Internal Revenue Code is amended so that offsets of child support arrears owed to individuals take priority over most debts owed Federal agencies. Proceeds from tax intercepts will be distributed as follows:

(1) for Federal education debts and debts to the Department of Health and Human Services;

(2) for child support owed to individuals;

(3) for child support arrearages owed to State governments; and

(4) for other Federal debts.

The provision also amends the Internal Revenue Code so that the order of priority for distribution of tax offsets follows the distribution rules for child support payments specified in subtitle A of this bill.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate so that the order of payments from tax intercepts remains unchanged. This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. ELIMINATION OF DISPARITIES IN TREATMENT OF ASSIGNED AND NON-ASSIGNED ARREARAGES

Present law

Federal rules set different criteria for AFDC and non-AFDC cases. For example, in AFDC cases arrearages may be collected through the income tax offset program regardless of the child's age. In non-AFDC cases, the tax offset program can be used only if the postminor child is disabled (pursuant to the meaning of disability under titles II or XVI of the SSA). Moreover, the arrearage in AFDC cases must be only $150 or more, whereas the arrearage in non-AFDC cases must be at least $500.

House bill

The bill eliminates disparate treatment of families not receiving public assistance by repealing provisions applicable only to support arrears not assigned to the State. The Secretary of the Treasury is given access to information in the National Directory of new Hires for tax purposes.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

33. INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE COLLECTION OF ARREARAGES

Present law

If the amount of overdue child support is at least $750, the Internal Revenue Service can enforce the child support obligation through its regular collection process, which may include seizure of property, freezing accounts, or use of other procedures if the child support enforcement agencies requests assistance according to prescribed rules (e.g., certifying that the delinquency is at least $750, etc.)

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends the Internal Revenue Code so that no additional fees can be assessed for adjustment to previously certified amounts for the same obligor, effective October 1, 1997.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement that IRS cannot charge additional fees in the case of a previously certified amount for the same obligor.

34. AUTHORITY TO COLLECT SUPPORT FROM FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

A. CONSOLIDATION AND STREAMLINING OF AUTHORITIES

Present law

Federal law allows the wages of Federal employees to be garnished to enforce legal obligations for child support or alimony. Federal law provides that moneys payable by the United States to any individual are subject to being garnished in order to meet an individual's legal obligation to provide child support or make alimony payments. An executive order issued 2/27/95 establishes the Federal government as a model employer in promoting and facilitating the establishment and enforcement of child support.

By Executive Order on 2/27/95, all Federal agencies, including the Uniformed Services, are required to cooperate fully in efforts to establish paternity and child support and to enforce the collection of child and medical support. All Federal agencies are to review their wage withholding procedures to ensure that they are in full compliance.

Beginning no later than July 1, 1995, the Director of the Office of Personal Management must publish annually in the Federal Register the list of agents (and their addresses) designated to receive service of withholding notices for Federal employees.

Federal law states that neither the United States nor any disbursing officer or government entity shall be liable with respect to any payment made from moneys due or payable from the United States pursuant to the legal process.

Federal law provides that money that may be garnished includes compensation for personal services, whether such compensation is denominated as wages, salary, commission, bonus, pay, or otherwise, and includes but is not limited to, severance pay, sick pay, incentive payments, and periodic payments.

Includes definitions of "United States", "child support", "alimony", "private person", and "legal process".

House bill

Federal Employees are subject to wage withholding and other actions taken against them by State Child Support Enforcement Agencies.

Federal agencies are responsible for wage withholding and other child support actions taken by the State as if they were a private employer.

The head of each Federal agency must designate an agent and place the agent's name, title, address, and telephone number in the Federal Register annually. The agent must, upon receipt of process, send written notice to the individual involved as soon as possible, but no later than 15 days, and to comply with any notice of wage withholding or respond to other process within 30 days.

Amends existing law governing allocation of moneys owed by a Federal employee to give priority to child support, to require allocation of available funds, up to the amount owed, among child support claimants, and to allocate remaining funds to other claimants on a first-come, first-served basis.

A government entity served with notice of process for enforcement of child support is not required to change its normal pay and disbursement cycle to comply with the legal process.

Similar to current law, the U.S., the government of the District of Columbia, and disbursing officers are not liable for child support payments made in accord with this section; nor is any Federal employee subject to disciplinary action or civil or criminal liability for disclosing information while carrying out the provisions of this section.

The President has the authority to promulgate regulations to implement this section as it applies to Federal employees of the Administrative branch of government; the President Pro Tempore of the Senate and Speaker of the House can issue regulations governing their employees; and the Chief Justice can issue regulations applicable to the Judicial branch.

This section broadens the definition of income to include funds such as insurance benefits, retirement and pension pay, survivor's benefits, compensation for death and black lung disease, veteran's benefits, and workers' compensation; but to exclude from income funds paid to defray expenses incurred in carrying out job duties, owed to the U.S., used to pay Federal employment taxes and fines and forfeitures ordered by court martial, withheld for tax purposes, used for health insurance or life insurance premiums, normal retirement contributions, or life insurance premiums.

This section includes definitions of "United States", "child support", "alimony", "private person", and "legal process".

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section includes conforming amendments to Title IV of the Social Security Act and Title 5 of the United States Code.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. MILITARY RETIRED AND RETAINER PAY

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section expands the definition of court to include an administrative or judicial tribunal which includes the child support enforcement agency.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

D. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section goes into effect 6 months after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

35. ENFORCEMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT OBLIGATIONS OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

A. AVAILABILITY OF LOCATOR INFORMATION

Present law

The Executive Order issued 2/27/95 requires a study which would include recommendations related to how to improve service of process for civilian employees and members of the Uniformed Services stationed outside of the United States.

House bill

The Secretary of Defense must establish a central personnel locator service that contains residential or, in specified instances, duty addresses of every member of the Armed Services (including retirees, the National Guard, and the Reserves). The locator service must be updated within 30 days of the time an individual establishes a new address. Information from the locator service must be made available to the Federal Parent Locator Service.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. FACILITATING GRANTING OF LEAVE FOR ATTENDANCE AT HEARINGS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary of Defense must issue regulations to facilitate granting of leave for members of the Armed Services to attend hearings to establish paternity or to establish child support orders.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. PAYMENT OF MILITARY RETIRED PAY IN COMPLIANCE WITH CHILD SUPPORT ORDERS

Present law

Federal law requires allotments from the pay and allowances of any member of the uniformed service when the member fails to pay child (or child and spousal) support payments.

House bill

The Secretary of each branch of the Armed Forces (including retirees, the Coast Guard, the National Guard, and the Reserves) is required to make child support payments directly to any State to which a custodial parent has assigned support rights as a condition of receiving public assistance. The Secretary of Defense must also ensure that payments to satisfy current support or child support arrears are made from disposable retirement pay. Payroll deductions must begin within 30 days or the first pay period after 30 days of receiving a wage withholding order.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

36. VOIDING OF FRAUDULENT TRANSFERS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States must have in effect the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act of 1981, the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act of 1984, or an equivalent law providing for voiding transfers of income or property in order to avoid payment of child support.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

37. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS THAT STATES SHOULD SUSPEND DRIVERS', BUSINESS, AND OCCUPATIONAL LICENSES OF PERSONS OWING PAST-DUE CHILD SUPPORT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

It is the sense of Congress that each State should suspend any driver's license, business license, or occupational license issued to any person who owes past-due child support.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

House recedes (no provision).

38. WORK REQUIREMENT FOR PERSONS OWING PAST-DUE CHILD SUPPORT

Present law

P.L. 100–485 required the Secretary to grant waivers to up to 5 States allowing them to provide JOBS services on a voluntary or mandatory basis to noncustodial parents who are unemployed and unable to meet their child support obligations. (In their report the conferees noted that the demonstrations would not grant any new powers to the States to require participation by noncustodial parents. The demonstrations were to be evaluated.

House bill

States must have laws that direct courts to order individuals owing past-due child support for a child receiving assistance under the Temporary Family Assistance program either to pay the support due or to participate in work activities. "Past-due support" is defined.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except refers to "support" rather than "past-due support."

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow the House and Senate provisions except that the Senate recedes to the House provision that work apply only to nonresident parents owing past-due support.

39. DEFINITION OF SUPPORT ORDER

Present law

No provision.

House bill

A support order is defined as an order issued by a court or an administrative process established under State law that requires support of a child or of a child and the parent with whom the child lives.

Senate amendment

A support order is defined as a judgement, decree, or order (whether temporary, final, or subject to modification) issued by a court or an administrative agency for the support (monetary support, health care, arrearages, or reimbursement) of a child (including a child who has reached the age of majority under State law) or of a child and the parent with whom the child lives.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate definition of a support order.

40. REPORTING ARREARAGE TO CREDIT BUREAUS

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures which require them to periodically report to consumer reporting agencies the name of debtor parents owing at least 2 months of overdue child support and the amount of child support overdue. However, if the amount overdue is less than $1,000, information regarding it shall be made available only at the option of the State. Moreover, any information may only be made available after the noncustodial parent has been notified of the proposed action and has been given reasonable opportunity to contest the accuracy of the information. States are permitted to charge consumer reporting agencies that request child support arrearage information for a fee, not to exceed the actual cost.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

States are required to have procedures to periodically report to consumer credit reporting agencies the name of any noncustodial parent who is delinquent in the payment of support and the amount of overdue support owed by the parent.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement that States periodically report to consumer credit reporting agencies.

41. LIENS

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures under which liens are imposed against real and personal property for amounts of overdue support owed by a noncustodial parent who resides or owns property in the State.

House bill

States are required to have procedures to accord full faith and credit and to enforce in accordance with State law a lien from another State. The lien must be accompanied by a certification from the State issuing the lien of the amount of overdue support and a certification that due process requirements have been met. The second State is not required to register the underlying order, unless contested on the grounds of mistake of fact.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

42. STATE LAW AUTHORIZING SUSPENSION OF LICENSES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States have the authority to withhold, suspend, or restrict the use of drivers' licenses, professional and occupational licenses, and recreational licenses of individuals owing past-due support or failing, after receiving appropriate notice, to comply with subpoenas or warrants relating to paternity or child support proceedings.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

43. DENIAL OF PASSPORTS FOR NONPAYMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

If an individual owes arrearages in excess of $5,000 of child support, the Secretary of HHS must request that the State Department deny, revoke, or limit the individual's passport. State child support agencies must have procedures for certifying arrearages in excess of $5,000 and for notifying individuals who are in arrears.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

44. INTERNATIONAL CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

Present law

The United States has not signed any of the major treaties regarding international support enforcement. Pursuant to the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA), most States have reciprocal agreements with at least one foreign country regarding reciprocal enforcement of support orders. States do not have the power to enter into treaties.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Secretary of State is authorized to negotiate reciprocal agreements with foreign nations on behalf of the States, territories, and possessions of the United States regarding the international enforcement of child support obligations.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with substantial modification. The Secretary of State, with concurrence of the Secretary of HHS, is authorized to declare reciprocity with foreign countries having requisite procedures for establishing and enforcing support orders. The Secretary may revoke reciprocity if she determines that the enforcement procedures do not continue to meet the requisite criteria.

The requirements for reciprocity include procedures in the foreign country for U.S. residents—available at no cost—to establish parentage, to establish and enforce support orders for children and custodial parents, and to distribute payments.

The Secretary of HHS is required to facilitate enforcement services in international cases involving residents of the U.S. and of foreign reciprocating countries, including developing uniform forms and procedures, and providing information from the FPLS on the State of residence of the obligor.

Where there is no Federal reciprocity agreement, States are permitted to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries.

The State plan must provide that request for services in international cases be treated the same as interstate cases, except that no application will be required and no costs will be assessed against the foreign country or the obligee (costs may be assessed at State option against the obligor).

45. DENIAL OF MEANS-TESTED FEDERAL BENEFITS TO NONCUSTODIAL PARENTS WHO ARE DELINQUENT IN PAYING CHILD SUPPORT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Noncustodial parents who are more than 2 months delinquent in paying child support are not eligible to receive means-tested Federal benefits.

Conference agreement

Senate recede (no provision).

46. CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT FOR INDIAN TRIBES

Present law

There are about 340 Federally recognized Indian tribes in the 48 contiguous States. Among these tribes there are approximately 130 tribal courts and 17 Courts of Indian Offenses. Most tribal codes authorize their courts to hear parentage and child support matters that involve at least one member of the tribe or person living on the reservation. This jurisdiction may be exclusive or concurrent with State court jurisdiction, depending on specified circumstances.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires States to make reasonable efforts to enter into cooperative agreements with an Indian tribe or organization if the tribe or organization has an established tribal court system to establish paternity, establish and enforce support orders, and enter support orders in accordance with guidelines established by the tribe or organization. Such agreements shall provide for the cooperative delivery of child support enforcement services in Indian country and for the forwarding of all funds collected by the tribe or organization to the State agency, or conversely, by the State agency to the tribe or organization, which shall distribute the funds according to the agreement. The DHHS Secretary in appropriate cases is authorized to send Federal funds directly to the tribe or organization.

Conference agreement

Senate recede (no provision).

47. FINANCIAL INSTITUTION DATA MATCHES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

States are required to implement procedures under which the State child support agency shall enter into agreements with financial institutions doing business within the State to develop and operate a data match system, using automated data exchanges to the maximum extent feasible, in which such financial institutions are required to provide for each calendar quarter the name, address, Social Security number, and other identifying information for each noncustodial parent identified by the State who has an account at the institution and, in response to a notice of lien or levy, to encumber or surrender assets held by the institution on behalf of the noncustodial parent who is subject to the child support lien. Includes definition of the term "financial institution."

Conference agreement

Conferees agree that the House recede to the Senate requirement that States perform data matches on information supplied by financial institutions in the case of parents who owe past-due child support and have liens against them.

48. ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS AGAINST PATERNAL GRANDPARENTS IN CASES OF MINOR PARENTS

Present law

No provision. However, Wisconsin and Hawaii have State laws that make grandparents financially responsible for their minor children's dependents.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

States would be required to implement procedures under which any child support order enforced by a child support enforcement agency would be enforceable against the paternal grandparents of a minor father if the child's minor mother were receiving benefits from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families block grant program.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement that paternal grandparents be held accountable for paying child support in the case of minor mother with children being supported by benefits from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families block grant, or that the maternal grandparents be held accountable for paying child support in the case of a minor father raising children who receive benefits from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families block grant.

CHAPTER 8—MEDICAL SUPPORT

49. TECHNICAL CORRECTION TO ERISA DEFINITION OF MEDICAL CHILD SUPPORT ORDER

Present law

P.L. 103-66 requires States to adopt laws to require health insurers and employers to enforce orders for medical and child support and forbids health insurers from denying coverage to children who are not living with the covered individual or who were born outside of marriage. Under P.L. 103-66, group health plans are required to honor "qualified medical child support orders."

House bill

This provision expands the definition of medical child support order in ERISA to clarify that any judgement, decree, or order that is issued by a court of competent jurisdiction or by an administrative adjudication has the force and effect of law.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

50. ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS FOR HEALTH CARE COVERAGE

Present law

Federal law requires the Secretary to require IV-D agencies to petition for the inclusion of medical support as part of child support whenever health care coverage is available to the noncustodial parent at reasonable cost.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

All orders enforced under this part must include a provision for health care coverage. If the noncustodial parent changes jobs and the new employer provides health coverage, the State must send notice of coverage, which shall operate to enroll the child in the health plan, to the new employer.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate provision on medical care coverage provided to children by nonresident parents changing jobs.

CHAPTER 9—ENHANCING RESPONSIBILITY AND OPPORTUNITY FOR NON-RESIDENTIAL PARENTS

51. GRANTS TO STATES FOR ACCESS AND VISITATION PROGRAMS

A. IN GENERAL

Present law

In 1988, Congress authorized the Secretary to fund for fiscal year 1990 and fiscal year 1991 demonstration projects by States to help divorcing or never-married parents cooperate with each other, especially in arranging for visits between the child and the nonresident parent.

House bill

The bill authorizes grants to States for access and visitation programs including mediation, counseling, education, development of parenting plans, and visitation enforcement. Visitation enforcement can include monitoring, supervision, neutral drop-off and pickup, and development of guidelines for visitation and alternative custody agreements. States are required to monitor and evaluate their programs and are given the authority to subcontract the program to courts, local public agencies, or private non-profit agencies. Programs operating under the grant do not have to be Statewide. Funding is authorized as capped spending under section IV-D of the Social Security Act. Projects are required to supplement rather than supplant State funds.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. AMOUNT OF GRANT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The amount of the grant to a State is equal to either 90 percent of the State expenditures during the year for access and visitation programs or the allotment for the State for the fiscal year.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. ALLOTMENT TO STATES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The allotment to the State bears the same ratio to the amount appropriated for the fiscal year as the number of children living in the State with one biological parent divided by the national number of children living with one biological parent. The Administration for Children and Families must adjust allotments to ensure that no State is allotted less than $50,000 for fiscal years 1996 or 1997 or less than $100,000 for any year after 1997.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

D. STATE ADMINISTRATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States may use the money to create their own programs or to fund grant programs with courts, local public agencies, or nonprofit organizations. The programs do not need to be Statewide. States must monitor, evaluate, and report on their programs in accord with the regulations issued by the Secretary.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

CHAPTER 10—EFFECT OF ENACTMENT

52. EFFECTIVE DATES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Except as noted in the text of the bill for specific provisions, the general effective date for provisions in the bill is October 1, 1996. However, given that many of the changes required by this bill must be approved by State Legislatures, the bill contains a grace period tied to the meeting schedule of State Legislatures. In any given State, the bill becomes effective either on October 1, 1996 or on the first day of the first calendar quarter after the close of the first regular session of the State Legislature that begins after the date of enactment of the bill. In the case of States that require a constitutional amendment to comply with the requirements of the bill, the grace period is extended either 1 year after the effective date of the necessary State constitutional amendment or 5 years after the date of enactment of the bill.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

SUBTITLE D—RESTRICTING WELFARE AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR ALIENS

1. STATEMENTS OF NATIONAL POLICY CONCERNING WELFARE AND IMMIGRATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Congress makes the following statements concerning national policy with respect to welfare and immigration:

(i) Self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of U.S. immigration law since this country's earliest immigration statutes;

(ii) It continues to be the immigration policy of the U.S. that aliens within the nation's borders depend not on public resources, but rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families and sponsors and that the availability of public benefits not constitute an incentive for immigration;

(iii) Aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits at increasing rates;

(iv) Current eligibility rules and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system;

(v) It is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements to assure that aliens become self-reliant; and

(vi) It is a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

CHAPTER 1—ELIGIBILITY FOR FEDERAL BENEFITS PROGRAMS

2. INELIGIBILITY OF ILLEGAL ALIENS FOR CERTAIN FEDERAL BENEFITS PROGRAMS

Present law

Current law limits alien eligibility for most major Federal assistance programs, including restrictions on, among other programs, Supplemental Security Income, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, housing assistance, and Food Stamps Programs. Current law is silent on alienage under, among other programs, school lunch and nutrition, Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC), Head Start, migrant health centers, and the earned income tax credit.

Under the programs with restrictions, benefits are generally allowed for permanent resident aliens (also referred to as immigrants and green card holders), refugees, asylees, and parolees, but benefits (other than emergency Medicaid) are denied to nonimmigrants (or aliens lawfully admitted as, e.g., tourists, students, or temporary workers) and illegal aliens. Benefits are permitted under AFDC, SSI, unemployment compensation, and nonemergency Medicaid to other aliens permanently residing in the U.S. under color of law (PRUCOL).

House bill

Any alien who is not lawfully present in the U.S. shall not be eligible for any Federal means-tested public benefits program, with the exception of non-cash, in-kind emergency assistance, including emergency medical services. Housing-related assistance, which allows limited assistance for households containing both eligible and ineligible individuals, remains prohibited as under current law.

The Attorney General is to decide which aliens are lawfully present for purposes of benefit eligibility. In doing so, the Attorney General is not required to consider an alien to be lawfully present solely because the alien is considered to be permanently residing under color of law (PRUCOL) under current standards.

Senate amendment

Any individual who is not lawfully present in the U.S. is ineligible for any Federal benefit other than: emergency medical services under Medicaid; short-term emergency disaster relief; assistance under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; and public health assistance for immunizations and, if found necessary by HHS, testing for and treatment of communicable diseases. Similarly, States which administer a Federally-funded benefit program (or provide benefits pursuant to such a program) are not required to assist aliens who are not lawfully present.

An individual is lawfully present for purposes of qualifying for benefits if the individual is a citizen, non-citizen national (i.e. American Samoan), permanent resident alien, refugee, asylee (including an alien who has had his/her deportation stayed because it would return the alien to a country which would persecute him/her), or an alien who has been paroled into the U.S. by the Attorney General for at least 1 year.

Noncitizens are not lawfully present for the purposes of the SSI program merely because they are considered to be permanently residing under color of law (PRUCOL).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, except that aliens who are not lawfully present in the U.S. and nonimmigrants and aliens paroled into the U.S. for a period of less than 1 year as described below are grouped together and defined as classes "not qualified" to receive most mandatory Federal public benefits. However, even these "non-qualified" aliens may continue to receive: short-term, in-kind, emergency disaster relief; emergency medical services under Medicaid; public health assistance for immunizations and testing and treatment to prevent the spread of communicable diseases; and programs specified by the Attorney General as necessary to protect life and safety, such as soup kitchens and crisis counseling. With regard to public housing assistance, non-qualified aliens receiving benefits on the date of enactment will continue to be treated as they are under current law.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the definition of Federal public benefits for this and subsequent sections, namely: any mandatory grant, contract, loan, professional license, or commercial license provided by an agency of the United States or by directly appropriated funds of the United States; and any mandatory retirement, welfare, health, disability, public or assisted housing, post-secondary education, food assistance, unemployment benefit, or any other similar benefit for which payments or assistance are provided to an individual, household, or family by an agency of the U.S. or by directly appropriated funds of the U.S.

The allowance for treatment of communicable diseases is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply where absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases. This is only a stop-gap measure until the deportation of a person or persons unlawfully here. It is not intended to provide authority for continued treatment of such diseases for a long term.

The allowance for emergency medical services under Medicaid is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply to medical care that is strictly of an emergency nature, such as medical treatment administered in an emergency room, critical care unit, or intensive care unit. The conferees do not intend that emergency medical services include pre-natal or delivery care assistance that is not strictly of an emergency nature as specified herein.

The intent of the conferees is that title I, part A of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act would not be affected by section 12401 because the benefit is not provided to an individual, household, or family eligibility unit.

The conferees believe that, as a matter of national immigration policy regarding immigration and welfare, self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of United States immigration law since this country's earliest immigration statutes.

It continues to be the immigration policy of the United States that aliens within the nation's borders not depend on taxpayer-funded public resources to meet their needs, but rather rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families, their sponsors, and private organizations. The availability of taxpayer-funded public benefits should not constitute an incentive for immigration to the United States.

Despite the principle of self-sufficiency, aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits from Federal, State, and local governments at increasing rates. Current eligibility rules for public benefits and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved wholly incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system.

The conferees further believe that it is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements in order to assure that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy. It is also a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits. Finally, with respect to the State authority to make determinations concerning alien eligibility for public benefits in this subtitle, a State that chooses to follow the Federal classifications in determining the eligibility of aliens for public benefits shall be considered to have chosen the least restrictive means available for achieving the compelling government interest of assuring that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

3. INELIGIBILITY OF NONIMMIGRANTS, ASYLEES, AND PAROLEES FOR CERTAIN FEDERAL BENEFITS PROGRAMS

A. IN GENERAL

Present law

The Immigration and Nationality Act lists 19 categories of nonimmigrant aliens, including tourists, business visitors, foreign students, exchange visitors, temporary workers, and diplomats. Aliens granted political asylum and aliens allowed into the U.S. under the Attorney General's discretionary parole power are not among the nonimmigrant categories. Nonimmigrants generally are denied benefits under public benefits programs that have alienage restrictions. By contrast, asylees and parolees are not disqualified.

House bill

Aliens who are lawfully in the U.S. as nonimmigrants are ineligible for means-tested Federal benefits, other than the programs excepted below. Nonimmigrants admitted as temporary agricultural workers are not to be treated as nonimmigrants for public benefits purposes, but rather are to be treated as immigrants. Other aliens who also are not to be treated as nonimmigrants include aliens granted asylum and aliens paroled into the U.S. for 1 year or longer. However, aliens paroled into the U.S. for a period briefer than 1 year are subject to the nonimmigrant restrictions.

Senate amendment

Nonimmigrant aliens are not considered lawfully present for Federal benefits purposes, and are thus ineligible for any Federal benefit other than the programs specifically excepted below.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, as described in section 2 above.

The conferees believe that, as a matter of national immigration policy regarding immigration and welfare, self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of United States immigration law since this country's earliest immigration statutes.

It continues to be the immigration policy of the United States that aliens within the nation's borders not depend on mandatory taxpayer-funded public resources to meet their needs, but rather rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families, their sponsors, and private organizations. The availability of taxpayer-funded public benefits should not constitute an incentive for immigration to the United States.

Despite the principle of self-sufficiency, aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits from Federal, State, and local governments at increasing rates. Current eligibility rules for public benefits and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved wholly incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system.

The conferees further believe that it is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements in order to assure that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy. It is also a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits. Finally, with respect to the State authority to make determinations concerning alien eligibility for public benefits in this subtitle, a State that chooses to follow the Federal classifications in determining the eligibility of aliens for public benefits shall be considered to have chosen the least restrictive means available for achieving the compelling government interest of assuring that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

B. EXCEPTED PROGRAMS

Present law

Of Federal programs with alien eligibility restrictions, nonimmigrants are eligible for emergency services under Medicaid. Temporary agricultural workers may receive legal services funded through the Legal Services Corporation with respect to their wages, housing, and other employment rights covered by their employment contract. Those nonimmigrants whose wages are not exempt from unemployment taxes (FUTA) may qualify for unemployment compensation under certain circumstances.

House bill

Exception to the bill's blanket denial of Federal means-tested assistance to nonimmigrants is made for Emergency Assistance, including non-cash emergency medical services. Housing-related assistance is not covered by the bill's general rule, but rather existing restrictions under housing programs are to continue to apply. These restrictions deny assisted housing to nonimmigrants except as they may incidentally benefit as members of mixed families. However, all aliens granted parole are eligible for housing assistance.

Senate amendment

Permits nonimmigrants (and all others who are not lawfully present) to receive: emergency medical services under Medicaid; short-term emergency disaster relief; school lunch and child nutrition assistance; and public health assistance for immunizations and, if found necessary by HHS, testing for and treatment of communicable diseases.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, as described in section 2 above.

The allowance for treatment of communicable diseases is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply where absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases. This is only a stop-gap measure until the deportation of a person or persons unlawfully here. It is not intended to provide authority for continued treatment of such diseases for a long term.

The allowance for emergency medical services under Medicaid is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply to medical care that is strictly of an emergency nature, such as medical treatment administered in an emergency room, critical care unit, or intensive care unit. The conferees do not intend that emergency medical services include pre-natal or delivery care assistance that is not strictly of an emergency nature as specified herein.

C. TREATMENT OF ALIENS PAROLED INTO THE U.S.

Present law

In some cases, aliens paroled into the U.S. are entitled to public benefits while they remain in parole status.

House bill

Aliens paroled into the U.S. for less than 1 year are treated as nonimmigrants for benefits purposes (i.e., general ineligibility) but aliens paroled into the U.S. for longer than 1 year are treated as immigrants (i.e. somewhat broader, but still limited, eligibility).

Senate amendment

Aliens who have been paroled into the U.S. for a period of less than 1 year are not considered to be lawfully present for benefits purposes and therefore are generally ineligible for benefits. (Aliens who have been paroled into the U.S. for a period of 1 year or longer are considered to be lawfully present.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, as described in section 2 above.

4. LIMITED ELIGIBILITY OF LAWFULLY PRESENT ALIENS (OTHER THAN NONIMMIGRANTS) FOR FEDERAL BENEFITS

A. IN GENERAL

Present law

With the exception of certain buy-in rights under Medicare, immigrants (or aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence) are eligible for major Federal benefits, but the ability of some immigrants to meet the needs tests for SSI, AFDC, and food stamps may be affected by the sponsor-to-alien deeming provisions discussed below. Refugees, asylees, and parolees also generally are eligible. Benefits are permitted under AFDC, SSI, unemployment compensation, and non-emergency Medicaid to other aliens permanently residing in the U.S. under color of law (PRUCOL).

House bill

With certain specific exceptions noted below, any alien who is lawfully present in the U.S. shall not be eligible for any of the following Federal means-tested public benefits programs (except as they provide non-cash, in-kind emergency services): Supplemental Security Income, Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, Social Services Block Grant (Title XX), Medicaid, and Food Stamps.

Under programs other than the foregoing 5 major benefits programs, the eligibility of lawfully present aliens (other than nonimmigrants) for benefits would continue to be governed by current law as modified by the sponsor-to-alien deeming provisions discussed below. The Attorney General is to determine which aliens are "lawfully present" and is not bound in doing so by current interpretations of "PRUCOL", or "permanently residing under color of law."

Senate amendment

Expect for specific classes noted below, all aliens are to be denied SSI.

Except for specific classes and programs noted below, all aliens arriving after enactment are ineligible for all Federal needs-based assistance for 5 years after entry.

Except for specific classes and programs noted below, States may deny noncitizens need-based assistance funded by the Federal Government (e.g., Temporary Assistance for Needy Families and similar block grants).

For lawfully present aliens who are in the U.S. on the date of enactment and who have been here 5 years, current rules will continue to apply to programs other than SSI, except as eligibility may be affected by the State option to deny noncitizens needs-based assistance funded by Federal funds.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with the following modifications:

(1) current resident aliens and those arriving after enactment (with the exception of the specific classes described below) may not receive SSI or food stamps until attaining citizenship or working long enough (that is, at least 10 years) to qualify for Social Security retirement benefits;

(2) aliens have no entitlement to benefits;

(3) States have the option of providing benefits to lawfully present aliens under the TANF, Medicaid, or Title XX programs; and

(4) new entrants are denied benefits under all mandatory Federal means-tested programs for five years after their entry into the U.S. with the exception of those programs described in section (4)(B) below.

B. EXCEPTED PROGRAMS

Present law

Not applicable. (See above.)

House bill

Only exception is for non-cash, in-kind emergency services, as described above.

Senate amendment

The 5-year bar on Federally-funded assistance to new arrivals does not apply to:

(1) emergency medical services under Medicaid;

(2) short-term emergency disaster relief;

(3) assistance under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966;

(4) the Head Start program;

(5) foster care and adoption assistance (but foster parents or adoptive parents cannot be aliens who are ineligible for benefits due to this provision);

(6) public health assistance for immunizations and, if found necessary by HHS, testing for and treatment of communicable diseases; and

(7) programs specified by the Attorney General that (i) deliver services at the community level, (ii) do not condition assistance on the recipient's income or resources, and (iii) are necessary to protect life, safety, or public health (e.g. soup kitchens).

States may deny needs-based assistance funded by the Federal government to all noncitizens except (1) programs described above in 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, or 7; or (2) assistance to noncitizens in the classes described below.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that the following programs are also excepted: (1) programs of student assistance under titles IV, V, IX, and X of the Higher Education Act of 1965, and (2) means-tested programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

C. EXCEPTED CLASSES

Present law

Not applicable. (See above.)

House bill

Excepted are: (i) refugees during their first 5 years in the U.S; (ii) aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence, are over 75 years of age, and have resided in U.S. for at least 5 years; (iii) honorably discharged veterans and active duty personnel or their spouses and unmarried dependent children lawfully residing in any State or territory or possession of the U.S.; (iv) aliens lawfully residing in any State or Territory or Possession of the U.S. during the first year of enactment; and (v) immigrants who are unable to comply with naturalization requirements because of disability or mental impairment.

Senate amendment

Excepted are: (i) refugees during their first 5 years in the U.S.; (ii) honorably discharged veterans (if determined by the Attorney General to be lawfully present), and their spouses and unmarried dependent children; (iii) aliens receiving SSI benefits on the date of enactment (whose eligibility would end) will remain eligible for SSI until January 1, 1997; (iv) asylees (including those who have had deportation stayed because it would return them to a country which would persecute them) during their first 5 years in the U.S.; (v) noncitizens who have worked long enough to be fully insured for Social Security or disability insurance benefits are exempt from the ban on SSI and the prospective 5 year ban; and (vi) agencies may exempt individuals who have been battered or subjected to extreme cruelty from the denial of State-administered Federal benefits (and the sponsor-alien "deeming" provision discussed below) if the resulting denial of assistance will endanger their well-being.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment so that the following classes are excepted:

(1) refugees (during their first 5 years in the U.S.), asylees (for 5 years after being adjudicated as an asylee), and aliens whose deportation has been withheld (during their first 5 years after their deportation has been withheld);

(2) aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence and have worked at least 40 quarters (that is, at least 10 years which is currently the criteria for eligibility for Social Security retirement benefits), when a worker reaches retirement age;

(3) honorably discharged veterans and active duty personnel or their spouses and unmarried dependent children lawfully residing in any State, territory, or possession of the U.S.; and

(4) lawfully present aliens receiving SSI or food stamps on the date of enactment, whose eligibility would end January 1, 1997.

D. EFFECTIVE DATE(S)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

In general, applies to applicants for benefits after the date of enactment. For current residents of the U.S. on the date of enactment, restriction on eligibility does not apply until 1 year after enactment.

Senate amendment

In general, applies to benefits on or after the date of enactment. Current SSI recipients lose eligibility after January 1, 1997. The Attorney General must adopt regulations to verify the eligibility of applicants for Federal benefits no later than 18 months after enactment. States must have a verification system that complies with these regulations within 24 months of their adoption.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that the eligibility of current resident noncitizens receiving SSI and food stamps on the date of enactment ends for months beginning on or after January 1, 1997.

E. REAPPLICATION

Present law

An individual who is eligible for SSI but who thereafter becomes ineligible for a period of 12 consecutive months must reapply for benefits.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Individuals receiving SSI benefits on the date of enactment who are notified of their termination of eligibility may reapply for benefits within 4 months after the date of enactment. The Commissioner of Social Security shall determine within 1 year of enactment the eligibility of individuals who reapply within 1 year after enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that similar reapplication procedures are established with regard to food stamps.

5. NOTIFICATION

Present law

Under regulation, individual advance written notice must be given of an intent to suspend, reduce, or terminate SSI benefits.

House bill

Each Federal Agency that administers an affected program shall post information and provide general notification to the public and to program recipients of changes regarding eligibility.

Senate amendment

The Commissioner of Social Security shall notify noncitizens made ineligible for SSI benefits within 3 months after the date of enactment.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

6. VERIFICATION AND INFORMATION SHARING

Present law

State agencies that administer most major Federal programs with alienage restrictions generally use the SAVE (Systematic Alien Verification for Entitlements) system to verify the immigration status of aliens applying for benefits.

AFDC and SSI require safeguards that restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants or recipients to purposes connected to the administration of needs-based Federal programs.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Attorney General must adopt regulations to verify the lawful presence of applicants for Federal benefits no later than 18 months after enactment. States must have a verification system that complies with these regulations within 24 months of their adoption.

The agencies which administer SSI, housing assistance programs under the United States Housing Act of 1937, or block grants for temporary assistance for needy families (the successor program to AFDC) are required to furnish information to the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) about aliens they know to be unlawfully in the United States at least 4 times annually and upon INS request.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except with regard to agencies required to furnish information to the INS, which was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

CHAPTER 2—ELIGIBILITY FOR STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS

7. INELIGIBILITY OF ILLEGAL ALIENS FOR STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS

Present law

Under Plyler v. Doe (457 U.S. 202 (1982)), States may not deny illegal alien children access to a public elementary education. However, the narrow 5-4 Supreme Court decision may imply that illegal aliens may be denied at least some State benefits and that Congress may influence the eligibility of illegal aliens for State benefits. Many, but not all, State general assistance laws currently deny illegal aliens means-tested general assistance.

House bill

No alien who is not lawfully present in the U.S. shall be eligible for any State and local means-tested public benefits programs (see definitions below). The only exception is emergency medical services.

Senate amendment

No provision affects programs wholly administered and funded by State or local governments. Aliens who are not lawfully present are ineligible for benefits paid with Federal funds under State-administered programs (or paid with State funds pursuant to such programs).

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

8. INELIGIBILITY OF NONIMMIGRANTS FOR STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS

Present law

Currently, there is no Federal law barring nonimmigrants from State and local needs-based programs. In general, States are restricted in denying assistance to nonimmigrants where the denial is inconsistent with the terms under which the nonimmigrants were admitted. Where a denial of benefits is not inconsistent with Federal immigration law, however, States have broader authority to deny benefits and States often do deny certain benefits to nonimmigrants. Also, aliens in most nonimmigrant categories generally may have difficulty qualifying for many State and local benefits because of requirements that they be State "residents."

House bill

No alien who is lawfully present in the U.S. as a non-immigrant shall be eligible for any State and local means-tested public benefit programs. Exceptions for: non-cash emergency assistance (including emergency medical services) aliens granted asylum, and certain temporary agricultural workers who are treated as immigrants for purposes of application for State and local means-tested benefits (see below). Aliens paroled into the U.S. for a period of less than 1 year are considered to be nonimmigrants under this part.

Senate amendment

No provision affects programs wholly administered and funded by State or local governments. Nonimmigrants are not considered to be lawfully present for Federal benefits purposes and are thus ineligible for benefits paid with Federal funds under State-administered programs (or paid with State funds pursuant to such programs).

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

9. STATE AUTHORITY TO LIMIT ELIGIBILITY OF IMMIGRANTS FOR STATE AND LOCAL MEANS-TESTED PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS

Present Law

Under Graham v. Richardson (403 U.S. 365 (1971)), States are barred from denying legal permanent residents from State-funded assistance that is provided to equally needy citizens.

House bill

States are authorized to determine eligibility requirements for aliens who are lawfully present in the U.S. for any State and local means-tested public benefit program (other than non-cash emergency assistance, including emergency medical services), with exception of:

(i) refugees during their first 5 years in the U.S.;

(ii) Aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence, are over 75 years of age, and have resided in U.S. for five years;

(iii) Honorably discharged veterans and active duty personnel or their spouses and unmarried dependent children lawfully residing in any State or territory or possession of the U.S.; and

(iv) Aliens lawfully residing in any State or Territory or possession of the U.S. during the first year after the date of enactment. Aliens lawfully present would remain eligible for emergency medical services.

In addition to enhancing State discretion to impose alienage restrictions, eligibility for State and local needs-based benefits also would be restricted by application of new sponsor-to-alien deeming requirements discussed below.

Senate amendment

No provision restricts benefits wholly funded by State or local governments, but States may use the sponsor-alien deeming provisions, described below, to determine whether a sponsored individual qualifies for assistance under such a program.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

CHAPTER 3—ATTRIBUTION OF INCOME AND AFFIDAVITS OF SUPPORT

10. REQUIREMENTS FOR AFFIDAVITS OF SUPPORT

A. WHEN REQUIRED AND ENFORCEABILITY

Present law

Administrative authorities may request an affidavit of support on behalf of an alien seeking permanent residency. Requirements for affidavits of support are not specified under current law.

Under the Immigration and Nationality Act, an alien who is likely to become a public charge may be excluded from entry unless this restriction is waived, as is the case for refugees. By regulation and administrative practice, the State Department and the Immigration and Naturalization Service permit a prospective permanent resident alien (also immigrant or green card holder) who otherwise would be excluded as a public charge (i.e., insufficient means or prospective income) to overcome exclusion through an affidavit of support or similar document executed by a individual in the U.S. Individuals who execute affidavits of support commonly are called sponsors, even though that term also is used under immigration practice to refer to individuals and other entities who undertake various other acts (e.g., file a visa preference petition for a relative or prospective employee or undertake to resettle individuals who enter in refugee status) and who may or may not also execute affidavits of support. About one-half of the aliens who obtain legal permanent resident status have had affidavits of support filed on their behalf.

Various State court decisions and decisions by immigration courts have held that these affidavits, as currently constituted, do not impose a binding obligation on the sponsor to reimburse State agencies providing aid to the sponsored alien.

House bill

When affidavits of support are required, they must comply with the following:

(A) no affidavit of support may be accepted to overcome a public charge exclusion unless the affidavit is executed as a contract that is legally enforceable against the sponsor by the Federal government and by any State or local government with respect to any means-tested benefits paid to the sponsored alien before the alien becomes a citizen. However, affidavits of support are not to be construed to provide any right to sponsored aliens;

(B) any Federal, State or local means-tested benefits paid to sponsored alien;

(C) to qualify to execute an affidavit of support, an individual must be within the definition of sponsor set out in item G(1), below;

(D) governmental entities that provide benefits may seek reimbursement up to 10 years after a sponsored alien last receives benefits. In the affidavit of support, the sponsor must agree to submit to the jurisdiction of any Federal or State court regarding reimbursement of the cost of benefits received by the alien; and

(E) sponsorship extends until alien becomes a citizen.

Senate amendment

When affidavits of support are required, they must comply with the following:

(A) no affidavit of support may be relied upon to overcome a public charge exclusion unless the affidavit is executed as a contract that is legally enforceable against the sponsor by the sponsored alien and by Federal, State, and local governmental entities that provide the sponsored alien with means-tested assistance during the support period described below;

(B) programs for which reimbursement shall be requested are: (1) AFDC or its successor; (2) Medicaid; (3) Food Stamps; (4) SSI; (5) any State general assistance program; and (6) and other Federal, State or local need-based program. However, governmental entities cannot seek reimbursement with respect to (1) emergency medical services under Medicaid; (2) short-term emergency disaster relief; (3) assistance provided under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (4) the Head Start program; (5) public health assistance for immunizations and, if determined necessary by HHS, testing for or treatment of communicable diseases; and (6) programs specified by the Attorney General that (i) deliver services at the community level, (ii) do not condition assistance on the recipient's income or resources, and (iii) are necessary to protect life, safety, or public health (e.g., soup kitchens);

(C) to qualify to execute an affidavit of support, an individual must be within the definition of sponsor set out in item G(1), below;

(D) governmental entities may seek reimbursement of other means-tested assistance up to 10 years after a sponsored alien last receives benefits. In the affidavit of support, the sponsor must agree to submit to the jurisdiction of any Federal or State court regarding reimbursement of the cost of benefits received by the alien; and

(E) sponsor must agree in the affidavit of support to provide sufficient financial support so that the sponsored individual will not become a public charge until the individual has worked in the U.S. for 40 qualifying quarters, regardless of whether the individual chooses to naturalize or not. A qualifying quarter is a 3-month period (1) which counts as a quarter for the purposes of social security coverage, (2) during which the individual did not receive needs-based assistance, and (3) which occurs in a tax year for which the individual had income tax liability.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment as follows:

When affidavits of support are required, they must comply with the following:

(A) no affidavit of support may be accepted to overcome a public charge exclusion unless the affidavit is executed as a contract that is legally enforceable against the sponsor by the Federal government with respect to any mandatory means-tested benefits paid to the sponsored alien before the alien becomes a citizen. However, affidavits of support are not to be construed to provide any right to sponsored aliens;

(B) programs for which reimbursement shall be requested are: (1) AFDC or its successor; (2) Medicaid; (3) Food Stamps; (4) SSI; and (5) other mandatory Federal need-based programs. However, governmental entities cannot seek reimbursement with respect to (1) emergency medical services under Medicaid; (2) short-term emergency disaster relief; (3) assistance provided under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (4) the Head Start program; (5) public health assistance for immunizations and, if determined necessary by HHS, testing for or treatment of communicable diseases; (6) programs specified by the Attorney General that (i) deliver services at the community level, (ii) do not condition assistance on the recipient's income or resources, and (iii) are necessary to protect life, safety, or public health (e.g., soup kitchens); and (7) postsecondary education benefits (however, in the event a permanent resident alien applies for Federal student loans, the sponsor or citizen must cosign the loan);

(C) to qualify to execute an affidavit of support, an individual must be within the definition of sponsor set out in item G(1) below;

(D) governmental entities that provide benefits may seek reimbursement up to 10 years after a sponsored alien last receives benefits. In the affidavit of support, the sponsor must agree to submit to the jurisdiction of any Federal or State court regarding reimbursement of the cost of benefits received by the alien; and

(E) sponsorship extends until alien becomes a citizen.

The allowance for treatment of communicable diseases is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply where absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases. This is only a stop-gap measure until the deportation of a person or persons unlawfully here. It is not intended to provide authority for continued treatment of such diseases for a long term.

The allowance for emergency medical services under Medicaid is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply to medical care that is strictly of an emergency nature, such as medical treatment administered in an emergency room, critical care unit, or intensive care unit. The conferees do not intend that emergency medical services include pre-natal or delivery care assistance that is not strictly of an emergency nature as specified herein.

B. FORMS

Present law

No statutory provision. The Department of Justice issues a form (Form I-134) that complies with current sponsorship guidelines.

House bill

The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State and the Secretary of HHS, shall formulate an affidavit of support within 90 days after enactment, consistent with this section.

Senate amendment

The Attorney General, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of HHS shall jointly formulate an affidavit of support within 90 days after enactment, consistent with this section.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

C. STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Nothing in this section shall be construed to grant third party beneficiary rights to any sponsored alien under an affidavit of support.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment expressly requires that affidavits of support permit sponsored individuals to enforce support obligations of their sponsors as contained in the affidavits.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

D. NOTIFICATION OF CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Present law

There is no express requirement under current administrative practice that sponsors inform welfare agencies of a change in address. However, a sponsored alien who applies for benefits for which deeming is required must provide various information regarding the alien's sponsor.

House bill

Until they no longer are potentially liable for reimbursement of benefits paid to sponsored aliens, sponsors must notify welfare agencies of any change of their address within 30 days of moving. Failure to notify may result in a civil penalty of up to $2000 or, if the failure occurs after knowledge that the sponsored alien has received a reimbursable benefit, of up to $5000.

Senate amendment

Until they no longer are potentially liable for reimbursement of benefits paid to sponsored individuals, sponsors must notify the Attorney General and the State, district, territory or possession in which the sponsored individual resides of any change of their address within 30 days of moving. Failure to notify may result in a civil penalty of up to $2000 or, if the failure occurs after knowledge that the sponsored individual has received a reimbursable benefit, of up to $5000.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

E. REIMBURSEMENT PROCEDURES

Present law

Various State court decisions and decisions by immigration courts have held that these affidavits, as currently constituted, do not impose a binding obligation on the sponsor to reimburse State agencies providing aid to the sponsored alien.

House bill

If a sponsored alien receives any benefit under any means-tested public assistance program, the appropriate Federal, State, or local official shall request reimbursement by the sponsor in the amount of such assistance. Thereafter the official may seek reimbursement in court if the sponsor fails to respond within 45 days of the request that the sponsor is willing to begin repayments. The official also may seek reimbursement through the courts within 60 days after a sponsor fails to comply with the terms of repayment. The Attorney General in consultation with the Secretary of HHS, shall prescribe regulations on requesting reimbursement. No action may be brought later than 10 years after the alien last received benefits.

Senate amendment

Upon notification that a sponsored individual has received a reimbursable need-based benefit (see above), the appropriate government official shall request reimbursement in accordance with the same procedures and limitations that are in the House bill. The Commissioner of Social Security is to prescribe regulations for requesting reimbursement from sponsors, and such regulations must include the notification of sponsors (at their last known address) by certified mail.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

F. JURISDICTION

Present law

State law sets forth which types of cases its courts will hear, subject to due process requirements on minimal connections between activities, people, or property within the State and the matter being litigated.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No State court shall decline for lack of jurisdiction to hear any action brought against a sponsor for reimbursement for the cost of any benefit if the sponsored individual received public assistance while residing in the State.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees intend that both Federal and State courts have jurisdiction over reimbursement actions against a sponsor.

G. DEFINITIONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

A "Sponsor" is an individual who (1) is a citizen or national of the U.S. or an alien who is lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence; (2) is at least 18 years of age; and (3) resides in any State.

A "Means-Tested Public Benefits Program" is a program of public benefits of the Federal, State or local government in which eligibility or the amount of benefits or both are determined on the basis of income, resources, or financial need.

Senate amendment

A "Sponsor" is an individual who (1) is a citizen or national of the U.S. or an alien who is lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence; (2) is at least 18 years of age; (3) resides in any State or U.S. territory; and (4) is able to demonstrate (through evidence which includes attested copies of tax returns for the 2 most recent tax years) the means to maintain an income equal to 200% of the Federal poverty line for the individual and the individual's family, including the person sponsored.

"Federal Poverty Line" has the same meaning as in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act.

A "Qualifying Quarter" is a 3-month period (1) in which the sponsored individual earned at least the minimum necessary for the period to count as one of 40 calendar quarters required to qualify for Social Security retirement benefits; (2) during which the sponsored individual did not receive need-based public assistance; and (3) which falls within a tax year for which the sponsored individual had income tax liability.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, except that the sponsor is not required to demonstrate the means to maintain an income equal to 200% of the poverty level and the Senate recedes on the conditions that a qualifying quarter is (1) one in which the sponsored individual did not receive need-based public assistance, and (2) which falls within a tax year for which the sponsored individual has tax liability. The sponsor must also be the person petitioning for the alien's admission.

H. CLERICAL AMENDMENT

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

A minor clerical amendment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

I. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The changes regarding affidavits of support shall apply to affidavits of support executed no earlier than 60 days or later than 90 days after the Attorney General promulgates the form.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

11. ATTRIBUTION OF SPONSOR'S INCOME AND RESOURCES TO SPONSORED IMMIGRANTS

A. FEDERAL BENEFITS

Present law

In determining whether an alien meets the means test for Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), Supplemental Security Income (SSI), and Food Stamps, the resources and income of an individual who filed an affidavit of support for the alien (and the income and resources of the individual's spouse) are taken into account during a designated period after entry.

House bill

During the applicable deeming period, the income and resources of an individual who files a binding affidavit of support (as required above) for an alien (and the income and resources of the individual's spouse) are to be taken into account under all Federal means-tested programs (with the exception of housing-related assistance) in determining a sponsored alien's neediness. Current law remains effective for aliens whose sponsors filed affidavits before the new affidavit requirements become effective (60–90 days after enactment).

Senate amendment

During the applicable deeming period, the income and resources of an individual who filed an affidavit of support for an alien (and the income and resources of the individual's spouse) are to be taken into account under all Federally-funded means-tested programs (with the exception of the programs below) in determining the sponsored individual's neediness.

Excepted programs are (1) emergency Medicaid services; (2) short-term emergency disaster relief; (3) assistance provided under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (4) the Head Start program; (5) public health assistance for immunizations and, if determined by HHS, testing for or treatment of communicable diseases; and (6) programs specified by the Attorney General that (i) deliver services at the community level, (ii) do not condition assistance on the recipient's income or resources, and (iii) are necessary to protect life, safety, or public health (e.g. soup kitchens).

Individuals who are exempt from deeming include (1) honorably discharged legal alien veterans and their spouses and unmarried children; (2) refugees; (3) asylees (including aliens who have had their deportation stayed because it would return them to a country which will persecute them); and (4) individuals who have been battered or subjected to extreme cruelty, if application of deeming would endanger their well-being.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that post-secondary education is included as an excepted program and battered individuals are not included as an excepted class.

The allowance for treatment of communicable diseases is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply where absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases. This is only a stop-gap measure until the deportation of a person or persons unlawfully here. It is not intended to provide authority for continued treatment of such diseases for a long term.

The allowance for emergency medical services under Medicaid is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply to medical care that is strictly of an emergency nature, such as medical treatment administered in an emergency room, critical care unit, or intensive care unit. The conferees do not intend that emergency medical services include pre-natal or delivery care assistance that is not strictly of an emergency nature as specified herein.

B. AMOUNT OF INCOME AND RESOURCES DEEMED

Present law

While the offset formulas vary among the programs, the amount of income and resources deemed under AFDC, SSI, and Food Stamps is reduced by certain offsets to provide for some of the sponsor's own needs.

House bill

The full income and resources of the sponsor and the sponsor's spouse are deemed to be that of the sponsored alien.

Senate amendment

If an agency determines that a sponsored individual would not be able to obtain food and shelter without the agency's assistance (taking into account the income and resources actually provided to the individual by the sponsor and others), then deeming will not apply for a period of 12 months and the agency need take into account during this period only the amount of support the sponsor actually provides.

If the address of the sponsor is unknown to the sponsored individual, then assistance is provided until 12 months after the sponsor is located.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

C. LENGTH OF DEEMING PERIOD

Present law

For AFDC and Food Stamps, sponsor-to-alien deeming applies to a sponsored alien seeking assistance within 3 years of entry. Until September 1996, sponsor-to-alien deeming applies to a sponsored alien seeking SSI within 5 years of entry.

House bill

For aliens whose sponsors have filed binding affidavits of support as required above, the sponsors' income and resources are deemed to the alien until the alien becomes a citizen. Current law remains effective for aliens whose sponsors filed affidavits before the new affidavit requirements become effective (60–90 days after enactment).

Senate amendment

Deeming applies until the immigrant has worked 40 qualifying quarters (the period of time future sponsors must agree to support the immigrant) or for 5 years from the alien's arrival in the U.S. (for current noncitizens), whichever is longer. Deeming continues until the above requirements are met, regardless of whether the immigrant naturalizes or not. [A qualifying quarter is a 3-month period (1) in which the sponsored individual earned at least the minimum necessary for the period to count as one of 40 calendar quarters required to qualify for Social Security retirement benefits; (2) during which the sponsored individual did not receive need-based public assistance; and (3) which falls within a tax year for which the sponsored individual had income tax liability.]

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

D. STATE AND LOCAL BENEFITS

Present law

The highest courts of at least 2 States have held that the Supreme Court decision barring State discrimination against legal aliens in providing State benefits (Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365 (1971)) prohibits State sponsor-to-alien deeming requirements for State benefits.

House bill

In determining the eligibility and amount of benefits of an alien for any State or local means-tested public benefit program, the income and resources of the alien shall be deemed to include the income and resources of their sponsor (and their sponsor's spouse). Housing related assistance continues to be treated as under current law.

Senate amendment

With the exception of those programs exempted from all benefit restrictions (see above) and those aliens exempt from deeming requirements, States and local governments may deem a sponsor's income and resources (and those of the sponsor's spouse) to a sponsored individual in determining eligibility for and the amount of needs-based benefits. State deeming provisions must also provide for temporary assistance if the sponsor is not assisting the sponsored individual or cannot be located.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

CHAPTER 4—GENERAL PROVISIONS

12. DEFINITIONS

A. IN GENERAL

Present law

Federal assistance programs that have alien eligibility restrictions generally reference specific classes defined in the Immigration and Nationality Act.

House bill

Unless otherwise provided, the terms used in this title have the same meaning as defined in Section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

B. LAWFUL PRESENCE

Present law

Some programs allow benefits for otherwise eligible aliens who are "permanently residing under color of law (PRUCOL)." This term is not defined under the Immigration and Nationality Act, and there has been some inconsistency in determining which classes of aliens fit within the PRUCOL standard.

House bill

For purposes of this Title, the determination of whether an alien is lawfully present in the U.S. shall be made in accordance with regulations issued by the Attorney General. An alien shall not be considered to be lawfully present in the U.S. merely because the alien may be considered to be permanently residing in the U.S. under color of law ("PRUCOL") for purposes of any particular program.

Senate amendment

An individual is lawfully present if the individual is a citizen, non-citizen national (i.e. American Samoan), permanent resident alien, refugee, asylee (including an alien who has had his/her deportation stayed because it would return him/her to a country which would persecute him/her), or an alien who has been paroled into the U.S. by the Attorney General for at least 1 year. Individuals who are not lawfully present are ineligible for any Federal benefit.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a modification that eligibility is determined by specific classes of aliens, not whether noncitizens are "lawfully present."

C. STATE

Present law

There is no single definition of "State" for purposes of alien eligibility under Federal assistance programs. The Immigration and Nationality Act defines "State" to include the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.

House bill

The term "State" includes the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, and American Samoa.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

D. PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

A "Means-Tested Program" is a program of public benefits of the Federal government in which eligibility for benefits under the program, or the amount of benefits, or both, are determined on basis of income, resources or financial need.

A "Federal Means-Tested Public Benefits Program" is a means-tested public benefit program of (or contributed to by) the Federal Government under which the Federal Government establishes standards for eligibility.

A "State Means-Tested Public Benefits Program" is a means-tested program of a State or political subdivision under which the State or political subdivision specifies the standards of eligibility, and does not include any Federal means-tested public benefits program.

Senate amendment

"Federal Benefit" means any grant, contract loan, professional or commercial license, retirement benefit, health or disability benefit, public housing, food stamps, higher education benefits, unemployment benefit, or any similar benefit provided by a Federal agency or with appropriated Federal funds. (Individuals who are not lawfully present are ineligible for Federal benefits.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

13. CONSTRUCTION

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Nothing in this title shall be construed as addressing alien eligibility for governmental programs that are not means-tested public benefits programs.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment's bar to Federal benefits for individuals who are not lawfully present covers a wide range of contracts, grants, licenses, and other assistance that is not means-tested.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with a clarification that the subtitle is silent on alien eligibility for a basic public elementary education as determined by the U.S. Supreme Court in Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202 (1982).

SUBTITLE E—CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

14. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS RELATING TO ASSISTED HOUSING

Present law

No provision.

House bill

A series of technical and conforming amendments.

Senate amendment

A series of technical and conforming amendments.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

SUBTITLE E—REDUCTION IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITIONS

This Subtitle was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

SUBTITLE F—HOUSING

This Subtitle was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

SUBTITLE F—NATIONAL DEFENSE STOCKPILE DISPOSAL OF CERTAIN MATERIALS IN THE NATIONAL DEFENSE STOCKPILE FOR DEFICIT REDUCTION

House bill

Section 8021 of the House bill contained a provision that would authorize disposal of certain materials from the National Defense Stockpile.

Senate amendment

Section 2001 of the Senate amendment contained a similar provision.

Conference agreement

The conferees agree to a provision that would require disposal of certain materials, to result in receipts to the general fund of the Treasury equal to $649.0 million by the year 2002. The disposal authority of this provision would be considered new disposal authority, meaning that it is in addition to any other disposal authority provided by law, and the authority would expire after achieving the $649.0 million revenue target. The provision would require the President to dispose of materials previously authorized for disposal under the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (50 U.S.C. 98h).

The conferees are confident that the Department of Defense process for conducting such disposals, to include review by the Market Impact Committee, will continue to ensure an orderly and successful disposal of Stockpile materials.

SUBTITLE G—CHILD PROTECTION BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM AND FOSTER CARE AND ADOPTION ASSISTANCE

1. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

A. Purpose

Present law

Child Welfare Services, now provided for in Title IV–B of the Social Security Act, are designed to help States provide child welfare services, family preservation and community-based family support services, and improve State court procedures related to child welfare.

Title IV–E Foster Care and Title IV–E Adoption Assistance are intended to help States finance foster care and adoption assistance maintenance payments, administration, child placement services, and training related to foster care and adoption assistance.

The purpose of the Title IV–E Independent Living program is to help older foster children make the transition to independent living.

House bill

The House provision replaces Title IV–B and Title IV–E of the Social Security Act and several additional programs (see below) by establishing a block grant to enable eligible States to carry out child protection programs to:

(1) identify and assist families at risk of abusing or neglecting their children;

(2) operate a system for receiving reports of abuse or neglect of children;

(3) investigate families reported to abuse or neglect their children;

(4) provide support, treatment, and family preservation services to families which are, or are at risk of, abusing or neglecting their children;

(5) support children who must be removed from or who cannot live with their families;

(6) make timely decisions about permanent living arrangements for children who must be removed from or who cannot live with their families; and

(7) provide for continuing evaluation and improvement of child protection laws, regulations, and services.

Additional programs to be replaced are: the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act; the Abandoned Infants Assistance Act; adoption opportunities under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act; family support centers under the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act; grants to improve investigation and prosecution of child abuse cases, and children's advocacy centers under the Victims of Child Abuse Act; crisis nurseries under the Temporary Child Care and Crisis Nurseries Act; and Family Unification under Section 8 of the Housing Act.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment would leave intact child welfare services, foster care, adoption assistance and independent living, which are permanently authorized under Titles IV–B and IV–E of the Social Security Act. The Senate amendment would reauthorize the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act; adoption opportunities; abandoned infants assistance; missing children's assistance; investigation and prosecution grants, and children's advocacy centers under the Victims of Child Abuse Act. The amendment would repeal both the Temporary Child Care and Crisis Nurseries Act and the Family Support Centers under the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act.

The Senate amendment gives the Secretary authority under CAPTA to make grants to the States for purposes of assisting the States in improving the child protective service system of each State in:

(1) screening intake, assessing, and investigating of reports of abuse and neglect;

(2) creating and improving the use of multidisciplinary teams and interagency protocols to enhance investigations;

(3) improving case management and delivery of services;

(4) enhancing the general child protection system by improving risk and safety assessment tools and protocols and automation systems;

(5) developing, strengthening, and facilitating training opportunities and requirements for individuals overseeing and providing services to children and their families;

(6) developing and facilitating training protocols for individuals mandated to report child abuse or neglect;

(7) developing, strengthening, and supporting child abuse and neglect prevention, treatment, and research programs in the public and private sectors;

(8) developing, implementing, or operating information and education programs or training programs designed to improve the provision of services to disabled infants with life-threatening conditions; and

(9) developing and enhancing the capacity of community-based programs to integrate shared leadership strategies between parents and professionals to prevent and treat child abuse and neglect at the neighborhood level.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. Eligible States

Eligible State

Present law

To be eligible for funding under Title IV–B and IV–E, States must have State plans (developed jointly with the Secretary under title IV–B, and approved by the Secretary under Title IV–E).

House bill

An "Eligible State" is one that, during the 3-year period that ends on October 1 of the fiscal year, has submitted to the Secretary a plan that describes how the State intends to pursue the purposes described above.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. See Item 6.I., below, for summary of State eligibility under CAPTA.

Conference agreement

An "Eligible State" is one that has submitted to the Secretary, not later than October 1, 1996 and every three years thereafter, a plan (as described below) which has been signed by the Chief Executive officer of the State.

Outline of Child Protection Program

Present law

States must have a child welfare services plan developed jointly by the Secretary and the relevant State agency which provides for single agency administration and describe services to be provided and geographic areas where services will be available, among numerous other requirements. To receive their full allotment of incentive funds under Title IV–B, States also must comply with extensive Federal Section 427 protections. The State plan also must meet many other requirements, such as setting forth a 5-year statement of goals for family preservation and family support and assuring the review of progress toward those goals. For foster care and adoption assistance, States must submit for approval a Title IV–E plan providing for a foster care and adoption assistance program and satisfying numerous requirements. The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act requires States to have in effect a law for reporting known and suspected child abuse and neglect as well as providing for prompt investigation of child abuse and neglect reports, among many other requirements.

House bill

A State plan must include the following outline of Child Protection Program including procedures to be used for:

a. receiving reports of child abuse or neglect;

b. investigating such reports;

c. protecting children in families in which child abuse or neglect is found to have occurred;

d. removing children from dangerous settings;

e. protecting children in foster care;

f. promoting timely adoptions;

g. protecting the rights of families, using adult relatives as the preferred placement for children separated from their parents if such relatives meet all relevant standards;

h. preventing child abuse and neglect; and

i. establishing and responding to citizen review panels.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. CAPTA requires a 5-year plan that is coordinated with the State plan for child welfare services and family preservation. For amendments to CAPTA requirements, see Section 6 of this document, below.

Conference agreement

A State plan must include information on the Child Protection Program including procedures to be used for:

a. receiving and assessing reports of child abuse or neglect;

b. investigating such reports;

c. with respect to families in which abuse or neglect has been confirmed, providing services or referral for services for families and children where the State makes a determination that the child may safely remain.

d. protecting children by removing them from dangerous settings and ensuring their placement in a safe environment;

e. providing training for individuals mandated to report suspected cases of child abuse or neglect;

f. protecting children in foster care;

g. promoting timely adoptions;

h. protecting the rights of families, using adult relatives as the preferred placement for children separated from their parents if such relatives meet all relevant standards;

h. providing services aimed at preventing child abuse and neglect; and

i. establishing and responding to citizen review panels.

Certifications

Present law

To receive funds under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, States must have a law in effect that provides for reporting of known and suspected instances of child abuse and neglect and provides immunity from prosecution for reporters of abuse or neglect. States also must have a program to investigate allegations of abuse or neglect, must preserve confidentiality of records, provide that every abused or neglected child involved in a court proceeding is represented by a guardian ad litem. To receive funding under Title IV–B and IV–E of the Social Security Act, States must comply with certain procedures for removal of children from their families when necessary, and must develop case plans for each child that are reviewed at least every six months and contain specified information.

House bill

Also included in the submitted plan must be the following certifications:

a. certification of State law requiring reporting of child abuse and neglect;

b. certification of State program to investigate child abuse and neglect cases;

c. certification of State procedures for removal and placement of abused or neglected children;

d. certification of State procedures for developing and reviewing written plans for permanent placement of each child removed from the family that:

1) specifies the goal for achieving a permanent placement for the child in a timely fashion;

2) ensures that the plan is reviewed every 6 months; and

3) ensures that information about the child is gathered regularly and placed in the case record;

e. certification that when the State begins operating under the block grant on or after October 1, 1995, families receiving adoption assistance payments at that time continue to receive adoption assistance payments;

f. certification of State program to provide Independent Living services to 16–19 year old youths (at State option to age 21) who are in the foster care system but have no family to turn to for support;

g. certification of State procedures to respond to reporting of medical neglect of disabled infants; and

h. a declaration of State child welfare goals; States must, within 3 years of the date of passage, report quantifiable information on whether they are making progress toward achieving their self-defined child protection goals. (See Data Collection and Reporting, item G. below).

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. CAPTA requires several certifications, many of which are identical to those outlined for the House bill. For amendments to CAPTA requirements, see Section 6 of this document, below.

Conference agreement

The following certifications must be included in the State plan:

(1) certification of State law requiring reporting of child abuse and neglect;

(2) certification of State procedures for the immediate screening, safety assessment, and prompt investigation of such reports;

(3) certification of State procedures for the removal and placement of abused or neglected children;

(4) certification of State laws requiring immunity from prosecution under State and local laws for individuals making good faith reports of suspected or known cases of child abuse or neglect;

(5) certification of State law and procedures for expungement of any public records on false or unsubstantiated cases;

(6) certification of State laws and procedures affording individuals an opportunity to appeal an official finding of abuse or neglect;

(7) certification of State procedures for developing and reviewing written plans for permanent placement of each child removed from the family that:

(A) specifies the goal for achieving a permanent placement for the child in a timely fashion;

(B) ensures that the plan is reviewed every 6 months; and

(C) ensures that information about the child is gathered regularly and placed in the case record;

(8) certification of State program to provide Independent Living services to 16–19 year old youths (at State option to age 21) who are in the foster care system but have no family to turn to for support;

(9) certification of State procedures to respond to reporting of medical neglect of disabled infants;

(10) a declaration of quantifiable State child welfare goals;

(11) with respect to fiscal years beginning on or after April 1, 1996, certification that—

(A) the State has completed an inventory of all children who, before the inventory, had been in foster care under the responsibility of the State for 6 months or more, which determined—

(i) the appropriateness of, and necessity for, the foster care placement;

(ii) whether the child could or should be returned to the parents of the child or should be freed for adoption or other permanent placement; and

(iii) the services necessary to facilitate the return of the child or the placement of the child for adoption or legal guardianship;

(B) is operating to the satisfaction of the Secretary—

(i) a statewide information system on children who are or have been in foster care in the last year;

(ii) a case review system for each child receiving foster care under the supervision of the State;

(iii) a service program designed to help children—

(I) return to families from which they have been removed; or

(II) be placed for adoption

(iv) a preplacement preventive service program; and

(C) has reviewed (or, will review by October 1, 1997) State policies and procedures in effect for children abandoned at birth; and is implementing (or, will implement by October 1, 1997) such policies or procedures to enable permanent decisions to be made expeditiously with respect to the placement of such children.

(12) certification of reasonable efforts to prevent placement of children in foster care; and

(13) certification of cooperative efforts to secure an assignment to the State of any rights to support on behalf of each child receiving foster care maintenance payments.

Determinations

Present law

State Title IV-B plans are developed jointly with the Secretary. State Title IV-E plans must be approved by the Secretary. The Secretary must approve any plan that complies with statutory provisions.

House bill

The Secretary of HHS must determine whether the State plan includes all of the elements required above but cannot add new elements or review the adequacy of State procedures. The Secretary may not require a State to alter its child protection law regarding determination of the adequacy, type and timing of health care.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV-B or IV-E. Current law would remain intact. See item 6.N., below for description of similar CAPTA provision on medical care.

Conference agreement

The Secretary of HHS must determine whether the State plan includes the required materials and certifications (except material related to the certification of State procedures to respond to reporting of medical neglect of disabled infants). The Secretary cannot add new elements beyond those listed above.

C. Grants to States for Child Protection

Entitlement

Present law

Titles IV-B and IV-E of the Social Security Act contain several types of funding, including substantial entitlement funding, for helping States provide assistance to troubled families and their children.

House bill

The block grant money is guaranteed funding to States. Each eligible State is entitled to receive from the Secretary an amount equal to the State share of the Child Protection Grant amount for fiscal years 1996 through 2000.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV-B or IV-E. Current law would remain intact. See item 6, below for description of similar CAPTA provision.

Conference agreement

As explained above, the Child Protection Block Grant includes a capped entitlement component for States. Each eligible State is entitled to receive from the Secretary an amount equal to the State share of the Child Protection Grant amount which increases from $1.938 billion in 1996 to $2.593 in 2002. In addition, each eligible State is entitled to receive reimbursements, on an open-ended basis, for the State share of allowable expenditures on eligible children placed in qualified foster care and adoption.

Child Protection Grant Amount

Present law

Federal funds for child welfare and child protection activities consist both of direct spending under Titles IV-B and IV-E of the Social Security Act, and appropriated funds under Title IV-B of the Social Security Act and selected additional programs, including the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. (For additional programs, see Item 1.A. of this document, above.)

House bill

The Child Protection Grant amount is composed of both a direct spending component and an appropriated component as follows: $3.930 billion in 1996, $4.195 billion in 1997, $4.507 billion in 1998, $4.767 billion in 1999, and $5.071 billion in 2000 in direct spending; and $486 million in each year 1996-2000 in appropriated spending.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV-B or IV-E. Current law would remain intact. The amendment authorizes a total of $263 million for fiscal year 1996 and such sums as necessary for fiscal year 1997 through fiscal year 2000 for State grants, State demonstration projects, discretionary activities and community-based family resource and support grants under CAPTA; adoption opportunities grants; and abandoned infants assistance grants.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill, with the modification that the discretionary component of the block grant was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

State Share

Present law

No specific allocation formula governs the allocation of foster care and adoption assistance funds to States; States are reimbursed on an open-ended entitlement basis for eligible expenditures on behalf of eligible children. Independent living allocations to States are based on each State's share of Title IV-E foster children in fiscal year 1984. Family violence grants are awarded on the basis of State population. [Note: The family violence program would not be repealed by H.R. 4.] Child abuse State grants and community-based family resource grants are awarded on the basis of population under the age of 18. State allocations for child welfare services under Title IV-B are based on per capita income and population age 21 and under.

House bill

"State Share" means each State receives the same proportion of the block grant each year as it received of payments to States by the Federal government for the following selected child welfare programs in either the average of years 1992 through 1994 or in 1994, whichever is greater:

a. foster care maintenance, administration, and training;

b. adoption assistance maintenance, administration, and training;

c. title IV-E independent living awards;

d. family violence and prevention services;

e. child abuse State grants;

f. child abuse community-based prevention grants; and

g. child welfare services.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV-B or IV-E. Current law would remain intact. See Item 6, below, for description of similar CAPTA provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except the selected child welfare programs on which the State share is to be based are:

1) foster care administration and training;

2) adoption assistance administration and training;

3) child welfare services;

4) family preservation and family support; and

5) independent living services.

Definition of State

Present law

Under Titles IV-B and IV-E of the Social Security Act, "State" means the 50 States and the District of Columbia. The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa receive funds through set-asides and under special rules.

House bill

"State" includes the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV-B or IV-E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

"State" includes the several States and the District of Columbia. The territories will carry out a child protection program in accordance with this part; entitlement funding is provided under section 1108 of the Social Security Act.

Use of Grant

Present law

Funds must be used for: "protecting and promoting the welfare of children . . . preventing unnecessary separation of children from their families . . .restoring children to their families if they have been removed . . . family preservation services . . . community-based family support services to promote the well-being of children and families and to increase parents' confidence and competence." Foster care maintenance and adoption assistance payments are an open-ended entitlement to individuals.

House bill

A State to which funds are paid under this section may use such funds in any manner that the State deems appropriate to accomplish the purposes of this part. Permissible spending includes, but is not limited to: abuse and neglect reporting systems, abuse and neglect prevention, family preservation, foster care, adoption, program administration, and training.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. CAPTA grants can be used for improving child protective services, investigation and reporting of abuse and neglect, case management and delivery of services to children and families, training for service providers and abuse reporters, demonstration projects, kinship care arrangements, abuse and neglect prevention, and similar activities.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill. A State to which funds are paid under this section may use such funds in any manner that the State deems appropriate to accomplish the purposes of this part.

Transfer of Funds

Present law

No provision.

House bill

In fiscal year 1998 and succeeding years, States may transfer up to 30% of funds paid under this section for activities under any or all of the following: the temporary assistance for needy families block grant; the social services block grant under Title XX of the Social Security Act; the child care and development block grant; and any food and nutrition or employment and training grants enacted during the 104th Congress. Rules of the recipient program will apply to the transferred funds. Funds may be transferred into the Child Protection Block Grant from other block grants and are then subject to the rules of this part.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree that no funds can be transferred out of the block grant.

Timing of Expenditures

Present law

Provisions vary under programs to be replaced. Under Title IV–E, States have up to two fiscal years in which to claim reimbursement for expenditures.

House bill

A State to which funds are paid under this section for a fiscal year shall expend such funds not later than the end of the immediately succeeding fiscal year.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Rule of Interpretation

Present law

For-profit foster care providers are not eligible for Federal funding under Title IV–E.

House bill

Nothing in this act shall preclude for-profit short- and long-term foster care facilities from being eligible to receive funds from this block grant.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Timing of Payments

Present law

Under Title IV–B, the Secretary makes payments to States periodically. Under Title IV–E, the Secretary reimburses States for expenditures on a quarterly basis.

House bill

The Secretary must make payments on a quarterly basis.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Penalties

Present law

States that do not comply with Section 427 child protections may not receive their share of Title IV–B appropriations above $141 million. However, effective April 1, 1996, these protections are to become State plan requirements and the incentive funding mechanism will no longer be in effect. Section 1123 of the Social Security Act requires the Secretary to establish by regulation a new Federal review system for child welfare, which would allow penalties for misuse of funds.

House bill

The Secretary must reduce amounts otherwise payable to a State by any amount which an audit conducted under the Single Audit Act finds has been used in violation of this part. The Secretary, however, shall not reduce any quarterly payment by more than 25 percent. The amount of misspent funds will be withheld from the State's payments during the following year, if necessary, to recover the full amount of the penalty.

If an audit conducted pursuant to the Single Audit Act finds that a State has reduced its level of expenditures in fiscal year 1996 or 1997 below its level of non-Federal expenditures in fiscal year 1995 under Title IV–B or Title IV–E, the Secretary must reduce subsequent amounts otherwise payable to the State by an amount equal to the difference between State spending in fiscal year 1995 and the current year.

The Secretary must reduce by 3 percent the amount otherwise payable to a State for a fiscal year if the State has not submitted a report required (see item 7 below) for the immediately preceding fiscal year within 6 months after the end of the year. The penalty may be rescinded if the report is submitted within 12 months after the end of the year.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except that an additional penalty equal to 5% of a State's block grant amount will be imposed in cases where the Secretary finds that funds have been spent in violation of the part, or where a State has failed to meet its maintenance-of-effort requirement. States will be required to maintain 100% of their fiscal year 1995 non-Federal expenditure level in fiscal year 1996 and 1997, and 75% of such expenditures in subsequent years.

The agreement provides that the Secretary may not impose a penalty if she determines that the State has reasonable cause for failing to comply with the requirement. Further, a State must be informed before any penalty is imposed and be given an opportunity to enter into a corrective compliance plan. The agreement provides a series of deadlines for submission of such corrective compliance plans, and review by the Federal government.

Limitation on Federal Authority

Present law

See above.

House bill

Except as expressly provided in this part, the Secretary may not regulate the conduct of States under this part or enforce any provision of this part.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

D. Child Protection Standards

Present law

In order to receive its full share of appropriations for child welfare services under subpart 1 of Title IV–B, each State must meet section 427 protections, including requirements that it: conduct an inventory of children in foster care; operate a tracking system for all children in foster care; operate a case review system for all children in foster care; and conduct a service program to reunite foster children with their families if appropriate, or be placed for adoption or another permanent placement. In addition, if Federal appropriations for the program reach $325 million for two consecutive years, States also must implement a preplacement preventive services program to help children remain with their families. [This funding level has never been reached.] Effective April 1, 1996, these provisions are scheduled to become mandatory State plan requirements, rather than funding incentives, under legislation enacted on Oct. 31, 1994 (P.L. 103–432). States also will be required to review their policies and procedures regarding abandoned children and to implement policies and procedures considered necessary to enable permanent decisions to be made expeditiously with regard to placement of such children.

House bill

The following standards are included in the bill to indicate what States must do to assure the protection of children and to provide guidance to the Citizen Review Panels:

a. the primary standard by which child welfare system shall be judged is the protection of children;

b. each State shall investigate reports of abuse and neglect promptly;

c. children removed from their homes shall have a permanency plan and a dispositional hearing within 3 months after a fact-finding hearing; and

d. all child protection cases with an out-of-home placement shall be reviewed every 6 months unless the child is already in a long-term placement.

A State receiving funds from this block grant may consider: establishing a new type of permanent foster care placement referred to as "kinship care" in which adult relatives would be the preferred placement option if they met all relevant standards, and could receive needs-based payments and supportive services; and, in placing children for adoption, giving preference to adult relatives who meet applicable standards.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. CAPTA requires a number of certifications by the State, including several that are similar to standards in the House block grant. For details see Item 6.I., below.

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Under CAPTA, the Secretary may award grants to public entities to develop or implement procedures using adult relatives as the preferred placement for children removed from their home; see item 6.H. below.

Conference agreement

In order for a State to receive foster care maintenance payments such State must certify that it has conducted an inventory of children in foster care; is operating a tracking system for all children in foster care; is operating a case review system for all children in foster care; and conducting a service program to reunite foster children with their families if appropriate, or be placed for adoption or another permanent placement.

Effective April 1, 1996, these provisions are scheduled to become mandatory State plan requirements, rather than funding incentives, under legislation enacted on Oct. 31, 1994 (P.L. 103–432). States also will be required to review their policies and procedures regarding abandoned children and to implement policies and procedures considered necessary to enable permanent decisions to be made expeditiously with regard to placement of such children.

E. CITIZEN REVIEW PANELS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Each State to which funds are paid under this part must have at least three Citizen Review Panels. Each Panel is to be broadly representative of the community from which it is drawn.

The Panels, which must meet at least quarterly, are charged with the responsibility of reviewing cases from the child welfare system to determine whether State and local agencies receiving funds under this program are carrying out activities in accord with the State plan, are achieving the child protection standards, and are meeting any other child welfare criteria that the Panels consider important.

The members and staff of any Panel must not disclose to any person or government agency any information about specific cases. States must afford a Panel access to any information on any case that the Panel desires to review, and shall provide the Panels with staff assistance in performing their duties.

Panels must produce a public report after each meeting and States must include information in their annual report detailing their responses to the panel report and recommendations. (See Data Collection and Reporting, item G. below.)

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

F. CLEARINGHOUSE AND HOTLINE FOR MISSING AND RUNAWAY CHILDREN

Present law

The Missing Children's Assistance Act, authorized as part of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, authorizes a toll-free hotline and national clearinghouse to collect and disseminate information about missing children.

House bill

The Attorney General of the United States shall have the authority to establish and operate a national information clearinghouse, including a 24-hour toll free telephone hotline, for information on missing children cases. An appropriation not to exceed $7 million per fiscal year is authorized for this purpose.

Senate amendment

Reauthorizes the Missing Children's Assistance Act through fiscal year 1997 (see Item 12.A. of this document, below).

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

G. DATA COLLECTION AND REPORTING

Present law

States are not required to report specific child welfare data. Section 479 requires the Secretary to publish regulations that implement a system for the collection of adoption and foster care data. These regulations were published as final on Dec. 22, 1993, and are mandatory for all States. In addition, section 13713 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (P.L. 103–66) makes available enhanced Federal matching funds (75 percent Federal match instead of 50 percent) for planning, design, development and installation of statewide automated child welfare information systems. Regulations governing these systems were published on Dec. 22, 1993, and May 19, 1995. The enhanced match expires after Sept. 30, 1996.

House bill

Three years after the effective date and annually thereafter, each State to which funds are paid under this part must submit to the Secretary a report containing quantitative information on the extent to which the State is making progress toward its child protection program goals (as described above).

Each State to which funds are paid under this part must annually submit to the Secretary of Health and Human Services a report that includes the following annual statistics:

(1) the number of children reported to the State during the year as abused or neglected;

(2) of the number of reported cases of abuse or neglect, the number that were substantiated;

(3) of the number of reported cases that were substantiated, (a) the number that received no services under the State program funded under this part; (b) the number that received services under the State program funded under this part; and (c) the number removed from their families;

(4) the number of families that received preventive services from the State;

(5) the number of children who entered foster care under the responsibility of the State;

(6) the number of children who exited foster care under the responsibility of the State;

(7) types of foster care placements made by State and the number of children in each type of care;

(8) average length of foster care placements made by State;

(9) the age, ethnicity, gender, and family income of children placed in foster care under the responsibility of the State;

(10) the number of children in foster care for whom the State has the goal of adoption;

(11) the number of children in foster care under the responsibility of the State who were freed for adoption;

(12) the number of children in foster care under the responsibility of the State whose adoptions were finalized;

(13) the number of disrupted adoptions in the State;

(14) quantitative measurements showing whether the State is making progress toward the child protection goals identified by the State;

(15) the number of infants abandoned during the year, the number of these infants who were adopted, and the length of time between abandonment and legal adoption;

(16) the number of deaths of children occurring while said children were in custody of the State;

(17) the number of deaths of children resulting from child abuse or neglect;

(18) the number of children served by the State Independent Living program;

(19) other information which the Secretary and a majority of the States agree is appropriate to collect for purposes of this part; and

(20) the response of the State to findings and recommendations of the citizen review panels.

States may fulfill the data collection and reporting requirements by collecting the required information on either individual children and families receiving child protection services or by using scientific statistical sampling methods.

Within 6 months after the end of each fiscal year, the Secretary must prepare an annual report on State data for Congress and the public.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. States receiving CAPTA grants must submit annual data reports to the Secretary (see Item 6.I, below). CAPTA requires States to report 10 data elements, many of which are substantially similar to the House reporting requirements.

Requires the Secretary, in administering CAPTA, to prepare annual reports, based on State data, for Congress and the national information clearinghouse on child abuse and neglect. (See Item 6.I, below.) Requires Secretary in 6 months after receiving State reports to prepare and submit annual report to Congress.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to annual State reports containing quantitative information showing progress toward achieving State child protection goals.

Of all children receiving publicly-supported child welfare services, the following information shall be reported every 6 months:

(1) whether the child received services under the programs funded under this part:

(2) the age, gender, and family income of the parents and child;

(3) county of residence;

(4) whether the child was removed from the family;

(5) whether the child entered foster care under the responsibility of the State:

(6) the type of out-of-home care in which the child was placed (institution, group home, family foster care, or relative placement);

(7) the child's permanency planning goal, such as family reunification, adoption, or independent living;

(8) whether the child was freed for adoption;

(9) whether the child exited from foster care, and, if so, the reason for the exit, such as return to family, placement with relatives, adoption, independent living, or death.

References to race in the information that is reported annually by States was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

States may be required to report other information approved by the Secretary and agreed to by a majority of States, including information necessary to assure a smooth transition from AFCARS and NCANDS to the data reporting system required by this legislation.

States must also submit the following aggregate data annually:

(1) the number of children reported to the State during the year as alleged victims of abuse or neglect;

(2) the number of children for whom an investigation of alleged maltreatment resulted in a determination of substantiated abuse or neglect, the number for whom maltreatment was unsubstantiated, determined to be false;

(3) the number of families that received preventive services;

(4) the number of infants abandoned during the year, the number of these infants who were adopted, and the length of time between abandonment and adoption;

(5) the number of deaths resulting from child abuse or neglect;

(6) the number of deaths of children occurring while children were in custody of the State;

(7) the number of children served by the State Independent Living Program

(8) quantitative measurements showing whether the State is making progress toward the child protection goals identified by the State;

(9) types of maltreatment suffered by victims of abuse and neglect;

(10) number of abused and neglected children receiving services;

(11) average length of stay in out-of-home care;

(12) the response of the State to findings and recommendations of the citizen review panels; and

(13) other information which the Secretary and a majority of States agree is appropriated to collect for purposes of this part.

States may fulfill the data collection and reporting requirements by collecting the required information on either individual children and families receiving child protection services or by using scientific statistical sampling methods. If States use sampling, the Secretary must review and approve their methods.

The requirement that the Secretary prepare an annual report on State data for Congress and the public was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

H. RESEARCH AND TRAINING

Present law

Current law authorizes appropriations for research under Title IV–B of the Social Security Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. In fiscal year 1995, $6 million is appropriated under Title IV–B and $9 million under CAPTA.

House bill

An appropriation of $10 million per year is authorized for the Secretary to spend at her discretion on research and training in child welfare.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law under Title IV–B would remain intact, and CAPTA would be reauthorized. Although CAPTA has no separate authorization for research and training, the Secretary has discretionary authority to conduct research and training. For details see Item 6.G., below.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

I. NATIONAL RANDOM SAMPLE STUDY OF CHILD WELFARE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary is provided with $6 million per year for fiscal years 1996–2000 to conduct a national random-sample study of child welfare. The study will have a longitudinal component, yield data reliable at the State level for as many States as the Secretary determines is feasible, and should alternate data collection in small States from year-to-year to yield an occasional picture of child welfare in small States. The Secretary has discretion in drawing the sample and in selecting measures, but should carefully consider selecting the sample from all cases of confirmed abuse and neglect and then following each case over several years while obtaining such measures as type of abuse or neglect involved, frequency of contact with agencies, whether the child was separated from the family, types and characteristics of out-of-home placements, number of placements, and average length of placement. The Secretary must prepare occasional reports on this study and make them available to the public. The reports should summarize and compare the results of this study with the data reported by States. Written reports or tapes of the raw data from the study should be made available to the public at a fee the Secretary thinks appropriate.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

J. REMOVAL OF BARRIERS TO INTERETHNIC ADOPTION

Present law

State law governs adoption and foster care placement. Forty three States permit race matching either in regulation, statute, policy or practice. The Metzenbaum Multiethnic Placement Act of 1994 permits States to consider race and ethnicity in selecting a foster care or adoptive home, but States cannot delay or deny the placement of the child solely on the basis of race, color or national origin.

Noncompliance with the Metzenbaum Act is deemed a violation of title VI of the Civil Rights Act.

House bill

Section 553 of the Howard M. Metzenbaum Multiethnic Placement Act of 1994 is repealed. (See conforming amendments, item 2 below.) In addition, a State or other entity that receives Federal assistance may not deny to any person the opportunity to become an adoptive or a foster parent on the basis of the race, color, or national origin of the person or of the child involved. Similarly, no State or other entity receiving Federal funds can delay or deny the placement of a child for adoption or foster care, or otherwise discriminate in making a placement decision, on the basis of the race, color, or national origin of the adoptive or foster parent or the child involved.

A State or other entity that violates this provision during a period shall remit to the Secretary all funds that were paid to the State or entity during the period.

An action under this paragraph may not be brought more than 2 years after the date the alleged violation occurred.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

2. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section contains technical amendments that conform provisions of the bill to Titles IV–D and XVI of the Social Security Act, and to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986, and provide for the repeal of Section 553 of the Howard M. Metzenbaum Multiethnic Placement Act of 1994, Title IV–E of the Social Security Act, section 13712 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, and subtitle C of Title 17 of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994. (Under section 371 of Title III–C of the House bill, the following additional programs are repealed related to the Child Protection Block Grant: abandoned infants assistance, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, adoption opportunities, crisis nurseries, missing children's assistance, family support centers, certain activities under the Victims of Child Abuse Act, and Family Unification under the Housing Act.)

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The provision requiring the Secretary of HHS to submit, within 90 days of enactment, a legislative proposal providing necessary technical and conforming amendments was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

The agreement also repeals Title IV–E of the Social Security Act and section 13712 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, and makes a conforming amendment to section 9442(4) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986. Additional repeals and technical amendments are described below.

3. CONTINUED APPLICATION OF CURRENT STANDARDS UNDER MEDICAID PROGRAM

Present law

Children for whom Federal foster care payments are made are deemed to be "dependent children" for purposes of Medicaid eligibility.

House bill

Conforms Medicaid coverage of this title with title I of the House bill. In general, the Medicaid provision is designed to ensure that individuals who receive Medicaid coverage under current law will continue to be covered after passage of H.R.4. Here is a summary of Medicaid provision from title I: "An individual who on enactment was receiving AFDC, was eligible for medical assistance under the State plan under this title, and would be eligible to receive aid or assistance under a State plan approved under part A of title IV but for the prohibition on grant funds being used to provide assistance to noncitizens, minor unwed mothers or their children, or children born to families already on welfare, would continue to be eligible for Medicaid. Families leaving welfare for work would also continue to receive the 1-year Medicaid transition benefit."

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Medicaid Section.

4. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Unless otherwise indicated in particular sections of the bill, the amendments and repeals made by this title take effect on October 1, 1995. The amendments shall not apply with respect to powers, duties, functions, rights, claims, penalties, or obligations applicable to aid or services provided before the effective date, or to administrative actions and proceedings commenced, or authorized to be commenced, before the effective date.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, and also provides a transition rule that allows States to continue current programs under Titles IV-B and IV-E of the Social Security Act until June 30, 1996, and provides for a corresponding reduction in the payment made to such States from the new program created by this legislation. The agreement also contains provisions related to the closing out of accounts for programs that are ended or substantially modified.

5. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING TIMELY ADOPTION OF CHILDREN

Present law

No provision.

House bill

It is the sense of the Congress that:

(1) too many adoptable children are spending too much time in foster care;

(2) States must increase the number of waiting children being adopted in a timely manner;

(3) Studies have shown that States would save significant amounts of money if they offered incentives to families to adopt special needs children who would otherwise require foster care;

(4) States should allocate sufficient funds for adoption and medical assistance to encourage families to adopt children who are languishing in foster care;

(5) States should offer incentives for families that adopt special needs children to make adoption more affordable for middle-income families;

(6) States should strive to provide children removed from their biological parents with a single foster care placement and case team and to conclude an adoption of the child, when adoption is the goal, within one year of the child's placement in foster care; and

(7) States should participate in programs to enable maximum visibility of waiting children to potential parents, including a nationwide computer network to disseminate information on children eligible for adoption.

Senate amendment

Title VIII of the Senate amendment addresses adoption issues. See Section 13, below.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

6. CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT; GENERAL PROGRAM

A. REFERENCE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides that, unless otherwise indicated, any amendments or repeals should be considered to apply to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA).

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. FINDINGS

Present law

Section 2 of CAPTA contains findings with regard to the scope of child abuse and neglect, the need for a comprehensive approach to address child abuse and neglect, various goals with regard to national policy, and the appropriate Federal role in this area.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 2 to update findings with regard to the scope of child abuse and neglect and to make minor changes, including change of references from "child protection" to "child and family protection."

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

C. OFFICE OF CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

Present law

Section 101 of CAPTA requires the Secretary of HHS to establish a National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 101 to allow the Secretary of HHS to establish an Office on Child Abuse and Neglect which would be responsible for executing and coordinating the functions and activities authorized by CAPTA. Repeals current mandate for a National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

D. ADVISORY BOARD ON CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

Present law

Section 102 of CAPTA requires the Secretary to appoint a U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect, and specifies the composition and duties of the board.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 102 by repealing current mandate for a U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect, and instead allows the Secretary of HHS to appoint an advisory board to make recommendations concerning child abuse and neglect issues. Duties of the new board would include making recommendations on coordination of Federal, State and local child abuse and neglect activities with similar activities regarding family violence at those levels; specific modifications needed in Federal and State laws to reduce the number of unfounded or unsubstantiated cases of child maltreatment; and modifications needed to facilitate coordinated data collection with respect to child protection and child welfare.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

E. REPEAL OF INTERAGENCY TASK FORCE

Present law

Section 103 of CAPTA requires the Secretary to establish an Interagency Task Force on Child Abuse and Neglect.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Repeals section 103 of CAPTA.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

F. NATIONAL CLEARINGHOUSE FOR INFORMATION RELATING TO CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

Present law

Section 104 of CAPTA requires the Secretary to establish a national clearinghouse for information relating to child abuse and neglect.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 104 to retain authorization for a national information clearinghouse on child abuse and neglect, and expands the duties of the clearinghouse to include collecting data on false and unsubstantiated reports and deaths resulting from child abuse and neglect, and, through a national data collection and analysis program, to collect and make available State child abuse and neglect reporting information which, to the extent practical, is universal and case specific, and integrated with other case-based foster care and adoption data collected by HHS.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

G. RESEARCH, EVALUATION AND ASSISTANCE ACTIVITIES

Present law

Section 105 of CAPTA authorizes the Secretary, through the National Center, to conduct research and technical assistance related to child abuse and neglect.

House bill

Authorizes appropriations of $10 million annually for the Secretary to conduct research and training related to child welfare. (See Item 1.H., above).

Senate amendment

Amends section 105 to restructure the research activities function of the Secretary of HHS by deleting references to the National Center and by requiring research on additional issues, including substantiated and unsubstantiated reported child abuse cases. Authorizes technical assistance to include evaluation or identification of: various methods for investigation, assessment, and prosecution of child physical and sexual abuse cases; ways to mitigate psychological trauma to child victims; and effective programs carried out under CAPTA. Allows the Secretary of HHS to provide for dissemination of information related to various training resources available at the State and local levels. Continues authorization for a formal peer review process which utilizes scientifically valid review criteria.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

H. GRANTS FOR DEMONSTRATION PROGRAMS

Present law

Section 106 of CAPTA authorizes the Secretary to make grants to public agencies and private nonprofit organizations for demonstration or service programs or projects, that must include an evaluation component; resource centers; and discretionary grants that may be used for a variety of purposes.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 106 to retain authority for the demonstration grants program and to change the criteria for awarding grants. Authorizes the following purposes for demonstration programs and projects: training programs, mutual support and self-help programs for parents, innovative programs that use collaborative partnerships between various agencies to allow for establishment of a triage system in responding to child abuse and neglect reports; kinship care programs, and supervised visitation centers for families where there has been child abuse or domestic violence. All demonstration projects will be evaluated for their effectiveness.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

I. STATE GRANTS FOR PREVENTION AND TREATMENT PROGRAMS

Present law

Section 107 of CAPTA authorizes the Secretary to make development and operation grants to States to assist them in improving their child protective service systems. States must meet certain eligibility requirements, which include having a State law in effect providing for reporting of child abuse or neglect allegations and providing immunity from prosecution for reporters of abuse or neglect.

Requires that States have in place procedures for responding to reports of medical neglect, including instances of withholding medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

House bill

States would receive Child Protection Block Grants, which would be used for child protective service systems, among other related activities. To receive block grants, States must certify that they have in effect a State law for reporting of child abuse or neglect, a program to investigate child abuse and neglect reports, and procedures to respond to reporting of medical neglect of disabled infants among other requirements. (See Item 1.B. (2) and (3), above.)

Requires States participating in the Child Protection Block Grant to submit detailed annual data reports to the Secretary. (See Item 1.G.2., above.) The Secretary would prepare annual reports for Congress. (See Item 1.G.4., above.)

Senate amendment

Revises section 107. Under revised eligibility requirements, States would provide an assurance or certification, signed by the chief executive officer of the State, that the State has a law or statewide program relating to procedures for: reporting of known and suspected instances of child abuse and neglect; immediate screening, safety assessment, and prompt investigation of such reports; procedures for immediate steps to be taken to protect the safety of children; provisions for immunity from prosecution for individuals making good faith reports of child abuse; methods for preserving confidentiality of records; requirements for the prompt disclosure of relevant information to appropriate entities working to protect children; the cooperation of law enforcement officials, court personnel and human services agencies; provision for the appointment of a guardian ad litem to represent the child in any judicial proceedings; and provisions that facilitate the prompt expungement of unsubstantiated or false child abuse reports.

Requires that States have in place procedures for responding to reports of medical neglect, including instances of withholding medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

States must have in place, within two years of enactment, provisions by which individuals who disagree with an official finding of abuse or neglect can appeal such a finding.

States would submit a plan every 5 years, instead of 4, demonstrating their eligibility and specifics about how their grant money will be used.

States would be required to work annually with the Secretary to provide, to the maximum extent practicable, a report containing specified data on their child protective service systems, including the number of children reported as abused or neglected, data on substantiation of reports, services provided to reported children, preventive services provided to families, the number of child deaths resulting from abuse or neglect including the number of children who died while in foster care, number of caseworkers responsible for intake and screening, agency response time to abuse or neglect reports, response time with respect to provision of services to families where abuse or neglect has been alleged, and the number of caseworkers relative to the number of reports investigated in the previous year. The Secretary would prepare a report based on State data, to be submitted to Congress and the national information clearinghouse on child abuse and neglect.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

J. REPEAL

Present law

Section 108 of CAPTA authorizes the Secretary to provide training and technical assistance to States.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Repeals section 108.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

K. MISCELLANEOUS REQUIREMENTS

Present law

Section 110(c) of CAPTA requires the Secretary to ensure that a majority share of assistance under CAPTA is available for discretionary research and demonstration grants.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Strikes section 110(c).

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

L. DEFINITIONS

Present law

Section 113 of CAPTA contains definitions.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 113 to change some definitions. Strikes definitions of "Board" and "Center," and changes the definition of "child abuse and neglect" to mean, at a minimum, "any recent act or failure to act on the part of a parent or caretaker, which results in death, serious physical or emotional harm, sexual abuse or exploitation, or an act or failure to act which presents an imminent risk of serious harm."

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

M. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Present law

Section 114(a) authorizes appropriations for Title I of CAPTA, and specifies how funds are to be allocated among authorized activities. The authorization of appropriations expires at the end of fiscal year 1995.

House bill

The House bill has no funding for CAPTA but includes funding for the Child Protection Block Grant; see sections C.1. and C.2., above.

Senate amendment

Amends section 114(a) to authorize $100 million in fiscal year 1996, and "such sums as necessary" in fiscal years 1997–2000, for Title I of CAPTA. Requires that one-third of funds be spent on discretionary activities and, that of funds reserved for discretionary activities, no more than 40 percent shall be for demonstration projects under section 106.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

N. RULE OF CONSTRUCTION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No directly comparable provision, but see section 1.B.4., above.

Senate amendment

Establishes a new section of CAPTA that addresses the issue of spiritual treatment of children. The section does not require a parent or legal guardian to provide a child with medical service or treatment, against his or her religious beliefs, nor does it require a State to find, or prohibit a State from finding, abuse or neglect in cases where the parent or guardian relied solely or partially on spiritual means rather than medical treatment, in accordance with their religious beliefs. The section requires a State to have in place authority under State law to pursue any legal remedies necessary to provide medical care or treatment when such care or treatment is necessary to prevent or remedy serious harm to the child, or to prevent the withholding of medically indicated treatment from children with life-threatening conditions. Each State has sole discretion over its case-by-case determinations relating to medical neglect.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

O. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Makes a technical amendment to section 1404A of the Victims of Crime Act.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

7. COMMUNITY-BASED FAMILY RESOURCE AND SUPPORT GRANTS

Present law

Title II of CAPTA authorizes the Secretary to make grants to States for Community-Based Family Resource Programs.

House bill

No provision.

Senate Amendment

Replaces current law with a new Title II to establish Community-Based Family Resource and Support Grants.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

A. PURPOSE AND AUTHORITY

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States could use Child Protection Block Grant allotments for family resource and support services. (See Item 1.C.(5), above.)

Senate amendment

Establishes the purpose of Title II as: to support State efforts to develop, operate, expand and enhance a network of community-based, prevention-focused, family resource and support programs. Authorizes the Secretary of HHS to make grants on a formula basis to entities designated by States as "lead entities."

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. ELIGIBILITY

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Establishes eligibility requirements for States to receive grants. States are eligible if:

1) the chief executive officer has designated a lead entity that is an existing public, quasi-public or nonprofit private entity, with priority for the State trust fund advisory board or an existing entity that leverages funds for a broad range of child abuse and neglect prevention activities and family resource programs;

2) the chief executive officer assures that the lead entity will provide or be responsible for providing a network of community-based family resource and support programs and providing direction and oversight to the network; and

3) the chief executive officer assures that the lead entity has a demonstrated commitment to parental participation, a demonstrated ability to work with State and community-based public and private nonprofit organizations, the capacity to provide operational support and training and technical assistance to the statewide network of community-based family resource and support programs, and will integrate its efforts with experienced individuals and organizations.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

C. AMOUNT OF GRANT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Reserves 1 percent of appropriations for Title II of CAPTA for allotments to Indian tribes and tribal organizations and migrant programs. Remaining funds are allotted to States equally according to the State "minor child amount" and the State "matchable amount." The State minor child amount is based on the State's relative population of children under 18, except that no State can receive less than $250,000. The State matching amount is based on each State's relative amount of funds (including foundation, corporate and other private funding, State revenues and Federal funds) that have been dedicated toward the purposes of this program.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

D. EXISTING AND CONTINUATION GRANTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides that any State or entity that has a grant, contract, or cooperative agreement in effect on the date of enactment, under the Family Resource and Support Program, the Community-Based Family Resource Program, the Family Support Center Program, the Emergency Child Abuse Prevention Grant Program, or the Temporary Child Care and Crisis Nurseries Program, shall continue to be funded under the original terms through the end of the applicable grant cycle. Also allows the Secretary to continue grants for Family Resource and Support Program grantees and other programs funded under CAPTA on a non-competitive basis, subject to available appropriations, grantee performance, and receipt of required reports.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

E. APPLICATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides that, to receive grants under Title II, States must submit an application to the Secretary containing information requested by the Secretary, including:

1) a description of the lead entity;

2) a description of how the network of community-based, prevention-focused, family resource and support programs will operate, and how family resource and support services will be integrated into a continuum of preventive services for children and families;

3) an assurance that an inventory of current family resource programs, respite, child abuse and neglect prevention activities, and other family resource programs in the State, and a description of current unmet needs, will be provided;

4) a budget for the State's network of community-based, prevention-focused, family resource and support programs that verifies that the State will spend an amount equal to no less than 20 percent of the amount received under this program (in cash, not in-kind);

5) an assurance that funds received under this Title will supplement and not supplant other State and local public funds designated for the statewide network of family resource and support programs;

6) an assurance that the statewide network of family resource and support programs will maintain cultural diversity, and be culturally competent and socially sensitive and responsive to the needs of families with children with disabilities;

7) an assurance that the State has the capacity to ensure meaningful involvement of parents;

8) a description of the criteria to be used to develop, or select and fund, individual programs to be part of the statewide network;

9) a description of outreach activities that will be used to maximize the participation of racial and ethnic minorities, new immigrant populations, children and adults with disabilities, homeless families and those at risk of homelessness, and members of other under-served or under-represented groups;

10) a plan for providing operational support, training and technical assistance to family resource and support programs;

11) a description of how activities will be evaluated;

12) a description of actions that will be taken to advocate changes in State policies, practices, procedures, and regulations to improve the delivery of family resource and support program services to all children and families; and

13) an assurance that reports will be submitted to the Secretary on time and containing requested information.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

F. LOCAL PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Grants will be used for family resource and support programs that:

1) assess community assets and needs through a planning process that includes parents, local agencies, and private sector representatives;

2) develop a strategy to provide a continuum of preventive, holistic, family-centered services to children and families;

3) provide "core" services, such as parent education, support and self-help, and leadership services, developmental screening of children, outreach, referral and follow-up services; "other core" services, which can be provided directly or through contracts, including respite services; and access to "optional" services, including child care, early childhood development and intervention, services for families with children with disabilities, job readiness, educational services, self-sufficiency and life management skills training, community referral services, and peer counseling

4) develop leadership roles for the meaningful involvement of parents;

5) provide leadership in mobilizing local resources to support family resource and support programs; and

6) participate with other community-based, prevention-focused family resource and support programs in developing and operating the statewide network.

Priority for local grants shall be given to community-based programs serving low-income communities and those serving young parents or parents with young children, and to family resource and support programs previously funded under the programs consolidated by this Title.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

G. PERFORMANCE MEASURES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

States receiving grants must submit reports to the Secretary that:

1) demonstrate effective development of a statewide network of family resource and support programs;

2) supply an inventory and description of services provided to families, including "core" and "optional" services;

3) demonstrate the establishment of new respite and other new family services, and expansion of existing services, to meet identified unmet needs;

4) describe number of families served (including families with children with disabilities), and the involvement of a diverse representation of families in designing, operating and evaluating the statewide network of family resource and support programs;

5) demonstrate a high level of satisfaction among families that have used family resource and support program services;

6) demonstrate innovative funding mechanisms that blend Federal, State, local and private funds, and innovative and interdisciplinary service delivery mechanisms;

7) describe the results of a peer review process conducted under the State program; and

8) demonstrate an implementation plan to ensure continued leadership of parents in family resource and support programs.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

H. NATIONAL NETWORK FOR COMMUNITY-BASED FAMILY RESOURCE PROGRAMS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Authorizes the Secretary to allocate such sums as necessary from the amount provided under the State allotment to support State activities related to a peer review process, an information clearinghouse, a yearly symposium, a computerized communication system between State lead entities, and State-to-State technical assistance through biannual conferences.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

I. DEFINITIONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Defines the following terms: "children with disabilities," "community referral services," "culturally competent," "family resource and support program," "national network for community-based family resource programs," "outreach services," and "respite services."

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

J. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Authorizes $108 million for Title II for each of fiscal year 1996–fiscal year 2000.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

8. REPEALS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Repeals the crisis nurseries portion of Temporary Child Care and Crisis Nurseries; and family support centers under the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act. (See Item 2, above.)

Senate amendment

Repeals the Temporary Child Care for Children with Disabilities and Crisis Nurseries Act. Also repeals family support centers under Subtitle F of Title VII of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

9. FAMILY VIOLENCE PREVENTION AND SERVICES

A. STATE DEMONSTRATION GRANTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 303(e) of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act, relating to non-Federal matching requirements.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. ALLOTMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 304(a)(1) of Family Violence Prevention and Services Act.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

C. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Present law

Section 310 of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act authorizes appropriations for the program and specifies how funds are to be allocated among activities.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 310 of Family Violence Prevention and Services Act to reduce from 80% to 70% the minimum amount of funds to be used for making grants to States for family violence activities. Also requires the Secretary to use not less than 10% of appropriations for grants for State family violence coalitions, and provides that Federal funds made available under this program must be used to supplement and not supplant other Federal, State or local public funds expended for similar activities.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

10. ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES; REFERENCE

A. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

Present law

Section 201 of the adoption opportunities program establishes congressional findings with regard to the child welfare population, and declares the program's purpose to facilitate the elimination of barriers to adoption and to provide permanent homes for children who would benefit from adoption, particularly children with special needs.

House bill

REPEALS THE ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM. (SEE ITEM 2, ABOVE.)

Senate amendment

Amends section 201 of the adoption opportunities program to update congressional findings, and delete references to the promotion of model adoption legislation and procedures.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. INFORMATION AND SERVICES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends section 203 of the adoption opportunities program, to require the Secretary of HHS to conduct studies related to kinship care, recruitment of foster and adoptive parents; and to provide technical assistance and resource and referral information related to termination of parental rights, recruitment and retention of adoptive placements, placement of special needs children, provision of pre- and post-placement services, and other assistance to help State and local governments replicate successful adoption-related projects.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

C. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Authorizes $20 million for fiscal year 1996, and such sums as necessary for each of fiscal year 1997–FY2000, for the adoption opportunities program.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

11. ABANDONED INFANTS ASSISTANCE ACT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Repeals abandoned infants assistance.

Senate amendment

Authorizes $35 million for each of fiscal year 1995–FY1996, and such sums as necessary for each of fiscal year 1997–FY2000, for abandoned infants assistance.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

12. REAUTHORIZATION OF VARIOUS PROGRAMS

A. MISSING CHILDREN'S ASSISTANCE ACT

Present law

The Missing Children's Assistance Act is authorized through fiscal year 1996.

House bill

Repeals the Missing Children's Assistance Act (see Item 2, above; however, authorizes appropriations of $7 million for the Attorney General to operate an information clearinghouse and telephone hotline for information on missing children (see Item 1.F, above).

Senate amendment

Extends the authorization for the Missing Children's Assistance Act through fiscal year 1997; such sums as necessary are authorized. Provides that the Department of Justice shall use no more than 5 percent of appropriations in a fiscal year to evaluate the program.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. VICTIMS OF CHILD ABUSE ACT OF 1990

Present law

Appropriations are authorized through fiscal year 1996 for grants to improve investigation and prosecution of child abuse cases, and for children's advocacy centers, under the Victims of Child Abuse Act.

House bill

Repeals grants to improve investigation and prosecution of child abuse and neglect cases, and children's advocacy centers, under the Victims of Child Abuse Act. (See Item 2, above.)

Senate amendment

Extends the authorization through fiscal year 1997, at such sums as necessary, for these two programs under the Victims of Child Abuse Act.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

13. ADOPTION EXPENSES

A. REFUNDABLE CREDIT FOR ADOPTION EXPENSES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision in H.R. 4, but similar provision in the House-passed H.R. 1215.

Senate amendment

Amends subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, to insert a new section 35, adoption expenses, that would provide a tax credit for expenditures for adoption fees, court costs, attorney fees, and other expenses directly related to a legal and finalized adoption. This dollar-for-dollar tax credit of up to $5,000 per child is reduced for taxpayers with adjusted gross income above $60,000 and is fully phased out at incomes of $100,000. Married couples must file a joint return and the credit is not available for expenditures that contradict State or Federal law. The amendment prohibits double benefits. The amendment will apply to taxable years beginning after Dec. 31, 1995.

Conference agreement

[This provision has been moved to the tax portion of the Reconciliation Act of 1995 and will provide a tax credit for expenditures for adoption fees, court costs, attorney fees, and other expenses directly related to a legal and finalized adoption. This dollar-for-dollar tax credit of up to $5,000 per child is reduced for taxpayers with adjusted gross income above $75,000 and is fully phased out at incomes of $115,000. The credit is not available for expenditures that contradict State or Federal law. The amendment prohibits double benefits with respect to State and local credits, except in cases of "special children". The amendment will apply to taxable years beginning after Dec. 31, 1995 and allow for carry over of up to five years in the event tax liability does not cover the entire credit during a single year.]

B. EXCLUSION OF ADOPTION ASSISTANCE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 by inserting a new section 137, which treats as a tax-free fringe benefit employer-provided adoption assistance benefits, or reimbursement by the employer of qualified adoption expenses, provided the adoptee is physically or mentally incapable of self-care (a "special needs" child). Military adoption assistance benefits for these children also would be free of tax. The amendment will apply to taxable years beginning after Dec. 31, 1995.

Conference agreement

[This provision has been moved to the tax portion of the Reconciliation Act of 1995. This provision treats as a tax-free fringe benefit employer-provided adoption assistance benefits of up to $5,000, or reimbursement by the employer of qualified adoption expenses The amendment will apply to taxable years beginning after Dec. 31, 1995. This benefit is not available if the credit (above) is chosen.]

C. WITHDRAWAL FROM IRA FOR ADOPTION EXPENSES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends subsection (d) of section 408 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to permit tax-free withdrawals from an individual retirement account (IRA) for qualified adoption expenses.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes.

SUBTITLE H—CHILD CARE

1. GOALS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Adds the following goals:

(1) to allow each State maximum flexibility in developing child care programs and policies that best suit the needs of children and parents within such State;

(2) to promote parental choice to empower working parents to make their own decisions on the child care that best suits their family's needs;

(3) to encourage States to provide consumer education information to help parents make informed choices about child care;

(4) to assist States to provide child care to parents trying to achieve independence from public assistance; and

(5) to assist States in implementing the health, safety, licensing and registration standards established in State regulation.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd

Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

2. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Present law

The authorization of appropriations expires at the end of fiscal year 1995. Appropriations in fiscal year 1995 are $935 million; such sums as necessary are authorized. [Sec. 658B of the CCDBG Act]

[Note: In addition, entitlement funds are available for child care under the AFDC Child Care, Transitional Child Care, and At-Risk Child Care programs authorized by Title IV–A of the Social Security Act.]

House bill

Authorizes appropriations of $2,093 million for each of fiscal year 1996–2000.

[Note: Title I of the House bill repeals the AFDC Child Care, Transitional Child Care, and At-Risk Child Care programs.]

Senate amendment

Authorizes appropriations as follows: $1 billion for fiscal year 1996, and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal year 1997–2000.

[Note: Additional funds are provided for child care under Title I of the Senate amendment, to replace the current AFDC Child Care, Transitional Child Care, and At-Risk Child Care programs—$8 billion over 5 years in direct spending.]

Conference agreement

The conference agreement establishes a single child care block grant and State administrative system by adding mandatory funds to the existing Child Care and Development Block Grant (CCDBG). Specifically, one discretionary and two mandatory streams of funding will be consolidated in a reconstituted CCDBG.

The child care funds made available in the Child Care Block Grant total $17 billion over 7 years; $10 billion in mandatory funds ($1.17 billion in fiscal year 1996, $1.24 billion in fiscal year 1997, $1.32 billion in fiscal year 1998, $1.4 billion fiscal year 1999, $1.5 billion in fiscal year 2000, $1.625 billion in fiscal year 2001, and $1.745 in fiscal year 2002) combined with $1 billion each year (fiscal year 1996–FY2002) in discretionary funds.

Each State will receive the amount of funds it received for child care under all of the entitlement programs currently under title IV of the Social Security Act (AFDC Child Care, transitional Child Care, and At-Risk Child Care) in the 1994 fiscal year, or the average amount of funds received for those programs from fiscal year 1992 through fiscal year 1994, which ever is greater. These programs, combined, provide approximately $990 million in mandatory child care funding for the States.

The mandatory funds remaining after the State allocations based on previous years child care allotments will be distributed among the States based on the formula currently used in the title IV–A At-Risk Child Care grant. Specifically, funds will be distributed based on the proportion of the number of children under the age of 13 residing in the State to the number of all of the nation's children under the age of 13. States must provide matching funds in the amount of the fiscal year 1995 State Medicaid rate to receive these funds.

Discretionary funds appropriated for the Child Care Block Grant will be distributed to States based on the current formula for the Child Care and Development Block Grant. This formula utilizes the number of children in low income families and the State per capita income as criteria for the distribution of funds to States. As in current law governing the CCDBG, there is no requirement for the State to provide matching funds to receive an allotment from the discretionary funds appropriated for the Child Care Block Grant.

If a State does not use their full portion of funds, the remaining portion will be redistributed to the States according to section 402(i) (as such section was in effect before October 1, 1995).

For the first year of enactment, States will receive their total allotment (mandatory and discretionary) for child care less any amount States had already spent on Title IV of Social Security child care programs in fiscal year 1996 on the day before enactment.

3. LEAD AGENCY

Present law

Requires the chief executive officer of a State to designate an appropriate State agency to act as the lead agency in administering financial assistance under the Act. [Sec. 658D of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Changes the term "agency" to "entity."

Senate amendment

Allows the State lead agency to administer financial assistance received under the Act through other "governmental or nongovernmental" agencies (instead of other "State" agencies); requires that "sufficient time and Statewide distribution of the notice" be given of the public hearing on development of the State plan; and strikes language on issues that may be considered during consultation with local governments on development of the State plan.

Conference agreement

The House recedes.

4. APPLICATION AND PLAN

Present law

Requires States to prepare and submit to the Secretary an application that includes a State plan. The initial plan must cover a 3-year period, and subsequent plans must cover a 2-year period. Required contents of the plan include designation of a lead agency; policies and procedures regarding parental choice of providers, unlimited parental access, parental complaints, consumer education, compliance with State and local regulatory requirements, establishment of and compliance with health and safety requirements, review of State licensing and regulatory requirements, and supplementation.

In addition, the State plan must provide that funds will be used for child care services, and that 25% of funds will be reserved for activities to improve the quality of child care and to increase the availability of early childhood development and before- and after-school child care. [Sec. 658E of the CCDBG Act]

Further, State plans must assure that payment rates will be adequate to provide eligible children equal access to child care as compared with children whose families are not eligible for subsidies, and must assure that the State will establish and periodically revise a sliding fee scale that provides for cost sharing by families that receive child care subsidies.

House bill

Requires the State plan to cover a 2-year period. Requires States to provide a detailed description of procedures to be used to assure parental choice of providers. Changes "provide assurances" to "certify" that procedures are in effect within the State to ensure unlimited parental access to children and parental choice; also requires that the State plan provide a detailed description of such procedures. Changes "provide assurances" to "certify" that the State maintains a record of parental complaints, and requires the State to provide a detailed description of how such a record is maintained and made available. Changes the consumer education part of the State plan to require assurances that the State will collect and disseminate consumer education information. Requires that the State certify that providers comply with State and local health, safety and licensing or regulatory requirements and provide a detailed description of such requirements and how they are enforced. Eliminates current law provisions requiring establishment of and compliance with health and safety requirements, review of State licensing and regulatory requirements, notification to HHS when standards are reduced, and supplementation. Eliminates the requirement that unlicensed providers be registered.

Adds a requirement that a summary of the facts relied upon by the State to determine that payment rates are sufficient to ensure equal access to child care is included in the State plan. Eliminates the assurance that the State will establish a sliding fee scale. Also provides that funds, other than amounts transferred under section 658T (see Item 14, below), will be used for child care services, activities to improve the quality and availability of such services, and any other activity that the State deems appropriated to realize the goals specified above (see Item 1). Deletes the current law requirement that States reserve 25% of funds for activities to improve the quality of child care and to increase availability of early childhood development and before- and after-school care.

Requires States to spend no more than 5% on administrative costs.

Senate amendment

Requires the State plan to cover a 2-year period. Replaces the requirement that providers not subject to licensing or regulation be registered with the State, with a requirement that the State implement mechanisms to ensure proper payment to providers. Requires the Secretary to develop minimum standards for Indian tribes and tribal organizations receiving assistance under the Act, in lieu of State or local licensing or regulatory requirements. Eliminates provisions related to reduction in standards and reviews of State licensing and regulatory requirements.

Requires the State plan to describe the manner in which services will be provided to the working poor. Reserves 15% of each State's allotment for activities to improve quality of child care, instead of 25% for both quality improvement and before- and after-school child care services.

Requires States to spend no more than 5% on administrative costs, not including direct service costs. Administrative costs shall not include direct service costs.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes, with a modification that the States must certify that they have licensing standards for child care which are applied uniformly without regard to whether a child care provider is receiving Federal funds. Nothing in this Act shall either require or prohibit the application of State licensing standards, regulations, or laws to a particular type of child care or child care provider. The Secretary must develop minimum standards for Indian tribes and tribal organizations receiving assistance under this Act, in lieu of State or local licensing or regulatory requirements. at least 70% of the mandatory funding must be used to provide child care for children in families who are receiving welfare, working their way off welfare, or at risk of becoming welfare dependent. A substantial portion of the discretionary funding for child care authorized under this Act is intended to be used for low-income working families who are not working their way off welfare or at risk of becoming welfare dependent. The State plan must demonstrate how the State is meeting the specific needs of each of these populations.

5. LIMITATION ON STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present law

Prohibits the use of funds for purchase or improvement of land or buildings, except in the case of sectarian agencies or organizations that need to make renovations or repairs in order to comply with specific health and safety requirements that States are required to establish. [Sec. 658F of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Amends section 658F to make a conforming amendment referring to the elimination of specific health and safety requirements.

Senate amendment

No provision (maintains current law).

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes, with a modification that this Act prohibit the use of funds for purchase or improvement of land or buildings except for Indian tribes or tribal organizations. Indian tribes and tribal organizations may use funds for construction or renovation of facilities, upon the request by the tribe or tribal organization and subject to the approval by the Secretary.

6. ACTIVITIES TO IMPROVE THE QUALITY OF CHILD CARE

Present law

As stated above, 25 percent of State allotments must be reserved for activities to improve child care quality and to increase the availability of early childhood development and before- and after-school child care (see Item 1.D, above). Section 658G specifies how these funds are to be used. Of reserved funds, requires States to use no less than 20% for activities to improve the quality of care, including resource and referral programs, grants or loans to assist providers in meeting State and local standards, monitoring of compliance with licensing and regulatory requirements, training of child care personnel, and improving compensation for child care personnel. [Sec. 658G of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Repeals the requirement that 25 percent of funds be set aside for quality improvement activities (see Item 5, above). Repeals section 658G regarding the use of these set-aside funds.

Senate amendment

As stated above, reduces quality improvement set-aside to 15 percent (see Item 5, above). Amends section 658G to require States to use their quality improvement set-aside for resource and referral activities, including "providing comprehensive consumer education to parents and the public, referrals that honor parental choice, and activities designed to improve the quality and availability of child care," and for one or more "other activities," which include those listed in the current section 658G, plus activities to increase the availability of before- and after-school care, infant care, and child care between the hours of 5:00 p.m. and 8:00 a.m.

Adds new language to prohibit States from discriminating against providers that wish to participate in resource and referral systems, that are operating legally within the State but that are exempt from State licensing requirements.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes, with a modification that States retain at least a 3 percent set-aside of the total mandatory and discretionary funding received for child care under this Act for activities designed to provide comprehensive consumer education to parents and the public, activities that increase parental choice, and activities designed to improve the quality and availability of child care, such as resource and referral services.

The House recedes, with a modification to limit the amount of total child care funds made available under this Act for administrative costs to 3 percent. Administrative cost shall not include direct service costs.

7. EARLY CHILDHOOD DEVELOPMENT AND BEFORE- AND AFTER-SCHOOL CARE

Present law

Requires States to use no less than 75 percent of funds reserved for quality improvement for activities to expand and conduct early childhood development programs and before- and after-school child care. [Sec. 658H of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Repeals section 658H.

Senate amendment

Repeals section 658H.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

8. ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

Present law

Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) to coordinate HHS and other Federal child care activities, to collect and publish a list of State child care standards every 3 years, and to provide technical assistance to States. Requires the Secretary to review, monitor, and enforce compliance with the Act and the State plan by withholding payments and imposing additional sanctions in certain cases. [Sec. 658I of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Deletes the requirement that the Secretary of HHS collect and publish a list of child care standards every 3 years. Maintains current law for repayment.

Senate amendment

Strikes the current law requirement that the Secretary withhold further payments to a State in case of a finding of noncompliance until the noncompliance is corrected. Instead, authorizes the Secretary, in such cases, to impose additional program requirements on the State, such as a requirement that the State reimburse the Secretary for any improperly spent funds, or the Secretary may deduct from the administrative portion of the State's subsequent allotment an amount equal to or less than the misspent funds, or a combination of such options. The amendment also strikes sections related to additional sanctions and notice of such additional sanctions.

Conference agreement

The House recedes, with a modification that the Secretary may not impose additional program requirements on the State for an improperly spent funds.

9. PAYMENTS

Present law

Provides that payments received by a State for a fiscal year may be expended in that fiscal year or in the succeeding 3 fiscal years. [Sec. 658J of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Provides that payments received by a State for a fiscal year may be obligated in the fiscal year received or the succeeding fiscal year, instead of expended in the fiscal year received or the succeeding 3 fiscal years.

Senate amendment

No provision (maintains current law).

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes.

10. ANNUAL REPORT AND AUDITS

Present law

Requires each State to prepare and submit to the Secretary every year a report: specifying how funds are used; containing data on the manner in which the child care needs of families in the State are being fulfilled, including information on the number of children served, child care programs in the State, compensation provided to child care staff, and activities to encourage public-private partnerships in child care; describing the extent to which affordability and availability of child care has increased; summarizing findings from a review of State licensing and regulatory requirements, if applicable; explaining any action taken by the State to reduce standards, if applicable; and describing standards and health and safety requirements applied to child care providers in the State, including a description of efforts to improve the quality of child care. [Sec. 658K of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Changes the title of the section from "Annual Report and Audits" to "Annual Report, Evaluation Plans, and Audits." Changes required data elements in annual reports to include:

(1) the number and ages of children being assisted with funds provided under this subchapter;

(2) with respect to the families of such children:

the number of other children in such families;

the number of such families that include only 1 parent;

the number of such families that include both parents;

the ages of the mothers of such children;

the ages of the fathers of such children;

the sources of the economic resources of such families, including the amount of such resources obtained from (and separately identified as being from)

a. employment, including self-employment;

b. assistance received under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (SSA);

c. part B of title IV of the SSA;

d. the Child Nutrition Act of 1966;

e. the National School Lunch Act;

f. assistance received under title XVI of the SSA;

g. assistance received under title XIV of the SSA;

h. assistance received under title XIX of the SSA;

i. assistance received under title XX of the SSA; and

j. any other source of economic resources the Secretary determines to be appropriate;

(3) the number of such providers separately identified with respect to each type of child care provider specified in section 658P(5) that provided child care services obtained with assistance provided under this subchapter;

(4) the cost of child care services and the portion of such cost paid with assistance from this Act;

(5) the manner in which consumer education information was provided to parents and the number of parents to whom such information was provided;

(6) the number of parental complaints about child care that were found to have merit and a description of corrective actions taken by the State; and

(7) information on programs to which funds were transferred under section 658T (see item 15, below).

States are also required to present evidence demonstrating that they have State requirements designed to protect the health and safety of children.

Deletes current report requirements on: (1) increasing the affordability and availability of child care; (2) reviewing findings on State licensing and regulatory requirements; and (3) reducing standards.

Requires States to include an evaluation plan in their first annual report due after enactment and every 2 years thereafter, and to include the results of such evaluation in the second annual report due after enactment and every 2 years thereafter. The plan must include an evaluation regarding the extent to which the State has realized the following goals:

(1) promoting parental choice to make their own decisions on the child care that best suits their family's needs;

(2) providing consumer education information to help parents make informed choices about child care;

(3) providing child care to parents trying to achieve independence from public assistance; and

(4) implementing the health, safety, licensing, and registration standards established in State regulations.

Senate amendment

Requires States to submit reports every 2 years, rather than every year, with the first report due no later than December 31, 1996. Requires that States include information on the type of Federal child care and preschool programs serving children in the State, and requires that States describe the extent and manner to which resource and referral activities are being carried out by the State. Strikes the current requirement for information on the type and number of child care programs, providers, caregivers and support personnel in the State, and strikes the provision related to review findings of State licensing and regulatory requirements.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes, with a modification that the State prepare and submit a data report to the Secretary every six months, and that the report include: (1) family income; (2) county of residence; (3) the sex, age of children receiving benefits; (4) whether the family includes only one parent; (5) the sources o f family income, including the amount obtained from (and separately identified as being from): a) employment, including self-employment; b) Part A cash assistance or other assistance; c) housing assistance; d) food stamps; and e) other; (6) the number of months the family has received benefits; (7) the type of care in which the child was enrolled (family day care, center, own home); (8) whether the provider was a relative; (9) the cost of care; and (10) the average hours per week of care. Annually, the State must submit the following aggregate data: (1) the number of providers separately identified in accord with each type of provider specified in section 658P(5) that received funding under this subchapter; (2) the monthly cost of child care services and the portion of such cost paid with assistance from this Act by type of care; (3) the number and total amount of payments by the State in vouchers, contracts, cash, and disregards from public benefit programs by type of care; (4) the manner in which consumer education information was provided; (5) information on programs from which funds were transferred under 658T; and (6) total number (unduplicated) of children and families served.

States are required to present evidence demonstrating that they have State requirements designed to protect the health and safety of children.

The House recedes on the requirement that States include an evaluation plan in their reports to the Secretary.

Deletes current report requirements on: (1) increasing the affordability and availability of child care; (2) reviewing findings on State licensing and regulatry reauirements; and (3) reducing standards.

11. REPORT BY THE SECRETARY

Present law

Requires the Secretary to prepare and submit an annual report, summarizing and analyzing information provided by States, to the House Education and Labor Committee and the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee. This report must contain an assessment and, where appropriate, recommendations to Congress regarding efforts that should be taken to improve access of the public to quality and affordable child care. [Sec. 658L of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Revises the Secretary's report to become a biennial report to the Speaker and the President pro tempore.

Senate amendment

Requires the Secretary to prepare and submit biennial reports, rather than annual, with the first report due no later than July 31, 1997; and replaces the reference to the House Education and Labor Committee with the House Economic and Educational Opportunities Committee.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

12. ALLOTMENTS

Present law

Requires the Secretary to reserve one-half of 1 percent of appropriations for payment to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Marianas and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The Secretary also must reserve no more than 3 percent for payment to Indian tribes and tribal organizations with approved applications. Remaining funds are allocated to the States based on the States' proportion of children under age 5 and the number of children receiving free or reduced-price school lunches, as well as the States' per capita income. Any portion of a State's reallotment that the Secretary determines is not needed by the State to carry out its plan for the allotment period, must be reallotted by the Secretary to the other States in the same proportion as the original allotments. [Sec. 658O of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Maintains the current law set-asides for the Territories and Indian tribes and tribal organizations, except that the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands is deleted from the set-aside for Territories. Allots remaining funds to States as follows: each State will receive an amount based on its relative share of the aggregate amount of Federal funds received by the State in fiscal year 1994 under the Child Care and Development Block Grant Act, and under child care programs for AFDC recipients and former AFDC recipients and the At-Risk Child Care program under Title IV–A of the Social Security Act. Eliminates reallotment provisions.

Senate amendment

Maintains current law allotment procedures. Amends section 658O(c), related to payments for the benefit of Indian children, to add new provisions allowing the use of funds by Indian tribes or tribal organizations for construction or renovation of facilities, upon request by the tribe or tribal organization and subject to approval by the Secretary. The Secretary may not permit a tribe or tribal organization to use funds for construction or renovation if such use will result in a decrease in the level of child care services. The Secretary is also allowed to reallot to other tribes any tribal allotments that are not expended, which is similar to what happens with unused State allotments.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes, with a modification that the set-aside for Indian tribes and tribal organizations and Native Hawaiian Organizations is 1 percent of the total funds for child care made available under this Act. Any portion of a State's allotment that the Secretary determines is not needed by the State to carry out its plan for the allotment period must be reallotted by the Secretary to the other States in the same proportion as the original allotments. The Secretary is also allowed to reallot to other tribes any tribal allotments that are expended, which is similar to the process for reallotment to States.

13. DEFINITIONS

Present law

Provides definitions of the following terms: caregiver, child care certificate, elementary school, eligible child, eligible child care provider, family child care provider, Indian tribe, lead agency, parent, secondary school, Secretary, sliding fee scale, State, and tribal organization. [Sec. 658P of the CCDBG Act]

House bill

Includes definitions for lead entity and child care services, and strikes definitions for elementary school, secondary school, and sliding fee scale.

Senate amendment

Revises the definition of eligible child to one whose family income does not exceed 100 percent of the State median, instead of 75 percent.

Adds the following as an allowable use of a child care certificate: "as a deposit for child care services if such a deposit is required of other children being cared for by the provider."

Revise the definition of relative child care provider by adding great grandchild and sibling (if the provider lives in a separate residence) to the list of eligible children; by striking the requirement that such providers be registered; and by requiring such providers to comply with any "applicable" requirements governing child care provided by a relative.

Conference agreement

The House recedes, with a modification that strikes the definition for elementary and secondary school and revises the definition of eligible child to one whose family income does not exceed 85 percent of the State median income.

14. TRANSFER OF FUNDS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Adds a new section 658T to the CCDBG Act, allowing a State to transfer no more than 20 percent of CCDBG funds to one or more of the following programs:

1. Part A of Title IV of the Social Security Act;
2. Part B of Title IV of the Social Security Act;
3. Child Nutrition Act of 1966;
4. National School Lunch Act; and
5. Title XX of the Social Security Act.

Transferred funds would be subject to the rules of the program to which they are transferred.

Senate amendment

States can transfer up to 30 percent of their cash assistance block grant (title IV–A) into the CCDBG.

Conference agreement

The House recedes, no funds can be transfered out of the Child Care and Development Block Grant.

15. APPLICATION TO OTHER PROGRAMS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Adds a new section 658T to the CCDBG Act, that requires States that use any Federal funds for child care services to ensure that such services meet the requirements, standards and criteria, with the exception of the 15 percent quality set-aside, of the CCDBG and any regulations issued under the CCDBG. These funds must be administered through a uniform State plan and, to the maximum extent practicable, shall be transferred to the lead agency and integrated into the CCDBG program.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes.

16. REPEALS AND TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Repeals the following programs:

(1) Child Development Associate (CDA) Scholarship Assistance;

(2) State Dependent Care Development Grants;

(3) Programs of National Significance under Title X of the Elementary and Secondary Education Assistance Act of 1965 (child care related to Cultural Partnerships for At-Risk Children and Youth, and Urban and Rural Education Assistance); and

(4) Native-Hawaiian Family-Based Education Centers.

[Note: Title I of the House bill also repeals child care assistance provided under current law by Title IV–A of the Social Security Act. This assistance is provided under 3 programs known as AFDC Child Care, Transitional Child Care, and At-Risk Child Care.]

Senate amendment

Repeals CDA Scholarship Assistance and State Dependent Care Development Grants.

Requires the Secretary of HHS, after consultation with the appropriate committees of Congress and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, to prepare and submit to Congress, within 6 months after enactment, a legislative proposal containing technical and conforming amendments that reflect the amendments and repeals made by this Act.

[Note: Title I of the Senate amendment also earmarks and provides additional funds for child care, to replace the AFDC Child Care, Transitional Child Care, and At-Risk Child Care programs.]

Conference agreement

These repeals were dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

SUBTITLE I—CHILD NUTRITION

1. CHILD NUTRITION ACT OF 1966

Present law

Authorizes the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC), the School Breakfast program, the Special Milk program, assistance to States for child nutrition administrative expenses and nutrition education and training, and school breakfast assistance for Defense Department overseas dependents' schools.

The WIC program provides specific nutritious foods to lower-income pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, and infants and children (up to age 5). Recipients' family income must be below 185% of Federal poverty guidelines, and they must be judged at nutritional risk. Federal funds, set by appropriation levels, are made available to State health agencies under a formula. States then provide funds to local health agencies, which are responsible for day-to-day operations. Funds also are used for food, nutrition assessments and counselling, referrals to other programs, breastfeeding promotion, and a farmers' market program. [Sec. 17 and 21 of the Child Nutrition Act]

Under the School Breakfast program, schools choosing to participate in the program receive per-meal Federal cash subsidies for all breakfasts they serve that meet Federal nutrition standards. Subsidies are indexed annually for inflation and differ depending on whether the meal is served free (to children from families with income below 130% of poverty), at a reduced price (to children with family income between 130% and 185% of poverty), or at "full price" (so-called "paid" meals for those with family income above 185% of poverty or who do not apply for free or reduced-price meals). Schools with high proportions of lower-income students get larger per-meal subsidies, and special grants are provided to assist in paying start-up and expansion costs. [Sec. 4 of the Child Nutrition Act]

Under the Special Milk program, schools and institutions not otherwise participating in a meal service program (and schools with split sessions for kindergartners) provide milk to all children at a low price or free, and each half-pint served is federally subsidized at a different rate—depending on whether it is served free or not. Provision of free milk is not required. [Sec. 3 of the Child Nutrition Act]

Under the State administrative expense assistance program, grants are made to States to help cover administrative costs associated with child nutrition programs. The amount available each year is 1.5% of Federal cash payments for School Lunch, School Breakfast, Child and Adult Care Food, and Special Milk programs. [Sec. 7 of the Child Nutrition Act]

For nutrition education and training, States are provided with Federal funds for training school food service personnel in food service management, instructing teachers in nutrition education, and teaching children about nutrition. [Sec. 19 of the Child Nutrition Act]

Special provisions are made for Federal assistance for school breakfast programs in Defense Department overseas dependents' schools. [Sec. 20 of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

Retains the designation of the Act as the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 and replaces the Act's current provisions with authorization for a Family Nutrition Block Grant Program.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment to:

A. Create an optional State block grant entitled, "CHILD CARE AND SUMMER FOOD SERVICE OPTIONAL BLOCK GRANT."

OPTIONAL BLOCK GRANT—Under the terms of the optional block grant, all States have the option of receiving funds for the Child Care Food and Summer Food Programs through a block grant. For fiscal year 1996, 22 States will have the option to participate. In fiscal year 1997, all States will have the option to participate.

DECISION TO PARTICIPATE—States opting to participate in the block grant may reverse a decision to participate in the block grant once prior to the termination date and only after a two-year period of participation. If a State opts out, such State may resume participation under the summer food service program and the child care food program.

STATE PLAN—States are required to submit a State plan to the Secretary in order to participate in the block grant.

USE OF FUNDS—States must insure that the funds will only be used to provide assistance in providing meals and meal supplements in summer food service facilities and nonresidential child care institutions that are licensed or approved by the Federal Government, the State, or a local government (State option to make payments to sponsoring organizations).

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES—None of the funds under the block grant are to be used for State administrative expenses (States will continue to receive such funds under current SAE provisions).

NUTRITIONAL REQUIREMENTS—States are to provide minimum nutritional requirements for meals and meal supplements based on the most recent tested nutritional research available. Such requirements shall, to the extent practicable, be consistent with the goals of the most recent Dietary Guidelines for Americans. Meals shall provide, on the average over a week, at least ⅓ of the recommended dietary allowance for lunches and dinners and ¼ of the recommended dietary allowance for breakfasts. The Secretary may not impose any additional nutritional requirements beyond those specified in this section.

STATE REVIEW—States will review the meal operations in each participating summer food service facility and nonresidential child care institution no later than two years after implementation of the block grant and at the end of each 5-year period thereafter.

INCOME ELIGIBILITY—The State plan will describe how the block grant will serve specific groups of children in the State. The plan will further describe the income eligibility limitations established for meal and meal supplements. Only children who are members of families with incomes below 185 percent of the poverty line are eligible to participate.

SUMMER FOOD ELIGIBILITY—A summer food service facility may only receive funds if it operates in an area where at least 50 percent of the children are eligible for free or reduce price school meals—or be a residential public or nonprofit private summer camp. Existing summer food service sponsors must to given an opportunity to continue participation.

DOD PARTICIPATION—Nonresidential child care institutions on military installations are eligible to participate on an equitable basis with all other nonresidential child care institutions in the State participating in the block grant. If such facility is licensed or approved by DOD, the State may not require them to be licensed or approved under State or local law.

PRIVACY—States shall provide for safeguarding and restricting the use and disclosure of information about children receiving assistance under this Act. Physical segregation and overt identification of children participating in the block grant is prohibited.

REQUIRED REPORT—In order to participate, States must agree to submit a report to the Secretary each fiscal year describing (a) the number of children receiving assistance; (b) the different types of assistance provided; (c) the extent to which assistance was effective in achieving program goals; (d) the standards and methods used to ensure the nutritional quality of meals and meal supplements and (e) other information the Secretary may reasonably require. Failure to submit the required report will reduce the amounts otherwise payable to a State.

COMPLIANCE—The Secretary is required to review and monitor State compliance and withhold funds to the State with respect to the program or activity for which noncompliance is found, until the Secretary determines the problem has been corrected. The Secretary may seek financial restitution for misused funds.

PAYMENTS TO STATES—Payments to States under the block grant shall be on a quarterly basis and may be expended by the State for the current fiscal year or the succeeding fiscal year.

AUDITS—A yearly audit is required.

ALLOTMENT—In the first year of participation, the Secretary is required to allot to each participating State an amount that is equal to the amount the Secretary projects will be made available to the State to carry out the current law summer food service program and the child care food program for the current fiscal year. In the succeeding years such amount will be adjusted to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index, series for food away from home and changes in each State's child population.

ALTERNATIVE ASSISTANCE—The Secretary is to arrange for the provision of such assistance and reduce the State allotment accordingly in cases where a State prohibited by law from providing assistance to an eligible sponsoring organization or a DOD domestic dependents' school, as well as States that have substantially failed or are unwilling to provide such assistance.

EVALUATION—No later than three years after the establishment of the block grant the Secretary is to conduct an evaluation and submit a report to Congress, including the comments of the Comptroller General. The report is to include information on the effects of the block grant on the nutritional quality of meals; the income distribution of children served, the difference between implementation of the block grant and implementation of the existing Summer Food program and Child Care Food program.

AUTHORIZATION PERIOD—the block grant option is authorized through September 30, 2002.

B. Streamlining provisions in the Child Nutrition Act of 1966. The following changes are intended to streamline the operation of programs under the Child Nutrition Act.

56. Revise Sec. 19(f)(1)(A), striking clauses (ix)-(xix), eliminating unnecessary stipulations on uses of funds.

57. Strike Sec. 19(f)(1)(B) to eliminate "language appropriate" information provision.

58. Strike Sec. 19(f)(2) and 19(f)(4). Technical and conforming.

63. Revise Sec. 19(i), making discretionary and authorizing appropriations of $10 million per year.

2. AUTHORIZATION FOR FAMILY NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT

A. REQUIREMENT FOR GRANTS

Present law

The Child Nutrition Act (see item 1) and the National School Lunch Act (see item 11) require that the Secretary of Agriculture provide Federal assistance to States for the WIC, Child and Adult Care Food, Summer Food Service, and Special Milk programs, as well as other support (e.g., for State administrative expenses and nutrition education and training), under terms of agreements with States meeting Federal standards.

House bill

Directs the Secretary of Agriculture to provide to each State that submits an annual application in accordance with the revised Child Nutrition Act's requirements (see item 4) an annual family nutrition grant for the purpose of achieving the goals of the Family Nutrition Block Grant Program (see item 2B for the program's goals and item 3 for State allotments).

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional State block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

B. GOALS

Present law

The Child Nutrition Act declares it the policy of Congress to extend, expand, and strengthen child nutrition programs as a measure to safeguard the health and well-being of the Nation's children and to encourage the domestic consumption of agricultural commodities by assisting States through grants and other means to more effectively meet children's nutritional needs. [Sec. 2 of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

Establishes the goals of the Family Nutrition Block Grant Program:

(1) to provide nutritional risk assessments, food assistance based on the assessments, and nutrition education and counseling to economically disadvantaged pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, as well as infants and young children, determined to be at nutritional risk (see item 10 for definitions);

(2) to provide nutritional risk assessments of participating women so that food assistance and nutrition education is provided that meets their specific needs;

(3) to provide nutrition education to participating women to increase their awareness of the foods needed for good health;

(4) to provide food assistance, including nutritious supplements, to participating women in order to reduce the incidence of low-birthweight babies and babies born with birth defects because of nutritional deficiencies;

(5) to provide food assistance, including nutritious supplements, to participating women, infants, and children to ensure their future good health;

(6) to ensure that participating women, infants, and children are referred to other health services, including routine pediatric/obstetric care;

(7) to ensure that children from economically disadvantaged families in day care facilities, family day care homes, homeless shelters, settlement houses, recreational centers, Head Start centers, Even Start programs, and facilities for disabled children receive nutritious meals, supplements, and low-cost milk; (see item 10B for definition of "economically disadvantaged"); and

(8) to provide summer food service programs for children from economically disadvantaged families when school is not in session (see item 10B for definition of "economically disadvantaged").

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes, deleting all references to the Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children.

C. TIMING OF PAYMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Directs that the Secretary of Agriculture make family nutrition grant payments to the States on a quarterly basis.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to the Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

3. ALLOTMENT OF FAMILY NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT

Present law

Current activities that may be funded under the House bill's Family Nutrition Block Grant include those now supported by the WIC program, the Homeless Children Nutrition program (authorized under section 17B of the National School Lunch Act), the Child and Adult Care Food program (authorized under section 17 of the National School Lunch Act), the Summer Food Service program (authorized under section 13 of the National School Lunch Act), and the Special Milk program.

Under the WIC program, Federal funds, determined by appropriations levels, are made available to States under a formula that reflects State caseloads, food cost inflation, need (as evidenced by poverty and health indices), and a specified national average per participant grant; in effect, funds are allotted so that each State can maintain its caseload from year to year, and extra money is shared so as to support expanded enrollment in States with greater need.

Under the Homeless Children Nutrition program, Federal funds are made available to existing projects to continue operations and, from any additional amounts, money is provided for new projects or to expand existing projects.

Under the Child and Adult Care Food program, child and adult care centers and family day care homes receive Federal reimbursements for each meal or supplement served at legislatively established, inflation indexed rates.

Under the Summer Food Service program, sponsors receive Federal reimbursements for each meal or supplement served, at legislatively established, inflation indexed rates.

Under the Special Milk program, schools and other participating institutions receive specified, inflation indexed Federal reimbursements for each half-pint of milk served.

House bill

As set forth below, provides for the Secretary of Agriculture to make State allotments of funds appropriated for the Family Nutrition Block Grant.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

A. FIRST YEAR STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present law

No provisions.

House bill

For the first fiscal year in which grants are made, provides that the Secretary make allotments to States based on the projections of funds each State would receive under current law for the upcoming fiscal year.

Base-Year State Shares: Each State's allotment would be its prior-year share of funds received under the WIC and Homeless Children Nutrition programs, plus its prior-year share of 87.5% of the amounts received under the Child and Adult Care Food, Summer Food Service, and Special Milk programs.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

B. SECOND YEAR STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

For the second fiscal year in which grants are made, provides that (1) 95% of the amount appropriated be allotted according to each State's share of the amount allotted in the first year and (2) 5% of the amount allotted be based on each State's share of the number of individuals receiving assistance under the grant during the 1-year period ending the preceding June 30.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

C. THIRD AND FOURTH YEAR STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

For the third and fourth fiscal years in which grants are made, provides that (1) 90% of the amount appropriated be allotted according to each State's share of the amount allotted in the preceding year and (2) 10% of the amount allotted be based on each State's share of the number of individuals receiving assistance under the grant during the 1-year period ending the preceding June 30.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment allowing an optional family nutrition block grant for summer food and child care food programs only and making changes to the Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

D. FIFTH YEAR STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present Law

No provision.

House bill

For the fifth fiscal year in which grants are made, provides that (1) 85% of the amount appropriated be allotted according to each State's share of the amount allotted in the fourth year and (2) 15% of the amount allotted be based on each State's share of the number of individuals receiving assistance under the grant during the 1-year period ending the preceding June 30.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment allowing an optional family nutrition block grant for summer food and child care food programs only (see Item #1).

4. APPLICATION FOR FAMILY NUTRITION GRANTS

Present law

Nutrition requirements for food assistance provided under the current WIC, Child and Adult Care Food, and Summer Food Service programs are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, as are the general standards for determining nutritional risk in women, infants, and children, on the basis of tested nutritional research. [Sec. 17(b)(8) & (14) and (f)(12) of the Child Nutrition Act; Sec. 17(g)(1) and Sec. 13(f) of the National School Lunch Act]

The use/disclosure of information obtained from applications for free/reduced-price meals is limited to those administering/enforcing child nutrition programs, administrators of other health or education programs (with restrictions), and the General Accounting Office and law enforcement officials. [Sec. 9(b)(2) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Provides that the Secretary make a family nutrition grant to a State if it submits an application containing only the following:

(1) an agreement that the State will use the grant in accordance with Family Nutrition Block Grant program requirements (see item 5);

(2) an agreement that the State will set minimum nutrition requirements for food assistance provided under the grant based on the most recent tested nutrition research available (but the requirements may not prohibit the substitution of foods to accommodate medical or other special dietary needs, and would have to be based, at a minimum, on the weekly average nutrient content of school lunches or other standards set by the State);

(3) an agreement that, with respect to assistance to pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, and infants and children, the State will implement minimum nutrition requirements based on the most recent tested nutritional research available or the model nutrition standards developed by the National Academy of Sciences (see item 8B);

(4) an agreement that the State will take reasonable steps it deems necessary to restrict the use and disclosure of information about those receiving assistance under the grant;

(5) an agreement that the State will not use more than 5% of its grant for administrative costs incurred to provide assistance (costs associated with nutritional risk assessments of pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, and infants and children, as well as those associated with nutrition education and counseling for these individuals, would not be considered administrative costs subject to the 5% limit); and

(6) an agreement that the State will submit an annual report to the Secretary (see item 6).

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

5. USE OF AMOUNTS PROVIDED UNDER THE FAMILY NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT

A. ACTIVITIES SUPPORTED

Present law

The WIC program provides nutritional risk assessment, specific nutritious foods (under Federal guidelines), nutrition education/counseling, breastfeeding support, and a farmers' market program for lower-income pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, as well as infants and children (up to age 5). Recipients' family income must be below 185% of poverty, and they must be judged at nutritional risk. [Sec. 17 of the Child Nutrition Act]

The Special Milk program provides Federal reimbursement for each half-pint of milk served in schools and other child care institutions not participating in a meal service program (and schools with split sessions for kindergartners). Milk is served at a low price or for free and each half-pint is subsidized at a different rate depending on whether it served free or not. Provision of free milk is not required. [Sec. 3 of the Child Nutrition Act]

The Child and Adult Care Food program provides Federal per-meal/supplement reimbursements for all meals and supplements served in public and private nonprofit child care centers, public and private nonprofit adult day care centers, certain for-profit child and adult day care centers, and family day care homes. Reimbursements for meals/supplements served in child/adult care centers differ according to whether they are served free (to children from families with income below 130% of Federal poverty guidelines), at a reduced price (to children with family income between 130% and 185% of the poverty guidelines), or at "full price" (so-called "paid" meals and supplements for those with family income above 185% of poverty or who do not apply for free or reduced price meals/supplements). Reimbursements for meals and supplements served in family day care homes do not vary by the family income of the child, and sponsors of family day care homes receive monthly payments for administrative costs. [Sec. 17 of the National School Lunch Act]

The Summer Food Service program provides Federal per meal/supplement reimbursements for all summer meals and supplements served through public and private nonprofit sponsors (including schools and local governments) to children in areas where 50% or more have family income below 185% of the Federal poverty guidelines (are eligible for free or reduced-price school meals). Summer food service subsidies also are provided to public and private nonprofit summer camps and higher education institutions in the National Youth Sports program. [Sec. 13 of the National School Lunch Act]

The Homeless Children Nutrition program grants funds to public and private nonprofit sponsors providing food service (meals and supplements), similar to that provided under the Child and Adult Care Food program, to homeless children under age 6 in shelters. [Sec. 17B of the National School Lunch Act] [General Note: In addition to cash reimbursements, Federal commodity assistance is available for the Child and Adult Care Food and Summer Food Service programs.]

House bill

Provides that the Secretary of Agriculture make family nutrition grants to States if they agree to use their grant to:

(1) provide nutritional risk assessment, food assistance based on the assessment, and nutrition education and counseling to economically disadvantaged pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, and infants and young children, who are determined to be at nutritional risk (see item 10 for definitions);

(2) provide milk in nonprofit nursery schools, child care centers, settlement houses, summer camps, and similar child care settings to children from economically disadvantaged families (see item 10 for definitions) [Note: Under the School-Based Nutrition Block Grant Program, support could be provided for milk served in schools.];

(3) provide food service in institutions and family day care homes providing child care to children from economically disadvantaged families (see item 10 for definitions) [Note: Under the School-Based Nutrition Block Grant Program, support could be provided for child care food service provided through schools. Further Note: Adult-care food service would not be funded under the Family Nutrition Block Grant program.];

(4) provide summer food service to economically disadvantaged children through programs carried out by nonprofit food authorities, local governments, higher education institutions in the National Youth Sports program, and nonprofit summer camps (see item 10 for definitions) [Note: Under the School-Based Nutrition Block Grant Program, support could be provided for summer food service by schools.]; and

(5) provide nutritious meals to pre-school-age homeless children in shelters and other facilities serving the homeless.

[General Note: Federal commodity assistance would not be available for child care food and summer food service activities under the family nutrition grant.]

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

B. ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR ASSISTANCE FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN

Present law

Under the WIC program, States must carry out cost containment measures in procuring infant formula (and, where practicable, other foods). Cost containment must be by competitive bidding (selection of a single source offering the lowest price) or another method that yields equal or greater savings. Cost savings (e.g., through manufacturer rebates) may be used by the State for WIC program purposes. The Secretary of Agriculture must provide technical assistance for cost-containment bids and offer to solicit multi-State bids for infant formula and infant cereal. In addition, certain rules against bid-rigging and anti-competitive practices are established. [Sec. 17(b) (17)-(20) and (h) (8) and (9) of the Child Nutrition Act, and Sec. 25 of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Requires that each State ensure that not less than 80% of its family nutrition grant is used to provide nutrition risk assessment, food assistance based on the assessment, and nutrition education and counseling to economically disadvantaged pregnant women, postpartum women, breastfeeding women, infants, and young children.

With respect to assistance provided to women, infants, and young children, requires States to establish and carry out a cost containment system for procuring infant formula. Requires States to use cost containment savings for any of the activities supported under their family nutrition grant. Requires States to submit annual reports to the Secretary (1) describing their infant formula cost containment system and (2) estimating the cost savings from the system for the report year compared to savings from the preceding year, where appropriate.

Requires States to ensure that equitable assistance for economically disadvantaged pregnant women, postpartum women, breastfeeding women, infants, and young children is provided to members of the Armed Forces and their dependents, regardless of their State of residence (see item 10 for definitions).

Senate amendment

Includes findings on the success of the WIC program in improving the health status of women, infants, and children and saving Medicaid expenditures, as well as the importance of manufacturer rebates in helping to fund the WIC program. Provides that it is the sense of the Senate that any legislation not eliminate or in any way weaken present competitive bidding requirements for the purchase of infant formula in programs supported with Federal funds.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

C. CHILD CARE FOOD ASSISTANCE ON MILITARY INSTALLATIONS

Present law

Assisted child care facilities must be licensed under Federal, State, or local rules. [Sec. 17(a)(1) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Requires States to provide equitable assistance under its program for child care facilities to Defense Department child care programs on military installations—to the extent consistent with the number of children in the programs and after consultation with the programs' representatives.

In carrying out programs for child care facilities, bars States from requiring that those on military installations be licensed under State law if they are licensed by the Defense Department.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant (see Item #1).

D. AUTHORITY TO USE FAMILY NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT AMOUNTS FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Allows States to use not more than 20% of amounts received from a family nutrition block grant for any fiscal year to carry out State programs under other block grants authorized by:

(1) part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (relating to welfare for families with children);

(2) part B of title IV of the Social Security Act (relating to provision of child welfare services);

(3) title XX of the Social Security Act (relating to provision of social services);

(4) the National School Lunch Act (relating to school-based nutrition block grants); and

(5) the Child Care and Development Block Grant.

Provides that States may not transfer funds to other block grants unless the appropriate State agency makes a determination that sufficient amounts will remain available for the fiscal year to carry out activities under the Family Nutrition Block Grant program.

Provides that family nutrition grant amounts States transfer to other block grants (noted above) will not be subject to the requirements of the Family Nutrition Block Grant program under the revised Child Nutrition Act, but will be subject to the requirements that apply to Federal funds provided directly to the block grant to which they are transferred.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant (see Item #1).

6. REPORTS

Present law

No comparable provision.

House bill

Requires that States, as a condition of receiving a family nutrition grant, agree to submit an annual report to the Secretary of Agriculture describing:

(1) the number of individuals receiving assistance under the grant for the reporting (fiscal) year;

(2) the different types of assistance provided;

(3) the extent to which the assistance provided was effective in achieving the goals of the Family Nutrition Block Grant program (see item 2B);

(4) the standards and methods the State is using to ensure the nutritional quality of assistance under the grant;

(5) the number of low-birthweight births in the State in the reporting (fiscal) year compared to the number of low-birthweight births in the previous year; and

(6) any other information that can be reasonably required by the Secretary.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to the Child Nutrition Act (see Item 1).

7. PENALTIES

A. PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

Present law

The Child Nutrition and National School Lunch Acts provide penalties for fraud in relation to assistance provided under either Act, grant the Secretary of Agriculture authority to establish and adjust claims against States, and establish a compliance and accountability program to monitor the use of Federal funds. [Sec. 12(g) and Sec. 22 of the National School Lunch Act, and Sec. 16 of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

Requires the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce family nutrition grant amounts otherwise payable to a State by any amount paid under the grant that an audit made under the "Single Audit Act" (chapter 75 of title 31 of the United States Code) finds has been used in violation of the revised Child Nutrition Act. However, the Secretary is barred from reducing any quarterly payment to the State by more than 25%.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item 1).

B. PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO SUBMIT A REQUIRED REPORT

Present law

No specific provision.

House bill

Requires the Secretary to reduce by 3% the family nutrition grant amount otherwise payable to a State for any fiscal year if the Secretary determines that the State has not submitted the required annual report (see item 6) for the immediately preceding fiscal year within 6 months after the end of that fiscal year.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item 1).

8. MODEL NUTRITION STANDARDS FOR FOOD ASSISTANCE FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN

A. REQUIREMENT

Present law

No comparable provisions. [Note: The Secretary establishes nutrition standards for and foods to be made available under the WIC program; Sec. 17(b)(14) and 17(f)(12) of the Child Nutrition Act.]

House bill

Not later than April 1, 1996, requires the National Academy of Sciences to develop model nutrition standards for food assistance provided to economically disadvantaged pregnant women, postpartum women, breastfeeding women, infants, and young children under the Family Nutrition Block Grant program (see item 10 for definitions). The standards are to be developed by the Food and Nutrition Board of the Academy's Institute of Medicine, in cooperation with pediatricians, obstetricians, nutritionists, and directors of programs providing food assistance, nutrition education and counseling to these women, infants, and children.

The model standards must require that food assistance provided to these women, infants, and children contain nutrients that are lacking in their diets, as determined by nutritional research.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item 1).

B. REPORT TO CONGRESS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Not later than one year after the model nutrition standards (noted above) are developed, requires the National Academy of Sciences to report to Congress regarding efforts of States to implement them.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

A. AUTHORIZATION

Present law

Federal appropriations for activities under current law replaced by the House bill's Family Nutrition Block Grant program are authorized at such sums as are necessary, except for the Homeless Children Nutrition program (provided specific amounts). [Sec. 13(r), 17(b), and 17B of the National School Lunch Act; Sec. 3(a) and 4(a) of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

Authorizes appropriations for the Family Nutrition Block Grant program under the revised Child Nutrition Act at: $4.606 billion for fiscal year 1996, $4.777 billion for fiscal year 1997, $ $4.936 billion for fiscal year 1998, $5.120 billion for fiscal year 1999, and $5.308 billion for fiscal year 2000.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item 1).

B. AVAILABILITY

Present law

With the exception of funding for the WIC program, appropriations for the activities under current law to be replaced by the Family Nutrition Block Grant program generally cannot be carried over to the next fiscal year.

House bill

Authorizes amounts for the Family Nutrition Block Grant program to remain available until the end of the fiscal year subsequent to the year they were appropriated for.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item 1).

10. DEFINITIONS

A. BREASTFEEDING WOMEN, INFANTS, POSTPARTUM WOMEN, PREGNANT WOMEN, AND YOUNG CHILDREN

Present law

For purposes of the WIC program: (1) breastfeeding women are defined as women up to 1 year postpartum who are breastfeeding their infants; (2) infants are defined as persons under 1 year of age; (3) postpartum women are defined as women up to 6 months after termination of pregnancy; (4) pregnant women are defined as those who have 1 or more fetuses in utero; and (5) young children are persons who have had their first birthday but not attained their fifth birthday. [Sec. 17(b) of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

For purposes of State family nutrition grant programs, adopts present-law definitions of breastfeeding women, infants, postpartum women, pregnant women, and young children.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item 1).

B. ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED

Present law

No directly comparable provisions. [Note: Under present law, means tests for assistance apply as follows: (1) for the WIC program, recipients must have family income below 185% of the Federal poverty guidelines (but States may not set standards below poverty); and (2) for those in child and adult care centers under the Child and Adult Care Food program, persons with family income below 130% of poverty are eligible for free meals/supplements, those with family income between 130% and 185% of poverty are eligible for reduced-price meals and supplements, and those with family income above 185% of poverty (or who do not apply for free or reduced-price treatment) are eligible for "paid" (but still subsidized) meals and supplements. No individual income test is applied in the family day care home component of the Child and Adult Care Food program, the Summer Food Service program, the Special Milk program, and the Homeless Children Nutrition program.

House bill

The term "economically disadvantaged" is defined to apply to individuals or families with annual income below 185% of the Federal poverty guidelines. [Note: No assistance under a family nutrition grant (other than aid to homeless children) could be given to those with family income above 185% of poverty.]

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item 1).

C. SCHOOL AND SECRETARY

Present law

"Schools" are defined as public or private nonprofit elementary, intermediate, or secondary schools. The "Secretary" is defined as the Secretary of Agriculture.

House bill

"Schools" and the "Secretary" would, under the Family Nutrition Block Grant program, have the same meaning as in present law.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

D. STATE

Present law

In general, "State" is defined as the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Northern Marianas, American Samoa, Guam, and the Virgin Islands. In the WIC program, it includes an Indian tribe, band, or group recognized by the Interior Department, an intertribal council or group recognized by the Interior Department, or the Indian Health Service.

House bill

"State" would, under the Family Nutrition Block Grant program have the same meaning as in present law. In addition, Indian tribal organizations (as defined under section 4(l) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act) would be included as States and could apply for grants.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to Child Nutrition Act (see Item #1).

11. NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT

Present law

Authorizes the School Lunch, Summer Food Service, Child and Adult Care Food, and Homeless Children Nutrition programs. Also authorizes commodity assistance for child nutrition programs and school lunch assistance for Defense Department overseas dependents' schools.

Under the School Lunch program, schools choosing to participate receive per-meal Federal subsidies for all lunches they serve that meet Federal nutrition standards. Subsidies are indexed annually and differ depending on whether the meal is served free (to children from families with income below 130% of Federal poverty guidelines), at a reduced price (to children with family income between 130% and 185% of poverty), or at "full price" (so-called "paid" lunches for those with family income above 185% of poverty or who do not apply for free or reduced-price meals). Schools with high proportions of free or reduced-price participants receive an additional per-meal subsidy. [Sec. 4 & 11 of the National School Lunch Act]

The Summer Food Service program provides Federal per-meal/supplement reimbursements for all summer meals and supplements served through public and private nonprofit sponsors (including schools and local governments) to children in areas where 50% or more have family income below 185% of the Federal poverty guidelines (are eligible for free or reduced-price school meals). Summer food service subsidies also are provided to public and private nonprofit summer camps and higher education institutions in the National Youth Sports program. [Sec. 13 of the National School Lunch Act]

The Child and Adult Care Food program provides Federal per-meal reimbursements for all meals and supplements served in public and private nonprofit child care centers, public and private nonprofit adult day care centers, certain for-profit child and adult day care centers, and family day care homes. Reimbursements for meals/supplements in centers vary by the recipient's income, but not in family day care homes. Certain schools with after-school care programs also may receive assistance. [Sec. 17 & 17A of the National School Lunch Act] The Homeless Children Nutrition program grants funds to public and private nonprofit sponsors providing food service (meals and supplements), similar to that provided under the Child and Adult Care Food program, to homeless children under age 6 in shelters.

The Agriculture Department is required to provide commodity support for meals served by institutions in the School Lunch, Child and Adult Care Food, and Summer Food Service programs. Schools and other institutions are "entitled" to a specific dollar value of commodities based on the number of meals served. Schools and other institutions also receive "bonus" commodities donated from Federal stocks at the Agriculture Department's discretion. [Sec. 6 & 14 of the National School Lunch Act]

The Secretary of Agriculture is required to make funds available for school lunch programs in Defense Department overseas dependent's schools to the same degree as for other schools (authority for school breakfast programs in these schools is contained in Sec. 20 of the Child Nutrition Act). [Sec. 17A of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Retains the designation of the Act as the National School Lunch Act and replaces the Act's current provisions with authority for a School-Based Nutrition Block Grant Program.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment to:

1A. CREATE AN OPTIONAL STATE BLOCK GRANT ENTITLED, "SCHOOL NUTRITION OPTIONAL BLOCK GRANT."

OPTIONAL BLOCK GRANT—Under the terms of the optional block grant, not more than 22 States in fiscal year 1996 and, in succeeding years, all States have the option of receiving funds to carry out programs offering school breakfasts and lunches for all school children under a block grant.

DECISION TO PARTICIPATE—States opting to participate in the block grant may reverse a decision to participate in the block grant once prior to the termination date and only after a two-year period of participation. If a State opts out, such State may resume participation under the school lunch and school breakfast programs and the commodity distribution program.

STATE PLAN—States are required to submit a State plan to the Secretary in order to participate in the block grant.

USE OF FUNDS—Allows States to use funds only for school lunches, breakfasts, and supplements and for the purchase of equipment or improvement of facilities needed to improve school food services.

NONPROFIT OPERATION—School lunch and breakfast programs are to be operated on a nonprofit basis.

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES—None of the funds under the block grant are to be used for State administrative expenses (States will continue to receive such funds under current SAE provisions).

NUTRITIONAL REQUIREMENTS—States are to provide minimum nutritional requirements for meals based on the most recent tested nutritional research available. Such requirements shall, to the extent practicable, be consistent with the goals of the most recent Dietary Guidelines for Americans. Meals shall provide, on the average over a week, at least ⅓ of the recommended dietary allowance for lunches and ¼ of the recommended dietary allowance for breakfasts. The Secretary may not impose any additional nutritional requirements beyond those specified in this section.

STATE REVIEW—States will review the meal operations in each school food authority participating in the block grant no later than two years after implementation of the block grant and at the end of each 5-year period thereafter.

INCOME ELIGIBILITY—The State plan will describe how the block grant will serve specific groups of children in the State. The plan will further describe the income eligibility limitations established for free meals and, if available, for low-cost meals.

FREE MEALS—State's plan are required to offer access to free meals to students who are members of families with incomes at or below 130 percent of poverty and who attend a school participating in the block grant.

CONTINUED PARTICIPATION—Each school participating in the current school lunch and breakfast program in a State opting for a block grant is to be given opportunity to participate in State program under the block grant.

CASH/CLOC—States are required to permit a school district, nonprofit private school or DOD domestic dependents' school to receive commodity assistance in the same form they received such assistance as of January 1, 1987.

PRIVACY—States shall provide for safeguarding and restricting the use and disclosure of information about children receiving assistance under this Act. Physical segregation and overt identification of children participating in the block grant is prohibited.

REQUIRED REPORT—In order to participate, States must agree to submit a report to the Secretary each fiscal year describing (a) the number of children receiving assistance; (b) the different types of assistance provided; (c) the extent to which assistance was effective in achieving program goals; (d) the standards and methods used to ensure the nutritional quality of meals and meal supplements and (e) other information the Secretary can reasonably require. Failure to submit the required report will cause a 3 percent reduction in amounts otherwise payable to a State.

COMPLIANCE—The Secretary is required to review and monitor State compliance and withhold funds to the State with respect to the program or activity for which noncompliance is found, until the Secretary determines the problem has been corrected. The Secretary may seek financial restitution for misused funds.

PAYMENTS TO STATES—Payments to States under the block grant shall be on a quarterly basis and may be expended by the State for the current fiscal year or the succeeding fiscal year.

AUDITS—A yearly audit is required.

ALLOTMENT—In the first year of participation, the Secretary is required to allot to each participating State an amount that is equal to the amount the Secretary projects will be made available to the State to carry out the school lunch and breakfast programs (including commodities) for the current fiscal year. In succeeding years, the amount will equal the amount provided in the preceding fiscal year, adjusted to reflect changes in the consumer price index, services for food away from home, and changes in each State's student enrollment.

COMMODITIES—Not less than 8 percent and not more than 10 percent of the amount of a State's allotment will be in the form of commodities.

ALTERNATIVE ASSISTANCE—Requires the Secretary to arrange for the provision of assistance and reduce State allotments accordingly, in cases where a State is prohibited by law from providing assistance to a nonprofit private school or a DOD domestic dependents' school or if a State has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide such assistance to a nonprofit private school, a DOD domestic dependents' school or a public school.

TRANSITION—A State taking the block grant option may use funds and commodities from the preceding fiscal year under the school lunch and breakfast program to transition into the block grant and may use block grant funds to transition out of the block grant if the State decides to end participation before the end of the fiscal year.

EVALUATION—No later than three years after the establishment of the block grant the Secretary is to conduct an evaluation and submit a report to Congress, including the comments of the Comptroller General. The report is to include information on the effects of the block grant on the nutritional quality of meals; the degree to which children, particularly low income children participated in the block grant, the income distribution of children served and the amount of assistance such children received; the types of meals offered under the block grant; how the implementation of the block grant differs from the implementation of the school lunch and breakfast programs; the effect of the block grant on state and school administrative costs, the effect of the block grant on paperwork.

AUTHORIZATION PERIOD—the block grant option is authorized through September 30, 2002.

B. STREAMLINE PROVISIONS OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT OF 1966

1. Revise Sec. 6(a)(3), striking provision that allows schools to refuse up to 20% of commodities and the related language and conforming reference to fruit and vegetable refusals not counted towards the 20% maximum.

2. Revise Sec. 6(e)(1(E) to eliminate provisions requiring that not less than 75% of assistance be provided in the form of commodities donated to school lunch programs.

3. Revise Sec. 6(e)(2), substituting the first sentence with "Each State agency shall offer and equitably distribute commodities among schools participating in the school lunch program."

4. Strike Sec. 6(f) allowing commodities to be offered to school breakfasts on a per meal basis.

15. Revise Sec. 11(b), striking references to "maximum per lunch amounts."

30. Revise Sec. 13(a)(1) to eliminate reference to expansion.

34. Revise Sec. 13(b)(2) to provide that service institutions that operate as camps or serve meals primarily to migrant children may serve three meals or two meals and one supplement.

35. In Sec. 13, references to the National Youth Sports Program are amended by (1) striking non summer months payments; (2) striking severe needs reimbursements; and (3) requiring that participants be from low-income areas.

36. Revise Sec. 13(f) by permitting children attending a site on school premises operated directly by the authority to refuse not more than one item of a meal without affecting the amount of payments made to the school.

39. Revise Sec. 13(g)(1)(B) by striking second sentence to eliminate technical assistance for those with difficulty maintaining compliance.

56. Revise Sec. 17 by, in the title of the section, striking "and Adult."

57. Revise Sec. 17(a) to eliminate reference to authorization to "expand" programs.

70. Repeal Section 26.

72. Strike Sec. 18(d)(3)(A),(B),(C) to eliminate the universal free pilot.

73. Revise Sec. 18(e) to make the demonstration project for outside school hours discretionary.

12. AUTHORIZATION FOR SCHOOL-BASED NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT

A. ENTITLEMENT

Present law

States are entitled to "performance-based" funding according to the number and type of meals and supplements served under school-based programs authorized by the National School Lunch and Child Nutrition Acts.

House bill

"Entitles" each State that submits an annual application (see item 14) to receive an annual school-based nutrition grant for the purpose of achieving the goals of the School-Based Nutrition Block Grant Program (see item 12D for the program's goals and item 13 for State entitlement allotments).

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

B. REQUIREMENT TO PROVIDE COMMODITIES

Present law

The Secretary of Agriculture is required to ensure that no less than 12% of the total amount of "entitlement" commodity and cash assistance for the School Lunch program is in the form of commodity support (including cash in lieu of commodities in the limited instances where available and administrative costs for procuring commodities). [Sec. 6(g) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Requires that 9% of the amount of assistance available under the school-based block grant be in the form of commodities.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision. [Note: See item 26]

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

C. THE SCHOOL-BASED NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT

Present law

Federal funds for activities under existing law replaced by the House bill's school-based grant are authorized at such sums as are necessary and provided based on the number of meals, supplements, and half-pints of milk served.

The Secretary is required to make school lunch and school breakfast funding and commodities available to Defense Department overseas dependents' schools to the same degree as other schools. [Sec. 20 of the National School Lunch Act and Sec. 20 of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

Provides that the annual total school-based block grant provided States as their "entitlement" will be: $6.681 billion for fiscal year 1996, $6.956 billion (fiscal year 1997), $7.237 billion (fiscal year 1998), $7.538 billion (fiscal year 1999), and $7.849 billion (fiscal year 2000).

For each fiscal year, requires the Secretary to reserve from the total entitlement an amount determined necessary, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, to establish and carry out nutritious food service programs at Defense Department overseas dependents' schools.

Permits States to obligate payments under a school-based nutrition grant in the succeeding fiscal year.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

D. GOALS

Present law

The National School Lunch Act declares it the policy of Congress, as a measure of national security, to safeguard the health and well-being of the Nation's children and to encourage the domestic consumption of agricultural commodities by assisting States through grants and other means in providing support for the establishment, maintenance, operation, and expansion of nonprofit school lunch programs. [Sec. 2 of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Establishes the goals of the School-Based Block Grant Program:

(1) to safeguard the health and well-being of children through the provision of nutritious, well-balanced meals and food supplements;

(2) to provide economically disadvantaged children (see item 21B for definition) access to nutritious free or low-cost meals, food supplements, and low-cost milk;

(3) to ensure that children served under the School-Based Block Grant program are receiving the nutrition they require to take advantage of educational opportunities;

(4) to emphasize foods that are naturally good sources of vitamins and minerals over enriched foods and those high in fat or sodium content;

(5) to provide a comprehensive school nutrition program for children; and

(6) to minimize paperwork burdens and administrative expenses for participating schools.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

E. TIMING OF PAYMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Directs that the Secretary of Agriculture make school-based nutrition grant payments to the States on a quarterly basis.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

13. ALLOTMENT OF SCHOOL-BASED NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT

Present law

Current activities that may be funded under the House bill's School-Based Nutrition Block Grant program include those now supported by the School Lunch and Breakfast programs, and school-sponsored programs under the Child and Adult Care Food program, the Summer Food Service program, and the Special Milk program.

In all cases, "performance funding" is provided for each meal, supplement, or half-pint of milk served by participating schools, at legislatively established, inflation indexed rates.

House bill

As set forth below, provides for the Secretary of Agriculture to make State allotments of the School-Based Nutrition Block Grant entitlement.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

A. FIRST YEAR STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present law

No provisions.

House bill

For the first fiscal year in which grants are made, provides that the Secretary make allotments to States based on the proportion of funds each State received under prior law for the preceding fiscal year.

Base-year State Shares: Each State's allotment would be its prior-year share of funds received under the School Lunch and Breakfast programs, plus 12.5% of the amounts received under the Child and Adult Care Food, Summer Food Service, and Special Milk programs.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

B. SECOND YEAR STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

For the second fiscal year in which grants are made, provides that (1) 95% of the total entitlement amount be allotted according to each State's share of the amount allotted in the first year and (2) 5% of the entitlement amount allotted be based on each State's share of the number of meals served under the grant during the 1-year period ending the preceding June 30.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

C. THIRD AND FOURTH YEAR STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

For the third and fourth fiscal years in which grants are made, provides that (1) 90% of the total entitlement amount be allotted according to each State's share of the amount allotted in the preceding year and (2) 10% of the entitlement amount allotted be based on each State's share of the number of meals served under the grant during the 1-year period ending the preceding June 30.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

D. FIFTH YEAR STATE ALLOTMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

For the fifth fiscal year in which grants are made, provides that (1) 85% of the total entitlement amount be allotted according to each State's share of the amount allotted in the fourth year and (2) 15% of the entitlement amount allotted be based on each State's share of the number of meals served under the grant during the 1-year period ending the preceding June 30.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant an making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

14. APPLICATION FOR SCHOOL-BASED NUTRITION GRANTS

Present law

Nutrition requirements for school-provided meals are established by the Secretary of Agriculture on the basis of tested nutritional research, are not to be construed to prohibit substitution of foods to accommodate medical or other special dietary needs, must, at a minimum, be based on the weekly average nutrient content of school lunches, and may, with certain limits on how schools may be required to implement them, be based on the Federal "Dietary Guidelines for Americans." [Sec. 9(a) and Sec. 12(k) of the National School Lunch Act, and Sec. 4(e) of the Child Nutrition Act]

The use/disclosure of information obtained from applications for free/reduced-price meals is limited to those administering/enforcing child nutrition programs, administrators of other health or education programs (with restrictions), and the General Accounting Office and law enforcement officials. [Sec. 9(b) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Provides that the Secretary make a school-based nutrition grant to a State if it submits an application containing only the following:

(1) an agreement that the State will use the grant in accordance with the School-Based Block Grant program requirements (see item 15);

(2) an agreement that the State will set minimum nutrition requirements for meals provided under the grant based on the most recent tested nutrition research available (but the requirements could not be construed to prohibit the substitution of foods to accommodate medical or other special dietary needs and would have to be based, at a minimum, on the weekly average nutrient content of school lunches or other standards set by the State);

(3) an agreement that, with respect to provision of meals to students, the State will implement minimum nutrition requirements based on the most recent tested nutrition research available or the model nutrition standards developed by the National Academy of Sciences (see item 20);

(4) an agreement that the State will take reasonable steps it deems necessary to restrict the use and disclosure of information about those receiving assistance under the grant;

(5) an agreement that the State will not use more than 2% of its grant for administrative costs incurred to provide assistance; and

(6) an agreement that the State will submit an annual report to the Secretary (see item 16).

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

15. USE OF AMOUNTS PROVIDED UNDER THE SCHOOL-BASED NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT

A. ACTIVITIES SUPPORTED

Present law

The School Lunch and Breakfast programs provide Federal support to schools for nonprofit meal services to schoolchildren. In addition, to a more limited degree, schools offer (and receive Federal subsidies for) after-school food assistance, milk service, and summer food service programs.

House bill

Provides that the Secretary of Agriculture make school-based nutrition grants to States if they agree to use their grant to provide assistance to schools for nutritious food service programs that provide affordable meals and supplements to students, including nonprofit:

(1) school breakfast programs;
(2) school lunch programs;
(3) before and after school supplement programs;
(4) low-cost milk services; and
(5) summer meal programs.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

B. ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS

Present law

Under the School Lunch and Breakfast programs, and after-school assistance, milk service, and summer food service programs, schools are provided with specific Federal reimbursements for free and reduced-price meals, supplements, and milk for lower-income children (with family income below 185% of poverty) that are higher than those granted for "paid" meals, supplements, and milk provided those with higher income.

House bill

Requires that each State ensure that not less than 80% of its school-based grant is used to provide free or low-cost meals to economically disadvantaged children (see item 21 for definitions).

Requires that each State ensure that nutritious food service programs are established and carried out in private nonprofit and Defense Department domestic dependents' schools on an equitable basis with programs in public schools in the State—to the extent consistent with the number of children in these schools and after consultation with representatives of the schools (see item 18).

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

C. AUTHORITY TO USE SCHOOL-BASED NUTRITION BLOCK GRANT AMOUNTS FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Present law

No provision.

(2) Sufficient funding

No provision.

(3) Amounts used for other purposes

No provision.

House bill

Allows States to use not more than 20% of amounts received from a school-based nutrition grant for any fiscal year to carry out State programs under other block grants authorized by:

(1) part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (relating to welfare for families with children);

(2) part B of title IV of the Social Security Act (relating to provision of child welfare services);

(3) title XX of the Social Security Act (relating to provision of social services);

(4) the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (relating to family nutrition block grants); and

(5) the Child Care and Development Block Grant. Provides that States may not transfer funds to other block grants unless the appropriate State agency makes a determination that sufficient funds will remain available for the fiscal year to carry out activities under the School-Based Block Nutrition Block Grant Program.

Provides that school-based nutrition block grant amounts States transfer to other block grants (noted above) will not be subject to the requirements of the School-Based Nutrition Block Grant program under the revised National School Lunch Act, but will be subject to the requirements that apply to Federal funds provided directly to the block grant to which they are transferred.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

D. LIMITATION ON PROVISION OF COMMODITIES

Present law

Certain schools receive cash or commodity letters of credit in lieu of entitlement commodities (so-called "Cash/CLOC" schools). [Sec. 18(b) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Provides that States may not require current Cash/CLOC schools to accept commodities in lieu of cash or commodity letters of credit.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

E. SEGREGATION/IDENTIFICATION OF CHILDREN ELIGIBLE FOR FREE OR LOW-COST MEALS OR SUPPLEMENTS

Present law

Schools may not physically segregate, overtly identify, or otherwise discriminate against any child eligible for free or reduced-price lunches. [Sec. 9(b)(4) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

Requires States to ensure that schools receiving school-based nutrition grant assistance do not physically segregate, overtly identify, or otherwise discriminate against children eligible for free or low-cost meals or supplements.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

16. REPORTS

Present law

No comparable provision.

House bill

Requires that States, as a condition of receiving a school-based nutrition grant, agree to submit an annual report to the Secretary of Agriculture describing:

(1) the number of individuals receiving assistance under the grant for the reporting (fiscal) year;

(2) the different types of assistance provided;

(3) the total number of meals served to students under the grant, including the percentage served to economically disadvantaged students;

(4) the extent to which the assistance provided was effective in achieving the goals of the School-Based Nutrition Block Grant program (see item 12D);

(5) the standards and methods the State is using to ensure the nutritional quality of assistance under the grant; and

(6) any other information that can be reasonably required by the Secretary.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

17. PENALTIES

A. PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

Present law

[Note: See item 7.]

House bill

Requires the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce the school-based nutrition grant amount otherwise payable to a State by any amount paid under the grant that an audit made under the "Single Audit Act" (chapter 75 of title 31 of the United States Code) finds has been used in violation of the revised National School Lunch Act. However, the Secretary is barred from reducing any quarterly payment to the State by more than 25%.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

B. PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO SUBMIT A REQUIRED REPORT

Present law

No specific provision.

House bill

Requires the Secretary to reduce by 3% the school-based nutrition grant amount otherwise payable to a State for any fiscal year if the Secretary determines that the State has not submitted the required annual report (see item 16) for the immediately preceding fiscal year within 6 months after the end of the fiscal year.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

18. FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR CHILDREN IN PRIVATE NONPROFIT SCHOOLS AND DEFENSE DEPARTMENT DOMESTIC DEPENDENTS' SCHOOLS

Present law

Where States are by law precluded from providing child nutrition assistance to certain types of schools (e.g. private nonprofit schools), the Secretary is authorized to provide assistance directly.

House bill

If a State is precluded by law from providing assistance under the school-based nutrition grant to nonprofit private schools or Defense Department domestic dependents' schools, or the Secretary has determined that the State has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide assistance to the schools, requires the Secretary to arrange for provision of school-based nutrition assistance to the schools, after consultation with appropriate school representatives. In the case that the Secretary provides assistance to private nonprofit schools or Defense Department domestic dependents' schools, the State's school-based nutrition grant would be reduced to reflect the assistance provided.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

19. FOOD SERVICE PROGRAMS FOR DEFENSE DEPARTMENT OVERSEAS DEPENDENTS' SCHOOLS

A. ASSISTANCE

Present law

[Note: See item 12C(2)]

House bill

Requires the Secretary to make available to the Secretary of Defense funds and commodities (as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, and reserve from the total school-based grant) for establishing and carrying out nutritious food service programs providing affordable meals and supplements to students in Defense Department overseas dependents' schools.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item # 11).

B. REQUIREMENTS

Present law

Federally subsidized school meal programs in Defense Department overseas dependents' schools must meet the same requirements as programs in domestic schools.

House bill

In carrying out food service programs in Defense Department overseas dependents' schools, requires the Secretary of Defense to (1) ensure that not less than 80% of the assistance is used to provide free or low-cost meals and supplements to economically disadvantaged children (see item 21B for definition) and (2) the schools will implement minimum nutrition requirements in the same way domestic schools receiving assistance under the school-based nutrition grant are required to (including optional use of model nutrition standards).

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

20. MODEL NUTRITION STANDARDS FOR STUDENT MEALS

A. REQUIREMENT

Present law

No comparable provisions. [Note: The Secretary establishes nutrition standards for school meals.]

House bill

Not later than April 1, 1996, requires the National Academy of Sciences to develop model nutrition standards for meals provided to students under the School-Based Block Grant Program. The standards are to be developed by the Food and Nutrition Board of the Academy's Institute of Medicine, in cooperation with nutritionists and directors of school meal programs.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

B. REPORT TO CONGRESS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Not later than one year after the model nutrition standards (noted above) are developed, requires the National Academy of Sciences to report to Congress regarding the efforts of States to implement them.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

21. DEFINITIONS

A. SCHOOLS AND SECRETARY

Present law

In general, "schools" are defined as public or private nonprofit elementary, intermediate, or secondary schools. The "Secretary" is defined as the Secretary of Agriculture.

House bill

"Schools" and "Secretary" would be defined as having the same meaning as in existing law. In addition, parallel definitions are added for Defense Department domestic and overseas dependents' schools.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

B. ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED

Present law

No directly comparable provision. [Note: Subsidies are provided for free and reduced-price meals served to children with family income under 185% of the Federal poverty guidelines. However, Federal school food service subsidies are not limited to these lower-income children.]

House bill

The term "economically disadvantaged" is defined to apply to individuals or families with annual income below 185% of the Federal poverty guidelines. [Note: Assistance under the School-Based Nutrition grant could be given to children with family income above 185% of poverty.]

Senate Amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item 11).

C. STATE

Present law

In general, for school food programs, "State" is defined as the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Northern Marianas, American Samoa, and the Virgin Islands.

House bill

"State," under the School-Based Nutrition grant, would have the same meaning as in present law, except that Indian tribal organizations (as defined under section 4(l) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act) would be included as States and could apply for grants.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

22. REPEALERS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Makes conforming technical amendments repealing the Commodity Distribution Reform Act and WIC Amendments of 1987 and the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

23. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Makes amendments replacing Child Nutrition and National School Lunch Act provisions with Family Nutrition and School-Based Nutrition Block Grants effective October 1, 1995.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

24. APPLICATION OF AMENDMENTS AND REPEALERS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Provides that amendments and repealers associated with replacing Child Nutrition and National School Lunch Act provisions with Family Nutrition and School-Based Nutrition Block Grants not apply with respect to (1) financial assistance provided under prior law and (2) administrative actions or proceedings commenced or authorized to be commenced before the effective date.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes with an amendment creating an optional block grant and making changes to National School Lunch Act (see Item #11).

25. TERMINATION OF ADDITIONAL PAYMENTS FOR LUNCHES SERVED IN HIGH FREE AND REDUCED PRICE PARTICIPATION SCHOOLS

Present law

Lunches served by school food authorities where 60 percent or more of the lunches are served free or at a reduced price (to children with family income below 185 percent of the Federal poverty income guidelines) are reimbursed at a rate 2 cents a meal higher than regular subsidy rates. [Sec. 4(b) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Effective July 1, 1996 (the 1996-1997 school year), the extra 2 cent per lunch reimbursement to schools with high rates of free and reduced-price participation.

Conference agreement

House recedes with an amendment to drop by 1 cent the extra 2 cent per lunch reimbursement to schools with high rates of free and reduced price participation effective July 1, 1998, the extra 1 cent reimbursement is eliminated.

26. VALUE OF FOOD ASSISTANCE

Present law

Schools and certain other child nutrition sponsors are "entitled" to commodities valued at a legislatively set, inflation-indexed amount per meal served. The per-meal reimbursement rate is indexed annually to reflect the annual percentage change in a 3-month average value of the Price Index for Food Used in Schools and Institutions, and rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent. [Sec. 6(e) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

No directly comparable provision. [Note: See item 12B.]

Senate Amendment

Freezes (for one year) the guaranteed per-meal reimbursement rate for entitlement commodity assistance and revises (by changing rounding rules) the method of calculating this reimbursement rate.

On January 1, 1996, the entitlement commodity reimbursement rate set under current law for the 1995-1996 school year (as rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent) would be rounded down to the nearest lower cent. For the 1996-1997 school year, the rate would be frozen at the rate for the 1995-1996 school year (as rounded down to the nearest lower cent). For the 1997–1998 school year, the rate would be the unrounded rate for the 1995–1996 school year, adjusted for inflation over the most recent 12-month period and rounded down to the nearest lower cent. For following school years, the rate would be the unrounded rate for the preceding year, adjusted for inflation over the most recent 12-month period and rounded down to the nearest lower cent. (p. 348)

[Note: Current-law rules as to the inflation-adjustment factor to be used (i.e., the Price Index for Food Used in Schools and Institutions) are not changed.]

Conference agreement

House recedes with an amendment providing that for the 1996–1997 and 1997–1998 school years the entitlement commodity reimbursement rate is frozen at the rate for the 95-96 school year (as rounded down to the nearest lower cent).

27. LUNCHES, BREAKFASTS, AND SUPPLEMENTS

Present law

"Paid" lunches, breakfasts, and supplements are served to those with family income above 185 percent of the Federal poverty guidelines. Guaranteed Federal reimbursement rates for each paid lunch, breakfast, and supplement are indexed annually to reflect changes in the food away from home series of the Consumer Price Index. When indexed, all reimbursement rates (i.e., for paid, free, and reduced-price meals and supplements) are rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent. Present law establishes reduced price lunch reimbursement rates set at 40 cents less than the free lunch rates, and sets a maximum meal charge of 40 cents for these lunches. [Sec. 11(a) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

No comparable provisions.

Senate Amendment

Freezes (for two years) reimbursement rates for paid lunches, breakfasts, and supplements. Revises (by changing rounding rules) the method for calculating reimbursement rates for paid, free, and reduced-price lunches, breakfasts, and supplements. [Note: Reimbursement rates for meals and supplements served in family day care homes and the Summer Food Service program are and would be governed by separate provisions of law (see below).]

On January 1, 1996, reimbursement rates for paid, free, and reduced-price lunches, breakfasts, and supplements set under current law for the 1995–1996 school year (as rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent) would be rounded down to the nearest lower cent. For the 1996–1997 and 1997–1998 school years, the reimbursement rates for paid lunches, breakfasts, and supplements would be frozen at the rates for the 1995–1996 school year (as rounded down to the nearest lower cent). For the 1998–1999 school year, the reimbursement rates for paid lunches, breakfasts, and supplements would be the unrounded rates for the 1995–1996 school year adjusted for inflation over the most recent 12-month period for which data are available, and rounded down to the nearest lower cent. For following school years, the reimbursement rates for paid lunches, breakfasts, and supplements would be the unrounded rates for the preceding year adjusted for inflation over the most recent 12-month period, and rounded down to the nearest lower cent.

Reimbursement rates for free and reduced-price lunches, breakfasts, and supplements would continue to be indexed annually for inflation each school year (i.e., no two-year freeze), but would be rounded down to the nearest lower cent. [Note: Current-law rules as to the inflation-adjustment factor to be used (i.e., the food away from home series of the Consumer Price Index) are not changed.]

Conference agreement

Freezes (for two years) reimbursement rates for paid lunches, breakfasts, and supplements. Revises (by changing rounding rules) the method for calculating reimbursement rates for paid, free, and reduced-price lunches, breakfasts, and supplements. [Note: Reimbursement rates for meals and supplements served in family day care homes and the Summer Food Service program are and would be governed by separate provisions of law (see below).]

On January 1, 1996, reimbursement rates for paid, free, and reduced-price breakfasts and supplements set under current law for the 1995–1996 school year would be rounded down to the nearest one cent. On July 1, 1996, reimbursement rates for paid, free and reduced price lunches would be rounded down to the nearest one cent. For the 1996–1997 and 1997–1998 school years, the reimbursement rates for paid lunches, breakfasts, and supplements would be frozen at the rates for the 1995–1996 school year (as rounded down to the nearest lower cent). For the 1998–1999 school year, the reimbursement rates for paid lunches, breakfasts, and supplements would be the unrounded rates for the 1995–1996 school year adjusted for inflation over the most recent 12-month period for which data are available, and rounded down to the nearest lower cent. For following school years, the reimbursement rates for paid lunches, breakfasts, and supplements would be the unrounded rates for the preceding year adjusted for inflation over the most recent 12-month period, and rounded down to the nearest lower cent.

Reimbursement rates for free and reduced-price lunches, breakfasts, and supplements would continue to be indexed annually for inflation each school year (i.e., no two-year freeze), but would be rounded down to the nearest lower cent. [Note: Current-law rules as to the inflation-adjustment factor to be used (i.e., the food away from home series of the Consumer Price Index) are not changed.]

The differential between free and reduced price lunch reimbursements would be lowered by 5 cents (to 45 cents) effective July 1, 2000, and by an additional 5 cents (to 50 cents) effective July 1, 2001, and corresponding changes would be made to the reduced price meal charge limits.

28. SUMMER FOOD SERVICE PROGRAM FOR CHILDREN

Present law

Under the Summer Food Service program, all meals and supplements served are federally subsidized at legislatively set, inflation-indexed rates that, for the 1995 summer (set in January 1995), were $2.12 for each lunch/supper, $1.18 for each breakfast, and 55.5 cents for each supplement. In addition, sponsors receive payments for administrative costs based on the number of meals/supplements served. Basic Federal payments for lunches, breakfasts, and supplements are indexed for inflation annually based on the food away from home series of the Consumer Price Index, and rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent. [Sec. 13(b) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

No comparable provisions.

Senate Amendment

Establishes new, lower reimbursement rates for meals and supplements served in the Summer Food Service program as follows: $2 for lunches/suppers, $1.20 for breakfasts, and 50 cents for supplements. The new rates would become effective January 1, 1996 (for the 1996 summer program), and be adjusted each January thereafter to reflect changes in the food away from home series of the Consumer Price Index (as under current law). However, while each adjustment would be based on the unrounded rates for the prior 12-month period, it would be rounded down to the nearest cent. [Note: Additional administrative-cost payment rates to sponsors are not affected.]

Conference agreement

House recedes with an amendment establishing new, lower rates for meals and supplements served in the Summer Food service program as follows: $1.82 for lunches served; $1.13 each breakfast served and $.46 for each meal supplement served.

29. SPECIAL MILK PROGRAM

Present law

Under the Special Milk program, the minimum per-half-pint reimbursement rate is indexed annually to reflect changes in the Producer Price Index for Fresh Processed Milk, and rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent. [Sec. 3(a) of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

No comparable provisions.

Senate Amendment

Freezes (for one year) the minimum per-half-pint reimbursement rate and revises (by changing rounding rules) the method of calculating the reimbursement rate.

On Jan. 1, 1996, the minimum reimbursement rate set under current law for the 1995–1996 school year (as rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent) would be rounded down to the nearest cent. For the 1996–1997 school year, the minimum reimbursement rate would be frozen at the rate for the 1995–1996 school year (as rounded down to the nearest cent). For the 1997–1998 school year, the minimum reimbursement rate would be the unrounded rate for the 1995–1996 school year adjusted for inflation over the most recent 12-month period for which data are available, and rounded down to the nearest lower cent. For following school years, the minimum reimbursement rate would be the unrounded rate for the preceding year adjusted annually for inflation, and rounded down to the nearest lower cent. [Note: Current-law rules as to the inflation adjustment factor to be used (i.e., the Producer Price Index for Fresh Processed Milk) are not changed.]

Conference agreement

House recedes with an amendment providing that for the 1996–1997 and 1997–1998 school years, the minimum reimbursement rate is frozen at the rate for the 1995–1996 school year (as rounded down to the nearest lower cent).

30. FREE AND REDUCED PRICE BREAKFASTS

Present law

Reimbursement rates for free and reduced-price breakfasts are indexed annually for inflation and rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent. [Sec. 4(b) of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate Amendment

Requires that annual adjustments to reimbursement rates for free and reduced-price breakfasts be based on the previous year's unrounded rates and, after adjustment for inflation, rounded down to the nearest lower cent.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

31. CONFORMING REIMBURSEMENT FOR PAID BREAKFASTS AND LUNCHES

Present law

The per-meal reimbursement for paid breakfasts (paid meals are those served to children with family income above 185 percent of the Federal poverty income guidelines) is higher than the reimbursement rate for paid lunches—by about 2 cents a meal for the 1995–1996 school year. [Sec. 4(b) of the Child Nutrition Act]

[Note: The paid breakfast reimbursement rate is roughly the same as the current-law paid lunch rate for schools with free and reduced-price participation of 60 percent or more. This special lunch rate would be eliminated under Sec. 401 of the Senate amendment (see item 25).]

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate Amendment

Requires that the reimbursement rate for paid breakfasts be the same as the rate for paid lunches.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

32. SCHOOL BREAKFAST STARTUP GRANTS

Present law

The Secretary is required to make competitive grants to help defray costs associated with starting or expanding school breakfast and summer food service programs. Funding of $5 million a year is provided through fiscal year 1997; $6 million is provided for fiscal year 1998; and $7 million a year is provided for fiscal year 1999 and each subsequent year. [Sec. 4(g) of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate Amendment

Repeals the startup/expansion competitive grant program.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

33. NUTRITION EDUCATION AND TRAINING PROGRAMS

Present law

The Secretary is required to make funding available to States for child nutrition program nutrition education and training activities. Funding of $10 million a year is provided. [Sec. 19(i) of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Reduces the amount that must be provided for nutrition education and training to $7 million a year.

Conference agreement

House recedes with an amendment eliminating mandatory status. Authorizes appropriations of $10 million per year.

34. EFFECTIVE DATE

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Establishes Oct. 1, 1996 as the effective date for repeal of the startup/expansion competitive grant program and reduction of funding for nutrition education and training.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

36. SUMMER FOOD SERVICE PROGRAM FOR CHILDREN

Permitting Offer versus Serve

Present law

No provision. [Note: The "offer versus serve" option is permitted in school meal programs.]

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Allows schools operating summer food service programs to permit children attending a site on school premises to refuse one item of a meal without affecting the Federal reimbursement for the meal.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

37. CHILD AND ADULT CARE FOOD PROGRAM

A. PAYMENTS TO SPONSOR EMPLOYEES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Bars Child and Adult Care Food program sponsoring organizations with more than one employee from basing payments to employees on the number of family/group day care homes recruited, managed, or monitored.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

B. IMPROVED TARGETING OF DAY CARE HOME REIMBURSEMENTS

Present law

Federal reimbursement rates for meals and supplements served in family/group day care homes are standard for all homes, established separately from those for day care centers, not differentiated by the participating children's family income (as is the case for day care centers), and set approximately half-way between reimbursements for free and reduced-price meals/supplements in day care centers. They are indexed for inflation each July 1 (see item 36B(2)), and, for the period July 1995—June 1996, they are: $1.5375 for all lunches/suppers, 84.5 cents for all breakfasts, and 45.75 cents for all supplements. Family/group day care home sponsors also receive separate administrative cost reimbursements based on the number of homes sponsored. [Sec. 17(f) of the National School Lunch Act]

Meal and supplement reimbursements for family/group day care homes are indexed annually to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index for food away from home and rounded to the nearest 1/4 cent. [Sec. 17(f) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

No comparable provisions.

Senate amendment

Restructures reimbursements for meals and supplements served in family/group day care homes. In general, homes would be divided into two "tiers," one of which would receive current-law reimbursements (with indexing adjustments, see item 37B(2) for changes in inflation indexing rules) and the other of which would receive lower reimbursements as set out under the Senate amendment. [Note: Separate payments to sponsors based on the number of homes sponsored are not changed, and current rules barring certain documentation requirements and reimbursements for meals/supplements served to providers' children are retained.]

Tier I homes would be paid the meal/supplement reimbursements for family/group homes in effect on the date of enactment, adjusted on August 1, 1996, and each July 1 thereafter, to reflect inflation for the most recent 12-month period for which data are available.

Tier I homes would be those (1) located in areas, as defined by the Secretary based on Census data, in which at least half of the children are members of households with income below 185 percent of the Federal poverty income guidelines, (2) located in an area served by a school enrolling elementary students in which at least 50 percent of those enrolled are certified eligible for free or reduced-price school meals (i.e., have family income below 185 percent of the Federal poverty guidelines), or (3) operated by a provider whose family income is verified by its sponsoring organization to be below 185 percent of the poverty guidelines.

In general, tier II homes would be paid reimbursements of $1 for each lunch/supper, 30 cents for each breakfast, and 15 cents for each supplement (all substantially below tier I rates), adjusted on July 1, 1997, and each July 1 thereafter, to reflect inflation for the most recent 12-month period for which data are available.

Tier II homes would be homes that do not meet the tier I low-income area/provider standards.

Tier II homes could, at their option, claim higher tier I reimbursement rates under certain conditions: Tier II homes could elect to receive tier I reimbursements for meals/supplements served to children in households with income below 185 percent of the poverty guidelines, if the sponsoring organization collects the necessary income information and makes the appropriate eligibility determinations (in accordance with the Secretary's rules). Tier II homes also could receive tier I reimbursements for children in or subsidized under (or children of parents in or subsidized under) federally or State supported child care or other benefit programs with an income limit that does not exceed 185 percent of the poverty guidelines, and could restrict their claim for tier I reimbursements to these children if they opt not to have income statements collected from parents/caretakers.

The Secretary would be required to prescribe "simplified" meal counting/reporting procedures for use by tier II homes (and their sponsors) that elect to claim tier I reimbursements for children meeting the income or program participation requirements noted above. These procedures could include: (1) setting an annual percentage of meals/supplements to be reimbursed at tier I rates based on the family income of children enrolled during a specific month or other period, (2) placing a home in a reimbursement category based on the percentage of children with household income below 185 percent of poverty, or (3) other procedures determined by the Secretary.

The Secretary also would be permitted to establish minimum requirements for verifying income and program participation for children in tier II homes opting to claim tier I reimbursement rates.

Requires that reimbursements for family/group day care homes be indexed annually to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index for food at home, based on the unrounded rates for the preceding 12-month period, and then rounded down to the nearest lower cent.

Requires the Secretary to reserve, from amounts available for the Child and Adult Care Food program in fiscal year 1996, $5 million—to provide grants for (1) training, materials, computer and other assistance to sponsoring organization staff and (2) training and other aid to family/group day care homes in implementing the new reimbursement-rate structure directed by the Senate amendment. The funds would be allocated among the States based on their proportion of participating homes, with a minimum of $30,000 as a State's base funding share, and States would not be allowed to retain more than 30 percent of their grant at the State level (passing the remainder to sponsors and providers).

Requires (1) the Secretary to provide State agencies with Census data necessary for determining homes' tier I status and (2) State agencies to provide the data to day care home sponsoring organizations.

Requires State agencies administering school meal programs to provide approved day care home sponsoring organizations a list of schools serving elementary school children in which at least half those enrolled are certified to receive free or reduced-price meals (one test for an area eligible for tier I reimbursements). The data for the list must be collected annually and provided on a timely basis to any requesting approved sponsoring organization.

Provides that, in determining homes' tier I status, State agencies and sponsoring organizations must use the most current data available.

Provides that a determination that a home is located in an area that qualifies it as a tier I home be in effect for three years, unless the State agency determine the area no longer qualifies the home. In the case of a determination made on the basis of Census data, the determination is to be in effect until more recent data are available.

Makes conforming technical amendments recognizing the new structure of family/group day care home reimbursement rates.

Conference agreement

House recedes with an amendment to establish new lower reimbursement rates for tier II homes for meals and supplements as follows: $.90 for each lunch and supper; $.25 for each breakfast; and $.10 for supplements.

C. DISALLOWING MEAL CLAIMS

Present law

No specific provision.

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Makes clear that States and sponsoring organizations may recoup reimbursements to day care home providers for improperly claimed meals/supplements.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

D. ELIMINATION OF STATE PAPERWORK AND OUTREACH BURDEN

Present law

Provisions of the National School Lunch Act require (1) States to take affirmative action to expand availability of the Child and Adult Care Food program's benefits (including annual notification of all nonparticipating family/group day care home providers), (2) the Secretary to conduct demonstration projects to test approaches to removing or reducing barriers to participation by homes that operate in low-income areas or primarily serve low-income children, (3) the Secretary and States to provide training and technical assistance to sponsoring organizations in reaching low-income children, and (4) the Secretary to instruct States to provide information/training about child health and development through sponsoring organizations. [Sec. 17(k) of the National School Lunch Act]

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Repeals existing "outreach" requirements noted under present law and requires that (1) States provide sufficient training, technical assistance, and monitoring to facilitate effective operation of the Child and Adult Care Food program and (2) the Secretary assist States in carrying out this obligation.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

E. STUDY OF IMPACT OF AMENDMENTS ON PROGRAM PARTICIPATION AND FAMILY DAY CARE LICENSING

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Not later than two years after the date of enactment, requires the Secretary of Agriculture, in conjunction with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, to study the impact of the revisions to the Child and Adult Care Food program under the Senate amendment on:

(1) the number of participating family day care homes, day care home sponsoring organizations, and day care homes that are licensed, certified, registered, or approved by each State;

(2) the rate of growth in the number of participating homes, sponsors, and licensed, certified, registered, or approved homes;

(3) the nutritional adequacy/quality of meals served in family day care homes that no longer receive reimbursements or no longer receive "full" reimbursements; and

(4) the proportion of low-income children participating in the program. (p. 377)

Requires each State agency to submit data on (1) the number of participating family day care homes on July 31, 1996, and July 31, 1997, (2) the number of licensed, certified, registered, or approved family day care homes on July 31, 1996, and July 31, 1997, and (3) other matters needed to carry out the study as required by the Secretary.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

F. EFFECTIVE DATE AND REGULATIONS

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No comparable provisions.

Senate amendment

Establishes the effective date for changes in the family/group day care home reimbursement structure—August 1, 1996. Other changes affecting the Child and Adult Care Food program would be effective on enactment (e.g., grants to assist in implementation of the changes, limits on payments to sponsors' employees).

Requires that, by February 1, 1996, the Secretary issue interim regulations to implement (1) the changes in the family/group day care home reimbursement structure and (2) existing provisions of law for the use of sponsoring organizations' administrative expense payments for startup/expansion and outreach and recruitment activities. Final regulations would be required by August 1, 1996.

Conference agreement

House recedes.

SUBTITLE J—FOOD STAMPS AND COMMODITY DISTRIBUTION

Food stamp reform

1. DECLARATION OF POLICY

Present law

The Food Stamp Act's declared policy is to safeguard the health and well-being of the Nation's population by raising levels of nutrition among low-income households. To alleviate hunger and malnutrition among low-income households with limited food purchasing power, the Act authorizes the food stamp program to permit low-income households to obtain a more nutritious diet through normal channels of trade by increasing the food purchasing power of all eligible households who apply. [Sec. 2]

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Adds to the existing Food Stamp Act declaration of policy a statement that Congress intends that the food stamp program support the employment focus and family strengthening mission of public welfare and welfare replacement programs by facilitating transition to economic self-sufficiency through work, promoting employment as the primary means of income support and reducing barriers to employment, and maintaining and strengthening healthy family functioning and family life.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

2. SHORT TITLE

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Cites this subtitle as "The Food Stamp Simplification and Reform Act of 1995."

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

3. ESTABLISHMENT OF SIMPLIFIED FOOD STAMP PROGRAM

Present law

The Secretary is directed to establish uniform national standards of eligibility for food stamps (with certain variations allowed for Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, the Virgin Islands, and certain administrative rules). States may not impose any other standards of eligibility as a condition for participation in the program. [Sec. 5(b)]

House bill

Permits States to operate a "simplified food stamp program," either statewide or in any political subdivision. Under this program, households receiving regular cash benefits under the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) block grant established by title I of the Personal Responsibility Act (replacing the current Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program) could be provided food stamp benefits using the rules and procedures established by the State for its TANF block grant program, as an alternative to using regular food stamp rules.

Senate amendment

Explicitly permits non-uniform standards of eligibility. [Note: Also see item 38]

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

4. SIMPLIFIED FOOD STAMP PROGRAM

A. BASIC STATE OPTION

Present law

Households composed entirely of AFDC recipients are automatically eligible for food stamps, with few exceptions (e.g., aliens who do not meet the Food Stamp program's more stringent rules barring illegal aliens). [Sec. 5(a)]

As with other households, food stamp benefits for AFDC households are determined under Food Stamp program rules governing counting of income, expense deductions, and procedural requirements.

House bill

[Note: Sec. 542(a) of the House bill adds a new section 24 to the Food Stamp Act containing rules for the Simplified Food Stamp Program.]

If a State elects to exercise its option to use its TANF block grant rules and procedures for food stamp benefits, requires that (1) households in which all members receive regular cash benefits under a TANF block grant program be automatically eligible for food stamps and (2) food stamp benefits for them be determined under rules and procedures established by the State or locality under the State's TANF block grant program or the regular food stamp program.

Senate amendment

[Note: Sec. 342(a) of the Senate amendment adds a new section 24 to the Food Stamp Act containing rules for the Simplified Food Stamp Program]

Permits a State to exercise an option to use rules and procedures established for its family assistance block grant (under title I of the Senate amendment) to determine food stamp benefits for households in which all members receive family assistance block grant aid: (1) households in which all members receive aid under a family assistance block grant program would be automatically eligible for food stamps; and (2) their food stamp benefits could be determined by using rules and procedures established by the State for its family assistance block grant program, regular food stamp program rules and procedures, or a combination of the two. States also would be allowed to apply a single "shelter standard" to households that receive a housing subsidy and another to households that do not.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment deleting the specific reference to use of a single shelter standard.

B. FEDERAL COST CONTROL

Present law

No comparable provisions.

House bill

Requires that, when approving a State's plan to exercise its option for a simplified food stamp program, the Secretary certify that the average per-household food stamp benefit received by participating TANF households is not expected to exceed the average food stamp benefit level for AFDC or TANF recipients in the preceding fiscal year —adjusted for any changes in the "Thrifty Food Plan" (the basis for food stamp benefit levels). The Secretary also is required to compute the "permissible" average per-household benefit for each State or locality exercising the simplified program option.

Requires that, if average food stamp benefits under the simplified program exceed the permissible level (the Thrifty-Food-Plan-adjusted prior year amount), the State must pay the Federal Government the benefit cost of the excess within 90 days of notification.

Senate amendment

Provides that a State may not operate a simplified food stamp program unless it has an approved plan and requires the Secretary to approve any State plan if the Secretary determines it complies with the provisions of law governing the simplified food stamp program option and would not increase Federal costs under the Food Stamp Act. Federal costs for this purpose are defined to exclude research, demonstration, and evaluation costs.

Requires the Secretary to determine whether a State's simplified food stamp program is increasing Federal costs under the Food Stamp Act. In making the determination, the Secretary (1) could not require States to collect or report any information on households not included in the simplified food stamp program and (2) could approve State requests to use alternative accounting periods. If the Secretary determines that a simplified food stamp program has increased Federal costs, the State must be notified by January 1 of the succeeding fiscal year.

If the Secretary determines that a simplified program has increased Federal costs for a two-year period, the State must pay the Federal Government the amount of any increased costs within 90 days of the determination (or have amounts due it for administrative costs reduced).

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment. The Secretary must, for each fiscal year, determine whether a simplified program is increasing Federal costs above those incurred under the food stamp program in the fiscal year prior to implementation of the simplified program, adjusted for changes in participation, the non-public-assistance income of participants, and the cost of the Thrifty Food Plan. The Secretary must notify the State of a determination of increased Federal costs, and the State must submit for approval a corrective action plan designed to prevent increased Federal costs. If a State fails to submit a plan or carry out an approved plan, the Secretary must terminate approval of the State's simplified program, and the State is ineligible for future participation under simplified program rules.

C. DISQUALIFICATION

Present law

Households penalized for an intentional failure to comply with a Federal, State, or local welfare program may not, for the duration of the penalty, receive an increased food stamp allotment because their welfare income has been reduced. [Sec. 8(d)]

[Note: This has been interpreted by regulation to apply only to reductions in welfare income due to repayment of overpayments resulting from a welfare violation, although a revision of the regulation is scheduled.]

House bill

Provides that (1) households receiving food stamps under the simplified program option who are sanctioned (disqualified or have their benefits reduced) under a State's TANF program may have the same penalty applied for food stamp purposes and (2) food stamp benefits to households participating under the simplified program option may not be increased as the result of a reduction in their TANF benefits caused by a sanction. Any household disqualified from food stamps as the result of a TANF program sanction would be eligible to apply for food stamps (as a new applicant) after the disqualification period has expired.

Senate amendment

[Note: See items 10 and 43.]

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

D. EXTENDING RULES TO "MIXED" HOUSEHOLDS

Present law

No comparable provisions.

House bill

Allows States the further option of applying their TANF rules and procedures to food stamp households in which some, but not all, members receive TANF benefits. These households would not be automatically eligible for food stamps (they would have to meet normal food stamp eligibility rules), but their benefits could be determined under the State's TANF rules and procedures, so long as the Secretary ensures that the State's plan provides for an "equitable" distribution of benefits among all household members.

Senate amendment

No comparable provisions.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees encourage the Secretary to work with States to test methods for applying a single set of rules and procedures to households in which some, but not all, members receive cash welfare benefits under State rules.

E. CASH ASSISTANCE

Present law

No comparable provisions.

House bill

Allows States exercising the simplified program option to pay food stamp benefits in cash to some participating households. Cash benefits could be paid to households with 3 or more consecutive months' earned income of at least $350 a month from a private sector employer.

Provides that: (1) cash assistance in lieu of food stamps be considered the food stamp benefit of the earner's household, (2) the value of food stamp benefits provided in cash be treated as food stamp coupons for taxation and other purposes (i.e., disregarded), and (3) the State opting for cash payments increase the payments (at State expense) to offset the effect of any food sales taxes, unless the Secretary determines it unnecessary because of the limited nature of items taxed (sales taxes on food purchases with food stamp benefits are barred by existing law).

Requires States electing the cash benefit option to submit a written evaluation of the effect of cash assistance after 2 years' operation.

Senate amendment

[Note: See item 55.]

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

F. FEDERAL FOOD STAMP RULES

Present law

The Federal Government shares 50% of any State food stamp administrative costs (except that certain States with very low rates of erroneous benefit and eligibility determinations can receive up to 60%). States also may retain certain proportions of any overissued benefits they recoup. Special Federal cost-sharing rules apply in the case of employment and training programs for food stamp recipients. States are subject to a quality control system under which the extent of erroneous benefit and eligibility decisions is measured. Those with high rates of erroneous benefit and eligibility decisions are subject to fiscal sanctions. [Sec. 16]

House bill

Requires States exercising the simplified program option to, at a minimum, comply with certain rules mandated under the Food Stamp Act:

(1) requirements governing issuance procedures for food stamp benefits;

(2) the requirement that benefits be calculated by subtracting 30% of a household's income (as determined by State-established, not Federal, rules under the simplified program option) from the maximum food stamp benefit;

(3) the bar against counting food stamp benefits as income or resources in other programs;

(4) the requirements that State agencies assume responsibility for eligibility certification and issuance of benefits and keep records for inspection and audit;

(5) the bar against discrimination by reason of race, sex, religious creed, national origin, or political beliefs;

(6) requirements related to submission and approval of plans of operation and administration of the food stamp program on Indian reservations;

(7) limits on the use and disclosure of information about food stamp households;

(8) requirements for notice to and fair hearings for aggrieved households (or comparable requirements established by the State under its TANF program);

(9) requirements for submission of reports and other information required by the Secretary;

(10) the requirement to report illegal aliens to the Immigration and Naturalization Service;

(11) requirements for use of certain Federal and State data sources in verifying recipients' eligibility;

(12) requirements to take measures to ensure that households are not receiving duplicate benefits; and

(13) requirements for the provision of social security numbers as a condition of eligibility and for their use by State agencies.

States electing the simplified program option would be subject to normal food stamp program cost-sharing rules.

States electing the simplified option would be subject to the food stamp quality control system (including fiscal sanctions).

Senate amendment

Permits States exercising the option for a simplified food stamp programs to apply rules and procedures under their family assistance block grant, the rules/procedures of the regular food stamp program, or the rules/procedures of one program to certain matters and those of the other in remaining matters. Permits States to standardize food stamp expense "deductions," but, in doing so, States would be required to give consideration to the work expenses, dependent care costs, and shelter costs of participating households.

Otherwise, the Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that it also would (1) require that States follow the revised rule in the Senate amendment (see item 43) as to not increasing food stamp benefits when other public assistance benefits are decreased (see item 4C in the House bill), (2) require that eligible households be certified and receive benefits not later than 30 days after application (as now required under the regular food stamp program), and (3) require that States issue "expedited" benefits to very low-income households (as required under the regular food stamp program).

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill with an amendment (1) allowing States to standardize deductions and (2) requiring States to follow the revised rule in the Senate amendment as to not increasing food stamp benefits when other public assistance benefits are decreased.

G. STATE PLANS

Present law

No comparable provision.

House bill

Requires that State plans for those States electing to exercise the simplified program option include the rules and procedures to be followed in determining benefits under the option, whether the program will include households in which not all members receive TANF grant benefits, and the method by which the State or political subdivision participating in the simplified program will carry out its quality control obligations.

Senate amendment

Requires that State plans for those States electing to exercise the simplified program option include the rules and procedures to be followed in determining benefits under the option, how the States will address the needs of households with high shelter costs, and a description of the method by which the State will carry out its quality control obligations.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

5. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS: SIMPLIFIED FOOD STAMP PROGRAM

Present law

Allows the Secretary to operate pilot projects similar to the simplified food stamp program State option proposed in the House bill. [Sec. 8(e) and Sec. 17(i)]

House bill

Deletes provisions for pilot projects similar to the simplified food stamp program State option.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill with an amendment to add necessary conforming amendments.

6. THRIFTY FOOD PLAN

Present law

Maximum monthly food stamp benefits are defined as 103% of the cost of the Agriculture Department's "Thrifty Food Plan," adjusted for food-price inflation each October according to the plan's cost in the immediately preceding June and rounded down to the nearest dollar by household size. [Sec. 3(o)]

House bill

Provides that current maximum monthly food stamp benefits (103% of the cost of the Thrifty Food Plan in June 1994) be increased by 2% a year, beginning with the October 1995 adjustment, and rounded down to the nearest dollar by household size.

Senate amendment

Sets maximum monthly food stamp benefits at 100% of the cost of the Thrifty Food Plan, effective October 1, 1995, adjusted annually, as under existing law and rounded down to the nearest dollar by household size. Requires that the October 1, 1995, adjustment not reduce maximum benefit levels.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment making it effective October 1, 1996.

7. INCOME DEDUCTIONS AND ENERGY ASSISTANCE

A. ENERGY ASSISTANCE

Present law

Payments or allowances for energy assistance provided by State or local law are, under rules set by the Secretary, disregarded ("excluded") as income. [Sec. 5(d)(11) and 5(k)]

Payments or allowances for weatherization assistance are disregarded as energy assistance. [Sec. 5(d)(11) and 5(k)] [Note: Weatherization payments could otherwise be disregarded as lump-sum payments, vendor payments, or reimbursements.]

Federal Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP) benefits are disregarded as income. [Sec. 5(d)(11) and 5(k) of the Food Stamp Act and sec. 2605(f) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act]

Certain utility allowances under Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) programs are disregarded. [Sec. 5(d)(11) and 5(k)]

Shelter expense deductions may be claimed for utility costs covered by LIHEAP benefits, but not in the case of other disregarded energy assistance unless the household has additional out-of-pocket expenses. [Sec. 5(e) of the Food Stamp Act and Sec. 2605(f) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act]

House bill

Requires that State/local energy assistance be counted as income.

Continues to disregard as income payments or allowances for weatherization assistance under a Federal energy assistance program. Other weatherization assistance could be disregarded as lump-sum payments, vendor payments, or reimbursements.

Bars claiming shelter expense deductions for utility costs covered either directly or indirectly by the LIHEAP and other disregarded energy assistance.

Senate Amendment

Requires that State/local energy assistance be counted as income..

Requires an income disregard for one-time payments/allowances under a Federal or State law for the costs of weatherization or emergency repair/replacement of unsafe/inoperative furnaces or other heating/cooling devices.

Counts Federal LIHEAP benefits as income.

Counts HUD utility allowances as income.

Allows claiming shelter expense deductions for utility costs covered directly or indirectly by the LIHEAP and other counted energy assistance.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

B. STANDARD DEDUCTIONS

Present law

For purposes of determining food stamp benefits and eligibility, applicant/recipient households may claim standard deductions from their otherwise countable income. Standard deductions are indexed annually (each October 1) for inflation based on the Consumer Price Index for items other than food and rounded down to the nearest dollar. For fiscal year 1995, standard deductions are set at: $134 a month for the 48 States and the District of Columbia, $229 for Alaska, $189 for

Hawaii, $269 for Guam, and $118 for the Virgin Islands. For fiscal year 1996, they were "scheduled" to rise to: $138, $236, $195, $277, and $122, respectively, but this was barred by the fiscal year 1996 agriculture appropriations act. [Sec. 5(e)]

House bill

Sets standard deductions at their fiscal year 1995 levels, effective October 1, 1995.

Senate amendment

Reduces standard deductions:

(1) for fiscal year 1996, they would be $132, $225, $186, $265, and $116; and

(2) for fiscal year 1997–2002, they would be $124, $211, $174, $248, and $109.

Inflation indexing of standard deductions would resume October 1, 2002 (using existing indexing rules).

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill and continues to set standard deductions at their fiscal year 1995 levels.

C. EARNED INCOME DEDUCTION

Present law

Households may claim a deduction for 20% of any earned income. This deduction is not allowed with respect to any income that a household willfully or fraudulently fails to report in a timely manner (as proven in a fraud hearing proceeding)—i.e., it is not allowed when determining the amount of a benefit overissuance. [Sec. 5(e)]

House bill

Denies an earned income deduction for the food stamp benefit portion of income earned under a work supplementation/support program. [Note: See item 15.]

Senate amendment

Disallows an earned income deduction for any income not reported in a timely manner—i.e., the deduction would not be allowed in determining the amount of any overissued benefits.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment denying an earned income deduction for the public assistance portion of income earned under a work supplementation/support program.

D. EXCESS SHELTER EXPENSE DEDUCTION

Present law

For purposes of determining food stamp benefits and eligibility, applicant/recipient households may claim excess shelter expense deductions from their otherwise countable income—in the amount of any shelter expenses (including utility costs) above 50% of their countable income after all other deductions have been applied. For households with elderly or disabled members, these deductions are unlimited. For other households, they are limited by law through December 1996; limits are lifted as of January 1, 1997. For fiscal year 1995, excess shelter expense deductions were capped at: $231 a month for the 48 States and the District of Columbia, $402 for Alaska, $330 for Hawaii, $280 for Guam, and $171 for the Virgin Islands. For October 1995 through December 1996, the caps rose to $247, $429, $353, $300, and $182, respectively. [Sec. 5(e)]

States may use "standard utility allowances" (as approved by the Secretary) in calculating households' shelter expenses. However, households may claim actual expenses instead of the allowance and may switch between an actual expense claim and the standard allowance at the end of any certification period and one additional time during any 12-month period. [Sec. 5(e)]

House bill

Sets the limits on excess shelter expense deductions at fiscal year 1995 levels.

Senate amendment

Permits States to make the use of standard utility allowances mandatory for all households if (1) the State has developed separate standards that include the cost of heating and cooling and do not include these costs and (2) the Secretary finds that the standards will not result in increased Federal costs.

Removes the option for households to switch between a standard utility allowance and actual costs once during every 12-month period.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment that establishes excess shelter expense deduction limits at the October 1995/December 1996 levels.

E. HOMELESS SHELTER DEDUCTION

Present law

For homeless households not receiving free shelter throughout the month, States may develop a homeless shelter expense estimate (a standard amount) to be used in calculating an excess shelter expense deduction. States must use this amount unless the household verifies higher expenses. The Secretary may prohibit the use of the deduction for households with extremely low shelter costs. The amount is inflation indexed, and, for fiscal year 1995, it is limited to $139 a month; effective October 1, 1995, it is scheduled to rise to $143. [Sec. 11(e)(3)]

House bill

Sets the homeless shelter deduction at the fiscal year 1995 $139 a month and requires that it be used in establishing homeless households' excess shelter expense deductions when they do not receive free shelter throughout the month.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill, except that States may prohibit the use of the deduction for households with extremely low shelter costs.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

8. VEHICLE ALLOWANCE

A. THRESHOLD FOR COUNTING A VEHICLE'S VALUE

Present law

In determining a household's liquid assets for food stamp eligibility purposes, a vehicle's fair market value in excess of $4,550 is counted. This threshold rose to $4,600 in October 1995 and is scheduled to be annually indexed for inflation beginning in fiscal year 1997. [Sec. 5(g)(2)] [Note: Eligible households may have liquid assets of no more than $2,000 ($3,000 for households with elderly members).]

House bill

Sets the threshold above which the fair market value of a vehicle is counted as an asset at $4,550.

Senate amendment

Eliminates the October 1, 1995 increase in the threshold to $4,600 and requires that the $4,550 threshold begin to be inflation adjusted on October 1, 1996.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill, with an amendment setting the threshold at $4,600.

B. VEHICLES CARRYING FUEL OR WATER

Present law

In determining a household's liquid assets for food stamp eligibility purposes, the value of a vehicle that the household depends on to carry fuel for heating or water for home use is excluded. [Sec. 5(g)(2)]

House bill

Deletes the asset exclusion for vehicles used to carry fuel or water.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

9. WORK REQUIREMENTS

Non-exempt recipients between 16 and 60 are ineligible for food stamps if they refuse to register for employment, refuse to participate in an employment/training program when required to do so by the State, or refuse a job offer meeting minimum standards. [Sec. 6(d)]

Exempt individuals are: (1) those who are not physically or mentally fit, (2) those subject to and complying with a work/training requirement under the AFDC program or the unemployment compensation system (although failure to comply with an AFDC/unemployment system requirement is treated as a failure to comply with food stamp rules, if the requirement is "comparable"), (3) parents and other household members with the responsibility for care of a dependent child under age 6 or an incapacitated person, (4) postsecondary students enrolled at least half-time (separate rules bar eligibility for most postsecondary students who are not working or do not have dependents), (5) regular participants in drug addiction or alcoholic treatment programs, (6) persons employed at least 30 hours a week or receiving the minimum wage equivalent, and (7) persons between 16 and 18 who are not head of household and are in school at least half time. [Sec. 6(d)(1) and (2)]

In addition, if a non-exempt head of household fails to comply with one of the above-noted requirements or voluntarily quits a job without good cause, or if any non-exempt household member is on strike, the entire household is ineligible for food stamps. [Sec. 6(d)(1) and (3)]

A. JOB SEARCH

Present law

As noted above, non-exempt individuals refusing to participate in an employment/training program when required to do so by the State are ineligible for food stamps (if they are head of household, the entire household is ineligible). State-designed employment and training programs may include a requirement to perform job search activities. [Sec. 6(d)(1) and (2)]

House bill

Makes ineligible non-exempt individuals (and their households if they are head of household) who refuse to participate in a State-established job search program. [Note: Able-bodied non-elderly adults without dependents would be subject to new work requirements, see below.]

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

B. COMPARABLE WORK REQUIREMENTS

Present law

As noted above, individuals are exempt from food stamp employment/training requirements if they are subject to and complying with an AFDC or unemployment compensation work/training requirement, and failure to comply with such an AFDC or unemployment compensation requirement is treated as failure to comply with food stamp employment/ training requirements, if the requirement is "comparable." [Sec. 6(d)(2)]

House bill

Requires that failure to comply with an TANF or unemployment compensation system work/training requirement be treated as failure to comply with a food stamp employment/training requirement, whether or not the requirement is "comparable."

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

C. NEW WORK REQUIREMENT

Present law

As noted above, non-exempt individuals are ineligible for food stamps if they refuse to participate in an employment/training program when required to do so by the State. [Sec. 6(d)(1)]

House bill

Deletes provisions of law barring eligibility to those refusing to participate in State-established employment/ training programs.

In their place, adds a new work requirement: non-exempt recipients (see below) would be disqualified if they are not employed a minimum of 20 hours a week or are not participating in the work program newly established under the House bill (see below) within 90 days of certification of eligibility.

Allows individuals who have been disqualified under the new work requirement to reestablish food stamp eligibility if they become exempt (under the rules noted immediately below), become employed at least 20 hours a week during any consecutive 30-day period, or participate in a work program (see below).

Exempt from the new requirement would be: (1) those under 18 or over 50, (2) those medically certified as physically or mentally unfit for employment, (3) parents or other household members responsible for the care of a dependent child, and (4) those who are otherwise exempt from work registration and job search rules (see present law description above).

Upon a State's request, allows the Secretary to waive application of the new work requirement for some or all individuals in all or part of a State if the Secretary determines that the area (1) has an unemployment rate over 10% or (2) does not have sufficient jobs to provide employment for those subject to the new requirement. The Secretary would be required to report to the Agriculture Committees the basis for any waiver based on lack of sufficient jobs.

Senate amendment

Adds a new work requirement: non-exempt persons (see below) would be ineligible if, during the preceding 12-month period, they received food stamps for 6 months or more while not working 20 hours or more a week (averaged monthly) or participating in and complying with a work/ training program (see note regarding exemptions below) for at least 20 hours a week.

Exempt from the new requirement would be: (1) those under 18 or over 50, (2) those certified by a physician as physically or mentally unfit for employment, (3) parents or other household members responsible for the care of a dependent, (4) those participating a minimum of 20 hours a week in (and complying with the requirements of) a Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) program, a Trade Adjustment Assistance Act training program, or a State or local government employment or training program meeting Governor-approved standards, and (5) those otherwise exempt from work registration and job search rules (see present law description above.) [Note: The new work requirement could be met by those participating in and complying with (for 20 hours a week or more) a JTPA program, a Trade Adjustment Assistance training program, or a State/local employment or training program meeting Governor-approved standards (including a food stamp program employment/training activity other than job search or job search training).]

As in the House bill, waivers are allowed, except that the unemployment rate threshold is 8% and the Secretary must report the basis for any waiver.

Provides for a transition to the new work requirement. Prior to October 1, 1996, administrators would not "look back" a full 12 months in determining whether a recipient had been receiving food stamps and not meeting the new requirement; they would look back only to October 1, 1995.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill, with an amendment. Non-exempt persons (see below) are ineligible if, during the preceding 12-month period, they received food stamps for 4 months or more while not working 20 hours or more a week (averaged monthly), participating in and complying with a work program (see below) for at least 20 hours a week, or participating in a workfare program.

Exempt from the new requirement are: (1) those under 18 or over 50, (2) those medically certified as physically or mentally unfit for employment, (3) parents or other household members responsible for the care of a dependent child, (4) those otherwise exempt from work registration or job search rules (e.g., those caring for incapacitated persons), and (5) pregnant women.

Work programs allowing an exemption are programs under the JTPA or the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act, or employment/ training programs operated or supervised by a State or locality meeting standards approved by the Governor (including a food stamp employment/training program)—except for job search or job search training programs.

Waiver reports are required for any waiver based on unemployment rates (over 10%) or lack of sufficient jobs.

The disqualification imposed by the new work requirement ceases to apply if, during a 30-day period, an individual works 80 hours or more, participates in and complies with a work program for at least 80 hours, or participates in a workfare program. In the subsequent 12-month period, an individual is eligible for food stamps for up to 4 months while not working for at least 20 hours a week, participating in a work program for at least 20 hours a week, or participating in a workfare program.

As in the Senate amendment, a transition to the new work requirement is provided.

D. DISQUALIFICATION

Present law

[Note: See present law description above. In addition, disqualification periods for failure to fulfill work requirements are (1) 2 months or until compliance (whichever is first) for most failures and (2) 90 days in case of a voluntary quit.]

House bill

No comparable provisions. [Note: The House bill creates new disqualification penalties for those covered by its new work requirement.]

Senate amendment

Rewrites and adds to rules governing disqualification for violation of work and employment/training requirements (other than those for the new work requirement noted above).

In addition to existing provisions for disqualification (e.g., job refusal, failure to participate in an employment/training program), makes ineligible (1) individuals who refuse without good cause to provide sufficient information to allow a determination of their employment status or job availability, (2) all individuals (in addition to heads of household) who voluntarily and without good cause quit a job, and (3) individuals who voluntarily and without good cause reduce their work effort (and, after the reduction, are working less than 30 hours a week).

Establishes a new household ineligibility rule: if any individual who is head of household is disqualified under a work rule, the entire household would, at State option, be ineligible for the lesser of the duration of the individual's ineligibility or 180 days—as determined by the State.

Establishes new mandatory minimum work-rule disqualification periods for individuals. For the first violation, individuals would be ineligible until the later of the date they fulfill work rules, for 1 month, or a period (determined by the State) not to exceed 3 months. For the second violation, individuals would be ineligible until the later of the date they fulfill work rules, for 3 months, or a period (determined by the State) not to exceed 6 months. For a third or subsequent violation, individuals would be ineligible until the later of the date they fulfill work rules, 6 months, a date determined by the State, or (at State option) permanently. These disqualification periods also would apply to those failing to meet any workfare requirements.

In establishing good cause, voluntary quits, and reduction of work effort, the Secretary would determine the meaning of the terms. States would determine the meaning of other terms and the procedures for making compliance decisions, but could not make a determination that would be less restrictive than a comparable one under the State's family assistance block grant program.

States would be required to include the standards and procedures they use in making work-rule disqualification/compliance decisions in their State plan.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

E. CARETAKER EXEMPTION

Present law

Parents or other household members with responsibility for the care of a dependent child under age 6 or of an incapacitated person are exempt from food stamp work rules. [Sec. 6(d)(2)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Permits States to lower the age at which a child "exempts" a parent/caretaker from 6 to not under the age of 1.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

F. WORK AND EMPLOYMENT/TRAINING PROGRAMS

Present law

States must operate employment and training programs for non-exempt food stamp recipients and place at least 15% of those covered in a program component. Exempt are those listed above and those States opt to exempt under Federal rules. Program components can range from job search or education activities to work experience/ training and "workfare" assignments. [Sec. 6(d)(4)]

Work experience/training program components must limit assignments to projects serving a useful public purpose, use the prior training/ experience of assignees, not provide work that has the effect of replacing others, and provide the same benefits and working conditions provided to other comparable employees. [Sec. 6(d)(4)(B)]

States and political subdivisions also may operate workfare programs under which non-exempt recipients may be required to perform work in return for the minimum wage equivalent of their household's monthly food stamp allotment. In general, those exempt are those listed above (p. 16). [Sec. 20]

Workfare assignments may not have the effect of replacing or preventing the employment of others and must provide the same benefits and working conditions provided to other comparable employees. [Sec. 20(d)]

The total hours of work required of a household under an employment/training program (including workfare) cannot in any month exceed the minimum wage equivalent of the household's monthly food stamp benefit. The total hours of participation in an employment and training program required of any household member cannot in any month exceed 120 hours (when added to other work). And, workfare hours (when added to other work) cannot exceed 30 hours a week for a household member. [Sec. 6(d)(4)(F) and Sec. 20(c)]

Under employment and training programs for food stamp recipients, States must provide or pay for transportation and other costs directly related to participation (up to $25 a month for each participant) and necessary dependent care expenses (in general, up to $175 or $200 a month for each dependent, depending on the dependent's age). Under workfare programs, States must reimburse participants for transportation and other costs directly related to participation (up to $25 a month for each participant). [Sec. 6(d)(4)(I) and Sec. 20 (d)(3)]

House bill

Deletes the requirement for States to operate employment and training programs and current provisions for work experience/training and workfare programs.

Instead, requires the Secretary to permit any State that applies and submits a plan in compliance with the Secretary's guidelines to operate a work program for food stamp recipients subject to the new work requirement (see above) in the State or any political subdivision. A State's work program would require those accepting an offer of a work position in order to maintain food stamp eligibility to perform work on the State or local jurisdiction's behalf, or on behalf of a private nonprofit entity. The Secretary's guidelines would be required to allow States and localities to operate a work program that is consistent and compatible with similar programs they might operate.

Requires that, in order to be approved, a State's work program provide that participants work no more than the minimum wage equivalent of their household's monthly food stamp benefit (i.e., the number of hours equivalent to their household's monthly benefit divided by the minimum wage).

Limits the degree to which a State or locality can assign participants to replace other workers. No State/locality could replace an employed worker with a work program participant, but participants could be placed in (1) new positions, (2) positions that became available during the normal course of business, (3) positions that involve performing work that would otherwise be performed on an overtime basis, or (4) positions that became available by shifting current employees to an alternate position. [Note: States would receive Federal cost sharing for work program participant expenses (see below).]

Senate amendment

Revises the existing requirements for State-operated employment/training programs for food stamp recipients: (1) makes clear the work experience is a purpose of employment/training programs; (2) requires that each component of an employment/ training program be delivered through a "statewide workforce development system," unless the component is not available locally; (3) expands the existing State option to apply work rules to applicants at application to all work requirements, not only job search; (4) removes specific rules governing job search components (i.e., tied to those for the AFDC program); (5) removes provisions for employment/training components related to work experience requiring that they be in public service work and use (to the extent possible) recipients' prior training and experience; (6) removes specific Federal rules as to States' authority to exempt categories and individuals from employment/training requirements; (7) removes the requirement to serve volunteers in employment/training programs; (8) removes the requirement for "conciliation procedures" for resolution of disputes involving participation in an employment or training program; (9) limits employment/training funding provided by the food stamp program for services to AFDC or family assistance block grant funding recipients to the amount used by the State for AFDC recipients in fiscal year 1995; and (10) removes Federal performance standards on States for employment/training programs for food stamp recipients.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

G. FUNDING WORK AND EMPLOYMENT/TRAINING PROGRAMS

Present law

To support employment and training programs for food stamp recipients, States receive a formula share of $75 million a year (based partially on their share of food stamp recipients not exempt from work registration and employment/training requirements and partially on their share of those placed in employment/training program components). Minimum State annual allocations are $50,000.

In addition to its portion of the $75 million annual grant, each State is entitled to (1) 50% of any additional costs incurred, (2) 50% of any transportation or other participant costs paid or incurred up to half of $25 a month for each participant, and (3) 50% of any dependent care costs paid or incurred up to half of certain limits (generally, $175/$200 a month for each dependent, depending on the dependent's age). [Sec. 16(h)]

House bill

To support work programs for food stamp recipients, requires the Secretary to allocate among States and localities operating them $75 million a year, based on their share of recipients subject to the new work requirement (see above). Minimum State allocations would be $50,000.

Requires States to notify the Secretary as to their intention to operate a work program, and requires the Secretary to reallocate unclaimed portions of the $75 million annual grant to other States, as the Secretary deems appropriate and equitable.

Requires that, in addition to its portion of the $75 million annual grant, the Secretary pay each State (1) 50% of any additional costs incurred and (2) 50% of any transportation or other participant costs paid or incurred up to half of $25 a month for each participant.

Allows the Secretary to suspend or cancel some or all payments made to States for the work program, or withdraw approval, on a finding of noncompliance.

Senate amendment

To support employment/training programs for food stamp recipients, requires the Secretary to "reserve for allocation" to States: $77 million for fiscal year 1996, $80 million for fiscal year 1997, $83 million for fiscal year 1998, $86 million for fiscal year 1999, $89 million for fiscal year 2000, $92 million for fiscal year 2001, and $95 million for fiscal year 2002. Allocations would be based on a "reasonable formula" (determined by the Secretary) that gives consideration to States' shares of the population affected by the new work requirement (see above). Minimum State allocations would be $50,000.

Requires reallocations as in the House bill.

Continues existing provisions for payments for additional costs, but adds explicit permission for a 50% Federal share of State case management costs.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

H. Conforming Amendment

Present law

There is authorized a demonstration project similar to the new work requirement in the House bill; it has not been implemented. [Sec. 17(d)]

House bill

Deletes authorization for a demonstration project similar to the new work requirement in the House bill.

Senate amendment

Makes several technical and conforming amendments to employment and training provisions.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill and makes technical and conforming amendments.

10. COMPARABLE TREATMENT OF DISQUALIFIED INDIVIDUALS

Present law

[Note: See item 4C.]

House bill

Requires that individuals who have been disqualified for noncompliance with requirements under a TANF program not be eligible to participate for food stamps during the disqualification period.

Senate amendment

If an individual is disqualified for failure to perform an action required under a Federal, State, or local welfare/public assistance program, permits States to impose the same disqualification for food stamps.

If a disqualification is imposed under the family assistance block grant, permits States to use the family assistance block grant's rules and procedures to impose the same disqualification for food stamps.

Permits individuals disqualified from food stamps because of failure to perform a required action under another welfare/public assistance program to apply for food stamps as new applicants after the disqualification period has expired—except that a prior disqualification under food stamp work requirements must be considered in determining eligibility.

Requires States to include the guidelines they use in carrying out food stamp disqualification for failure to perform a required action in another welfare/public assistance program in their State plans.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment changing references to welfare or public assistance programs to references to needs-tested public assistance programs.

11. ENCOURAGE ELECTRONIC BENEFIT TRANSFER SYSTEMS

A. REGULATION E

Present law

The Federal Reserve Board has ruled that, as of March 1997 and with some minor modifications, its "Regulation E" will apply to electronic benefit transfer systems. Regulation E provides certain protections for consumers using cards to access their accounts. It limits the liability of cardholders for unauthorized withdrawals (to $50, if notification is made) and requires periodic account statements and certain error resolution procedures. [Federal Register of Mar. 7, 1994]

House bill

[Note: See item 56 for optional block grants for States fully implementing electronic benefit transfer systems.]

Provides that Regulation E not apply to any electronic benefit transfer program (distributing needs-tested benefits) established or administered by States or localities.

Senate amendment

Provides that Regulation E not apply to food stamp benefits delivered through any electronic benefit transfer system.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. CHARGING FOR ELECTRONIC BENEFIT TRANSFER CARD REPLACEMENT

Present law

No specific provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides that States may charge recipients for the cost of replacing a lost or stolen electronic benefit transfer card and may collect the charge by reducing the recipient's food stamp benefit.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows Senate amendment.

C. PHOTOGRAPHIC IDENTIFICATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Requires that each electronic benefit transfer card bear a photograph of the members of the household to which the card is issued.

Senate amendment

Permits States to require that electronic benefit transfer cards contain a photograph of 1 or more household members and requires that, if a State requires a photograph, it shall establish procedures to ensure that other appropriate members of the household and authorized representatives may use the card.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

D. RULES FOR ELECTRONIC BENEFIT TRANSFER SYSTEMS

Present law

State agencies, with the Secretary's approval, may implement on-line electronic benefit transfer systems for delivering food stamp benefits, in lieu of coupons. No State may implement or expand an electronic benefit transfer system without prior approval from the Secretary. States are responsible for 50% of any electronic benefit transfer system costs (as with any benefit issuance system), including equipment and electronic benefit transfer cards. [Sec. 7(i)]

The Secretary's regulations for approval must (1) include standards that require that, in any one year, the operational cost of an electronic benefit transfer system does not exceed costs of prior issuance systems and (2) include system security standards. [Sec. 7(i)]

House bill

Deletes requirements for the Secretary's prior approval, "encourages" State agencies to implement on-line electronic benefit transfer systems for delivering food stamp benefits, and authorizes States to procure and implement these systems (under terms, conditions and designs that the State deems appropriate).

Allows the Secretary to waive, on a State's request, any provision of the Food Stamp Act that prohibits effective implementation of an electronic benefit transfer system for food stamp benefits.

Requires re-issuance and revision of regulations governing food stamp electronic benefit transfer systems (current regulations for approval of these systems were issued in April 1992).

Deletes the requirement that the Secretary's regulations for electronic benefit transfer systems require that costs of the electronic benefit transfer system in any one year not exceed costs of prior issuance systems.

Adds requirements that the Secretary's standards for electronic benefit transfer systems include (1) measures to maximize system security using the most recent technology the State considers appropriate (including personal identification numbers, photographic identification on electronic benefit transfer cards, and other measures to protect against fraud and abuse) and (2) effective not later than 2 years after enactment, measures that permit electronic benefit transfer systems to differentiate food items that may be acquired with food stamp benefits from those that may not.

Senate amendment

Permits States to implement EBT systems under rules separate from those in existing law as amended, if a State notifies the Secretary of its intent to convert to a statewide system within 3 years of enactment. The Secretary may not provide coupons to a State beginning 3 years after the chief executive gives notification of intent to convert under the EBT option— but the State may extend this deadline by 2 years and the Secretary may grant a waiver of up to 6 months for good cause. [Note: The Secretary is authorized to provide coupons for disaster relief.]

Places requirements on the Secretary under the EBT option. The Secretary must:

(1) assist States in converting to an EBT system and (in consultation with the Inspector General and the Secret Service) inform States about proper security features, management techniques, and counterfeit deterrence;

(2) reimburse States for purchasing and issuing EBT cards [Note: The Secretary may charge recipients (through allotment reduction or otherwise) for the cost of replacing lost or stolen cards, unless stolen by force or threat of force];

(3) assign additional employees to investigate and monitor compliance with EBT and retailer participation rules;

(4) establish a Transition Conversion Account (TCA) to be funded with transaction fees of no more than 2 cents a transaction (maximum of 16 cents a month) taken from each EBT household's benefits [Note: Fees would be imposed during the 10-year period beginning on enactment and placed in the TCA at the beginning of each year during the 10-year period beginning with the first full fiscal year after enactment. They would be imposed to the extent necessary to not increase the Secretary's costs under the EBT option and could not be greater than needed for the purposes of the TCA (see below). Fees could be reduced for households receiving maximum benefits.]

(5) from the TCA and, to the extent necessary, from food stamp appropriations, provide funds to States choosing the EBT option for (1) reasonable purchase and installation costs (including reimbursements to retailers) of single-function point-of-sale equipment to be used only for Federal/State assistance programs, (2) reasonable start-up purchase and installation costs for telephone equipment and connections to the point-of-sale equipment, and (3) modification of existing EBT systems to the extent necessary to operate Statewide or interstate;

(6) from the TCA, provide funds to implement the EBT option and for (1) start-up training, (2) reasonable one-time costs of converting to a system capable of interstate and law enforcement functions, (3) liabilities assumed by the Secretary under the EBT option (e.g., for replaced benefits), and (4) implementing and expanding a nationwide program for compliance with EBT and retailer rules; and

(7) consult with government, food industry, financial services, and food advocacy representatives in the conversion to EBT as to (1) integrating EBT systems into commercial networks, (2) EBT system security, (3) use of laser scanner technology to ensure that only eligible items are purchased, (4) use of EBT system data to identify fraud, (5) means of ensuring confidentiality, (6) using existing terminals and systems to reduce costs, and (7) using EBT systems for multiple benefits.

Places requirements and conditions on States under the EBT option. States:

(1) must take into account generally accepted operating rules based on commercial technology and the need to permit interstate operations and law enforcement monitoring and investigations;

(2) may use paper-based and other benefit transfer approaches for special-need retailers (located in very rural areas, without access to dependable electricity or regular telephone service, farmers' markets, and house-to-house trade routes);

(3) must purchase and install (or reimburse for) single-function point-of-sale (and related telephone) equipment, usable only for Federal/State assistance, for retailers that do not have point-of-sale EBT equipment and do not intend to obtain it in the near future [Note: Equipment must be capable of interstate operations (based on commercial operating principles) that permit law enforcement monitoring and be capable of giving recipients access to multiple benefits.];

(4) must purchase (or reimburse for) point-of-sale paper-based or alternative benefit transfer equipment for special-need retailers without this equipment who do not intend to obtain it in the near future (equipment would be usable only for Federal/State assistance);

(5) must use competitive bidding systems in purchasing EBT equipment and cards [Note: States may not have purchase agreements conditioned on buying additional services or equipment, the Secretary must monitor prices paid, and the Inspector General must investigate possible wrongdoing.];

(6) must advise recipients how to promptly report lost, stolen, damaged, improperly manufactured, dysfunctional, or destroyed EBT cards;

(7) must not (following the Secretary's regulations) replace benefits lost due to unauthorized use of an EBT card, but recipients would receive replacement benefits for losses caused by (1) force or threat of force, (2) unauthorized use after the State gets notice a card was lost/stolen, or (3) problems with the EBT system [Note: Except for losses caused by force or threat of force, States must reimburse the Secretary for benefit replacements, and States may obtain reimbursement from service providers for losses caused by system problems.];

(8) may require an explanation from recipients on occasions where they report lost or stolen cards or cards are used for an unauthorized transaction;

(9) must, in appropriate circumstances, investigate and act on (through administrative disqualification or court referral) cases of lost or stolen cards or unauthorized use;

(10) must (1) take into account the needs of law enforcement personnel and the need to permit and encourage technological/scientific advances, (2) ensure security is protected, (3) provide for recipient privacy, ease of EBT card use, and access to and service by retailers, (4) provide for financial accountability and system capability for interstate operations and law enforcement monitoring, (5) prohibit retailer participation unless appropriate equipment is operational and reasonably available to recipients, and (6) provide for monitoring and investigation by law enforcement agencies;

(11) must, on a recipient's request, provide, once a month, a statement of benefit transfers and balances for the preceding month; and

(12) must design systems to timely resolve disputes over errors. [Note: Recipients able to obtain error corrections under the system would not be entitled to a fair hearing.].

Provides that retailers may return equipment provided by the State and obtain equipment with their own funds and that the cost of documents or systems under the EBT option may not be imposed on retailers.

Provides that EBT retailer fraud and related activities be governed by the Food Stamp Act and 18 U.S.C. 1029.

Makes technical and conforming amendments and defines electronic benefit transfer system, retail food store, special-need retail food store, and electronic benefit transfer card.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill, with an amendment. States are required to implement an electronic benefit transfer system ('on-line' or 'off-line') before October 1, 2002, unless the Secretary waives the requirement because a State agency faces unusual barriers to implementation, and States are encouraged to implement an electronic benefit transfer system as soon as practicable. Subject to Federal standards, States are allowed to procure and implement an electronic benefit transfer system under terms, conditions, and design that they consider appropriate, and a new requirement for Federal procurement standards is added. A requirement is added for electronic benefit transfer standards following generally accepted standard operating rules based on commercial technology, the need to permit interstate operation and law enforcement, and the need to permit monitoring and investigations by authorized law enforcement officials. A requirement that regulations regarding replacement of benefits under an electronic benefit transfer system be similar to those in effect for a paper food stamp issuance system is added. Provisions in the House bill that are retained are: a provision deleting the requirement that electronic benefit transfer systems be cost-neutral in any one year, requirements as to measures to maximize security, and a provision requiring measures to permit electronic benefit systems to differentiate among food items (to the extent practicable). The House bill provision allowing the Secretary to waive Food Stamp Act provisions that prohibit effective implementation of electronic benefit transfer systems is deleted.

12. VALUE OF MINIMUM ALLOTMENT

Present law

The minimum monthly allotment for 1- and 2-person households is set at $10. It is scheduled to rise to $15 in fiscal year 1997 or 1998 (depending on food-price inflation). [Sec. 8(a)]

House bill

Sets the minimum monthly allotment for 1- and 2-person households at $10.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

13. INITIAL MONTH BENEFIT DETERMINATION

Present law

Recipient households not fulfilling eligibility recertification requirements in the last month of their certification period are allowed a 1-month "grace period" in which to fulfill the requirements before their benefits are pro-rated (reduced) to reflect the delay in meeting recertification requirements. [Sec. 8(c)(2)(B)]

House bill

For those who do not complete all eligibility recertification requirements in the last month of their certification period, but are then determined eligible after their certification period has expired, requires that they receive reduced benefits in the first month of their new certification period (i.e., their benefits would be pro-rated to the date they met the requirements and were judged eligible).

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

14. IMPROVING FOOD STAMP MANAGEMENT

A. QUALITY CONTROL FISCAL SANCTIONS

Present law

States are assessed fiscal sanctions if their "quality control" combined (overpayment and underpayment) error rate for a given fiscal year is higher than the national average for that year. The amount of each State's sanction is determined by using a "sliding scale" so that its penalty assessment reflects the degree to which its combined error rate exceeds the national average tolerance level. In effect, the current system requires that States be sanctioned for a portion of every benefit dollar that exceeds the tolerance level. For example, if the tolerance level were 10% and the State's combined error rate were 12%, or 2 percentage points (20%) above the tolerance level, the State would be assessed a penalty of 2% of benefits issued in the State that year (i.e., 20% of the excess above the threshold). [Sec. 16(c)]

House bill

Requires the assessment of fiscal sanctions if a State's combined error rate is above a tolerance level set at the lowest national average combined error rate ever achieved, plus 1 percentage point. States would be assessed a dollar penalty for each dollar in error above the tolerance level. For example, if a State's combined error rate were 2 percentage points above the lowest ever national average tolerance level, plus 1 percentage point, it would be assessed a penalty of 2% of benefits issued in the State that year.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

B. QUALITY CONTROL ADMINISTRATIVE RULES

Present law

Errors resulting from the application of new regulations are not included in a State's error rate for assessing sanctions during the first 120 days from required implementation of the regulations. [Sec. 16(c)(3)(A)]

Specific time frames are set out for completion of quality control reviews, determining final error rates, and various steps of the appeals process. Administrative law judges are required to consider all grounds for denying a sanction claim against a State, including contentions that a claim should be waived for good cause. [Sec. 16(c)(8)]

For judging to what degree a State should be sanctioned, "good cause" is defined as including: (1) a natural disaster or civil disorder that adversely affects food stamp operations, (2) a strike by State employees who are necessary for food stamp operations, (3) a significant growth in food stamp caseload, (4) a change in the Food Stamp program (or other Federal or State program) that has a substantial adverse impact on the management of the Food Stamp program, and (5) a significant circumstance beyond the control of a State agency. [Sec. 16(c)(9)]

If a State appeals a quality control sanction claim, interest on any unpaid portion of the claim accrues from the date of the decision on the administrative appeal or from a date that is 1 year after the date a bill for the sanction is received, whichever is earlier. [Sec. 13(a)(1)]

House bill

Bars inclusion of errors resulting from the application of new regulations for 60 days (or 90 days at the Secretary's discretion).

Deletes specific time frames for reviews, error rates, and the appeals process. Deletes the directive that administrative law judges consider all grounds for denying a sanction claim against a State.

Deletes the Act's definition of good cause for the quality control system.

Requires that interest on sanction claims begin to accrue from the date of the administrative appeal decision or 2 years after the sanction bill is received, whichever is earlier.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

15. WORK SUPPLEMENTATION OR SUPPORT PROGRAM

Present law

No provisions.

House bill

Permits States having a work supplementation or support program (under which public assistance benefits are provided to employers who hire public assistance recipients and then used to pay part of their wages) to include the cash value of a recipient's household food stamp benefits in the amount paid the employer to subsidize wages paid. Work supplementation/support programs would be required to meet standards set by the Secretary in order to avail themselves of the option to include food stamp benefits. The food stamp benefit value of the supplement could not be considered income for other purposes, and the household of the participating member would not receive regular food stamp allotments while the member was in a work supplementation/support program. States would be required to include any plans for including food stamp recipients in work supplementation or support programs in their State plans.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill, except (1) a qualified work supplementation/support program may not allow participation of any individual for longer than one year (unless the Secretary approves a longer period), and (2) a qualified work supplementation/support program must be used for hiring and employing new employees.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill, with an amendment to provide that (1) States must provide a description of how recipients in the program will, within a specific period of time, be moved to employment that is not supplemented or supported and (2) programs not displace employment of those who are not supplemented or supported.

16. OBLIGATIONS AND ALLOTMENTS

Present law

The Food Stamp Act authorizes to be appropriated such sums as are necessary for each fiscal year 1991–1995. [Sec. 18(a)]

House bill

Provides that the amount obligated under the Act will not be in excess of the cost estimate of the Congressional Budget Office for fiscal year 1996, with adjustments for additional fiscal years—in both cases reflecting amendments made by the Personal Responsibility Act.

Requires the Secretary to file reports (each February, April, and July) stating whether there is a need for additional obligational authority and authorizes the Secretary to provide recommendations as to how to equitably achieve spending reductions if allotments must be limited in any fiscal year.

Senate amendment

Authorizes such sums as are necessary through fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (sectio 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

17. REAUTHORIZATION OF PUERTO RICO NUTRITION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Present law

The Food Stamp Act requires the Secretary to pay specific sums for Puerto Rico's nutrition assistance block grant for fiscal year 1991–1995. The fiscal year 1995 amount is $1.143 billion. [Sec. 19(a)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the following payments for Puerto Rico's nutrition assistance block grant: $1.143 billion for each of fiscal year 1995 and fiscal year 1996, $1.182 billion for fiscal year 1997, $1.223 billion for fiscal year 1998, $1.266 billion for fiscal year 1999, $1.310 billion for fiscal year 2000, $1.343 billion for fiscal year 2001, and $1.376 billion for fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment to require the following payments for Puerto Rico's block grant: $1.143 billion for fiscal year 1996, $1.182 billion for fiscal year 1997, $1.223 billion for fiscal year 1998, $1.266 billion for fiscal year 1999, $1.310 billion for fiscal year 2000, $1.357 billion for fiscal year 2001, and $1.404 billion for fiscal year 2002.

18. AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH AUTHORIZATION PERIODS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Requires the Secretary to establish specific time periods during which retail food stores' and wholesale food concerns' authorization to accept and redeem food stamp coupons (or redeem food stamp benefits through an electronic benefit transfer system) will be valid.

Senate amendment

Permits the Secretary to issue regulations establishing specific time periods during which authorization to accept and redeem food stamp coupons will be valid.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

19. CONDITION PRECEDENT FOR APPROVAL OF RETAIL FOOD STORES AND WHOLESALE FOOD CONCERNS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Provides that no retail food stores or wholesale food concerns be approved for participation in the Food Stamp program unless an Agriculture Department employee (or, whenever possible, a State or local government official designated by the Department) has visited it.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill, with an amendment limiting stores and food concerns that must be visited to those of a type, determined by the Secretary, based on factors that include size, location, and type of items sold.

20. WAITING PERIOD FOR RETAIL FOOD STORES AND WHOLESALE FOOD CONCERNS THAT ARE DENIED APPROVAL TO ACCEPT COUPONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Provides that retail food stores and wholesale food concerns that have failed to be approved for participation in the Food Stamp program may not submit a new application for approval for 6 months from the date they receive a notice of denial. Current law provisions granting denied retailers and wholesalers a hearing on a refusal are retained.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill, except that stores and concerns may not submit a new application for 6 months from the date of the denial.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment providing that stores and concerns denied approval because they do not meet the Secretary's approval criteria may not, for at least 6 months, submit a new application. The Secretary is allowed to establish longer waiting periods, including permanent disqualification, that reflect the severity of the basis for denial.

21. DISQUALIFICATION OF RETAIL FOOD STORES AND WHOLESALE FOOD CONCERNS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Requires that a retail food store or wholesale food concern that is disqualified from participation in the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) also be disqualified from participating in the Food Stamp program for the period of time it is disqualified from the WIC program.

Senate amendment

Requires the Secretary to issue regulations providing criteria for disqualifying from food stamps retail food stores and wholesale food concerns disqualified from the WIC program. Disqualification must be for the same period as under the WIC program, may begin at a later date, and would not be subject to food stamp administrative/judicial review procedures.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a technical amendment.

22. AUTHORITY TO SUSPEND STORES VIOLATING PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS PENDING ADMINISTRATIVE AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Requires that, where a retail food store or wholesale food concern has been permanently disqualified (for its third offense or for certain instances of trafficking), the disqualification period will be effective from the date it receives notice of disqualification, pending administrative and judicial review.

Senate amendment

Permits regulations establishing criteria under which authorization of a retail food store or wholesale food concern may be suspended at the time the store/concern is initially found to have committed a violation that would result in permanent disqualification; the suspension may coincide with the period of administrative/judicial review. The Secretary would not be liable for the value of any lost sales during any suspension/disqualification period.

Requires notice in suspension cases. Stipulates that a suspension period remains in effect pending administrative/judicial review and that the suspension period be part of any disqualification imposed.

Removes provisions for courts temporarily staying administrative actions against stores, concerns, and States pending judicial appeal.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that any permanent disqualification of a store or concern be effective from the date the notice of disqualification is received. If the disqualification is reversed through administrative or judicial review, the Secretary is not liable for the value of lost sales during the disqualification period.

23. CRIMINAL FORFEITURE

Present law

"Administrative forfeiture" rules allow the Secretary to subject property involved in a program violation to forfeiture to the United States. [Sec. 15(g)]

House bill

Establishes "criminal forfeiture" rules. Requires courts, in imposing sentence on those convicted of trafficking in food stamp benefits, to order that the person forfeit property to the United States (in addition to any other sentence imposed). Property subject to forfeiture would include all property (real and personal) used in a transaction (or attempted transaction) to commit (or facilitate the commission of) a trafficking violation (other than a misdemeanor); proceeds traceable to the violation also would be subject to forfeiture. An owner's property interest would not be subject to forfeiture if the owner establishes that the violation was committed without the owner's knowledge or consent. (p. 246)

Requires that the proceeds from any sale of forfeited properties, and any money forfeited, be used (1) to reimburse the Justice Department for costs incurred in initiating and completing forfeiture proceedings, (2) to reimburse the Agriculture Department's Office of Inspector General for costs incurred in the law enforcement effort that led to the forfeiture, (3) to reimburse Federal or State law enforcement agencies for costs incurred in the law enforcement effort that led to the forfeiture, and (4) by the Secretary to carry out store approval, reauthorization, and compliance activities.

Senate amendment

Removes provisions for administrative forfeiture for property "intended to be furnished" in trafficking cases.

Establishes "criminal forfeiture" rules similar to those in the House bill, but applied only in trafficking cases involving benefits of $5,000 or more. Property subject to forfeiture would include: (1) food stamp benefits, and any property constituting, derived from, or traceable to any proceeds obtained directly or indirectly as the result of the violation and (2) food stamp benefits, and any property used or intended to be used to commit or facilitate the violation.

Food stamp benefits and property subject to criminal forfeiture, any seizure or disposition of the benefits/property, and any administrative/ judicial proceeding relating to the benefits/property would be subject to forfeiture provisions of the Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (where consistent with Food Stamp Act provisions). [Note: No specific Food Stamp Act provisions for use of the proceeds from forfeited property are included]

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

24. EXPANDED DEFINITION OF "COUPON"

Present law

The Act defines "coupon" to mean any coupon, stamp, or type of certificate issued under the provisions of the Food Stamp Act. [Sec. 3(d)]

House bill

In order to expand the types of items to which trafficking penalties apply, revises the current definition of "coupon" to include authorization cards, cash or checks issued in lieu of coupons, and "access devices" for electronic benefit transfer systems (including electronic benefit transfer cards and personal identification numbers).

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

25. DOUBLED PENALTIES FOR VIOLATING FOOD STAMP REQUIREMENTS

Present law

The disqualification penalty for the first intentional violation of program requirements is 6 months. The penalty for a second intentional violation (and the first violation involving trading of a controlled substance) is 1 year. [Sec. 6(b)(1)]

House bill

Increases the disqualification penalty for a first intentional violation to 1 year. Increases the disqualification penalty for a second intentional violation (and the first violation involving a controlled substance) to 2 years.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

26. DISQUALIFICATION OF CONVICTED INDIVIDUALS

Present law

Permanent disqualification is required for the third intentional violation of program requirements, the second violation involving trading of a controlled substance, and the first violation involving trading of firearms, ammunition, or explosives. [Sec. 6(b)(1)]

House bill

Adds a requirement for permanent disqualification of persons convicted of trafficking in food stamp benefits where the benefits trafficked have a value of $500 or more.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill, with a technical amendment.

27. CLAIMS COLLECTION

A. FEDERAL INCOME TAX REFUNDS

Present law

Otherwise uncollected overissued benefits may, except for claims arising out of State agency error, may be recovered from Federal pay or pensions. [Sec. 13(d) and Sec. 11(e)(8)]

House bill

Requires collection of otherwise uncollected overissued benefits, other than those arising out of State agency error, from Federal pay or pensions and from Federal income tax refunds.

Senate amendment

Permits collection of all otherwise uncollected overissued benefits from Federal pay or pensions and from Federal income tax refunds.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

B. Authority to Collect Overissuances

Present law

State collection of overissued benefits is limited in certain circumstances. In the case of overissuances due to an intentional program violation, households must agree to repayment by either a reduction in future benefits or cash repayment; States also are required to collect overissuances to these households through other means, such as tax refund or unemployment compensation collections (if a cash repayment or reduction is not forthcoming), unless they demonstrate that the other means are not cost effective. In cases of overissuance because of inadvertent household "error," States must collect the overissuance through a reduction in future benefits—except that households must be given 10 days' notice to elect another means, and collections are limited to 10% of the monthly allotment or $10 a month (whichever would result in faster collection)—and may use other means of collection. In cases of overissuances because of State agency error, States may request repayment or use other means of collection (not including reduction in future benefits). [Sec. 13(b)] States may retain 25% of 'nonfraud' collections not caused by State error and 50% of 'fraud' collections (increased from 10% and 25% on October 1, 1995). [Sec. 16(a)]

House bill

No provisions.

Senate amendment

Replaces existing overissuance collection rules with provisions requiring States to collect any overissuance of benefits by reducing future benefits, withholding unemployment compensation, recovering from Federal pay or income tax refunds, or any other means—unless the State demonstrates that all of the means are not cost effective. Bars the use of future benefit reductions as a claims collection mechanism if it would cause a hardship on the household (as determined by the State) and limits benefit reductions (absent intentional program violations) to the greater of 10% of the monthly benefit or $10 a month. Provides that States must collect overissued benefits in accordance with State-established requirements for notice, electing a means of payment, and setting a schedule for payment.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment (1) deleting the specific bar against collections in hardship cases and (2) setting the percentage of collections (other than in cases of State agency error) that a State may retain at a uniform 25%.

28. DENIAL OF FOOD STAMP BENEFITS FOR 10 YEARS TO INDIVIDUALS FOUND TO HAVE FRAUDULENTLY MISREPRESENTED RESIDENCE IN ORDER TO OBTAIN BENEFITS SIMULTANEOUSLY IN 2 OR MORE STATES

Present law

Disqualification periods ranging from 6 months to permanent disqualification are prescribed for intentional violations of Food Stamp program requirements. [Sec. 6(b)]

House bill

Disqualifies from food stamps for 10 years an individual found to have fraudulently misrepresented the individual's place of residence in order to receive food stamp, Medicaid, TANF, or Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits in two or more States.

Senate amendment

Disqualifies from food stamps permanently an individual found to have fraudulently misrepresented the individual's place of residence in order to receive food stamps in two or more States.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment disqualifying from food stamps for 10 years an individual found by a State agency or court to have made a fraudulent misrepresentation of identity or residence in order to receive multiple benefits. The conferees note that State agency hearing processes have sufficient recipient protections to warrant a decision to impose a 10-year disqualification in these cases.

29. DISQUALIFICATION RELATING TO CHILD SUPPORT ARREARS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Disqualifies individuals during any period the individual has an unpaid liability that is under a court child support order, unless the court is allowing delayed payments.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill, except that States are permitted to apply a child support arrears disqualification and compliance with a child support agency payment plan also exempts individuals from disqualification.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment that requires disqualification.

30. ELIMINATION OF FOOD STAMP BENEFITS WITH RESPECT TO FUGITIVE FELONS AND PROBATION AND PAROLE VIOLATORS

A. Disqualification of Fleeing Felons

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Disqualifies individuals while they are (1) fleeing to avoid prosecution or custody after conviction for a crime (or crime attempt) which is a felony or (2) violating a condition of parole under Federal or State law.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a technical amendment.

B. Exchange of Information

Present law

Requires State agencies to immediately report to the Immigration and Naturalization Service a determination that a food stamp household member is ineligible for food stamps because the individual is present in the United States in violation of the Immigration and Nationality Act. [Sec. 11(e)(17)]

House bill

Requires State food stamp agencies to make available to law enforcement officers the address of a food stamp recipient if the officer furnishes the recipient's name and notifies the agency that (1) the individual is fleeing to avoid prosecution or custody for a felony crime (or attempt) or the individual has information necessary for the officer to conduct official duties, (2) the location or apprehension of the individual is within the officer's official duties, and (3) the request is made in the proper exercise of official duties.

Senate amendment

Similar to the House bill, requires State food stamp agencies to make available to law enforcement officers the address, social security number, and (when available) photograph of a food stamp recipient if the officer furnishes the recipient's name and notifies the agency as stipulated in the House bill.

Requires State agencies to furnish the Immigration and Naturalization Service with the name of, address of, and identifying information on any individual the agency knows is unlawfully in the United States.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

31. EFFECTIVE DATES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Except for amendments dealing with the Food Stamp program's quality control system (effective October 1, 1994), the food stamp and commodity distribution program amendments made by the Personal Responsibility Act would be effective October 1, 1995.

Senate amendment

Provides that Food Stamp Act amendments would be effective October 1, 1995.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement provides that (1) provisions affecting deduction levels are effective October 1, 1996, and (2) all other provisions are effective on enactment.

32. SENSE OF CONGRESS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Provides that it is the sense of Congress that States operating electronic benefit transfer systems to provide food stamp benefits should operate systems that are compatible with each other.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

33. DEFICIT REDUCTION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Provides that it is the sense of the House Committee on Agriculture that reductions in outlays resulting from Food Stamp Act (and commodity distribution program) provisions of the Personal Responsibility Act not be taken into account for purposes of Section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act (relating to enforcement of "pay-as-you-go" provisions of the Budget Act).

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

34. CERTIFICATION PERIOD

Present law

For households subject to periodic (monthly) reporting of their circumstances, eligibility certification periods must be 6–12 months, except that the Secretary may waive this rule to improve program administration. For households receiving federally aided public assistance or general assistance, certification periods must coincide with the certification periods for the other public assistance. For other households, certification periods generally must be not less than 3 months—but they can be (1) up to 12 months for those consisting entirely of unemployable, elderly, or primarily self-employed persons or (2) as short as circumstances require for those with a substantial likelihood of frequent changes in income or other household circumstances and for any household on initial eligibility determination (as judged by the Secretary). The Secretary may waive the maximum 12-month limit to improve program administration. [Sec. 3(c)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Replaces existing provisions as to certification periods with a requirement that certification periods not exceed 12 months—but can be up to 24 months if all adult household members are elderly, disabled, or primarily self-employed.

Requires State agencies to have at least 1 personal contact with each certified household every 12 months.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment allowing certification periods of up to 24 months for households whose adult members are all elderly or disabled and deleting the reference to a "personal" contact.

35. TREATMENT OF CHILDREN LIVING AT HOME

Present law

Parents and their children 21 years of age or younger who live together must apply for food stamps as a single household (thereby reducing aggregate household benefits)—except for children who are themselves parents living with their children and children who are married and living with their spouses. [Sec. 3(i)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Removes the existing exception for children who are themselves parents living with their children and children who are married and living with their spouses.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

36. OPTIONAL ADDITIONAL CRITERIA FOR SEPARATE HOUSEHOLD DETERMINATIONS

Present law

Certain persons who live together may apply for food stamps as separate households (thereby increasing aggregate household benefits) if they (1) are unrelated and purchase food and prepare meals separately or (2) are related but are not spouses or children living with their parents (See item 35). In addition, elderly persons who live with others and cannot purchase food and prepare meals separately because of a substantial disability may apply a separate households as long as their co-residents' income is below prescribed limits (165% of the Federal poverty income guidelines). [Sec. 3(i)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Permits States to establish criteria that prescribe when individuals living together, and would otherwise be allowed to apply as separate households, must apply as a single household (without regard to common purchase of food and preparation of meals).

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

37. DEFINITION OF HOMELESS INDIVIDUAL

Present law

For food stamp eligibility and benefit determination purposes, a "homeless individual" is a person lacking a fixed/regular nighttime residence or one whose primary nighttime residence is a shelter, a residence intended for those to be institutionalized, a temporary accommodation in the residence of another, or a public or private place not designed to be a regular sleeping accommodation for humans. [Sec. 3(s)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides that persons whose primary nighttime residence is a temporary accommodation in the home of another may only be considered homeless if the accommodation is for no more than 90 days.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

38. STATE OPTIONS IN REGULATIONS

Present law

The Secretary is directed to establish uniform national standards of eligibility for food stamps (with certain variations allowed for Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, and the Virgin Islands) and in other cases (e.g., imposition of monthly reporting requirements). States may not impose any other standards of eligibility as a condition of participation in the program. [Sec. 5(b)]

House bill

No directly comparable provision. [Note: See item 3.]

Senate amendment

Explicitly permits non-uniform standards of eligibility.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

39. EARNINGS OF STUDENTS

Present law

The earnings of an elementary/secondary student are disregarded as income until the student's 22nd birthday. [Sec. 5(d)(7)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires that earnings of an elementary/secondary student be counted as income once the student turns age 20.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment requiring that earnings be counted for students who are 19 or younger.

40. BENEFITS FOR ALIENS

A. DEEMING SPONSORS' INCOME AND RESOURCES

Present law

A portion of the income and resources of the sponsor of a lawfully admitted alien must be deemed as available to the sponsored alien for 3 years after the alien's entry. Income is deemed to the extent it exceeds the appropriate food stamp income eligibility limit (130% of the Federal income poverty guidelines); liquid resources are deemed to the extent they exceed $1,500. [Sec. 5(i)]

House bill

No directly comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Extends the deeming period for sponsored legal aliens to 5 years from lawful admittance or the period of time agreed to in the sponsor's affidavit, whichever is longer. [Note: See conference comparison for title IV in the House bill and title V in the Senate amendment.]

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

B. COUNTING ALIENS' INCOME AND RESOURCES

Present law

The income (less a pro rata share) and all resources of aliens who are ineligible for food stamps under provisions of the Food Stamp Act are counted as income/ resources to the rest of the household living with the alien. [Sec. 6(f)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Permits States to count all of the income and resources of aliens ineligible for food stamps under the provisions of the Food Stamp Act as income/ resources to the rest of the household.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

41. COOPERATION WITH CHILD SUPPORT AGENCIES

A. CUSTODIAL PARENTS

Present law

No provisions.

House bill

No provisions.

Senate amendment

Permits States to disqualify custodial parents of children under the age of 18 who have an absent parent unless the custodial parent cooperates with the State child support agency in establishing the child's paternity and obtaining support for the child and the custodial parent. Cooperation would not be required if the State finds there is good cause (in accordance with Federal standards taking into account the child's best interest). Fees or other costs for services could not be charged.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

B. NON-CUSTODIAL PARENTS

Present law

No provisions.

House bill

No provisions.

Senate amendment

Permits States to disqualify putative or identified non-custodial parents of children under 18 if they refuse to cooperate with the State child support agency in establishing the child's paternity and providing support for the child. The Secretary and the Secretary of Health and Human Services would develop guidelines for what constitutes a refusal to cooperate, and States would develop procedures (using these guidelines) for determining whether there has been a refusal to cooperate. Fees or other costs for services could not be charged. States would be required to provide safeguards to restrict the use of information collected by the child support agency to the purposes for which it was collected.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

42. OPTIONAL COMBINED ALLOTMENT FOR EXPEDITED HOUSEHOLDS

Present law

For households applying after the 15th day of the month, States may provide an allotment that is the aggregate of the initial (pro-rated) allotment and the first regular allotment—but combined allotments must be provided to households applying after 15th of the month who are entitled to expedited service. [Sec. 8(c)(3)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Makes provision of combined allotments a State option both for regular and expedited service applicants.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

43. FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH OTHER WELFARE AND PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Present law

Households penalized for an intentional failure to comply with a Federal, State, or local welfare program may not, for the duration of the penalty, receive an increased food stamp allotment because their welfare income has been reduced. [Sec. 8(d)]

[Note: This has been interpreted by regulation to apply only to reductions in welfare income due to repayment of overpayments resulting from a welfare violation, although a revision of the regulation is scheduled.]

House bill

[Note: See item 4C.]

Senate amendment

Bars increased food stamp allotments because the benefits of a household are reduced under a Federal, State, or local welfare or public assistance program for failure to perform a required action. In carrying out this requirement, States may, in determining food stamp allotments for the duration of the public assistance reduction, use the household's pre-reduction welfare benefits.

Permits States also to reduce the household's food stamp allotment by up to 25%. If the allotment is reduced for failure to perform an action required under a family assistance block grant program, the State may use the rules and procedures of that program to reduce the food stamp allotment.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment changing references to welfare or public assistance programs to references to mean-tested public assistance programs.

44. ALLOTMENTS FOR HOUSEHOLDS RESIDING IN INSTITUTIONS

Present law

Homeless shelters and residential drug or alcoholic treatment centers may be designated as recipients' authorized representatives. [Note: In the case of residential treatment centers, benefits generally are provided to the center.]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Permits States to divide a month's food stamp benefits between the shelter/center and an individual who leaves the shelter/center.

Permits States to require residents of shelters/centers to designate the shelter/center as authorized representative.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment deleting homeless shelters from those institutions covered by the amendment.

45. OPERATION OF FOOD STAMP OFFICES

A. STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS

Present law

States must:

(1) allow households contacting the food stamp office in person during office hours to make an oral/written request for aid and receive and file an application on the same day;

(2) use a simplified, uniform federally designed application, unless a waiver is approved;

(3) include certain, specific information in applications;

(4) waive in-person interviews under certain circumstances (they may use telephone interviews or home visits instead);

(5) provide for telephone contact and mail application by households with transportation or similar difficulties;

(6) require an adult representative of the household to certify as to household members' citizenship/alien status;

(6) provide a method of certifying and issuing benefits to homeless households;

(7) assist households in obtaining verification and completing applications;

(8) not require additional verification of currently verified information (unless there is reason to believe that the information is inaccurate, incomplete, or inconsistent);

(9) not deny an application solely because a non-household member fails to cooperate;

(10) process applications if the household meets cooperation requirements;

(11) provide households (at certification and recertification) with a statement of reporting responsibilities;

(12) provide a toll-free or local telephone number at which households may reach State personnel;

(13) display and make available nutrition information; and

(14) use mail issuance in rural areas where low-income households face substantial difficulties in obtaining transportation (with exceptions for high mail losses). [Sec. 11(e)(2), (3), (14), & (25)]

House bill

No provisions.

Senate amendment

Replaces noted existing State plan requirements with requirements that the State:

(1) establish procedures governing the operation of food stamp offices that it determines best serve households in the State, including those with special needs (such as households with elderly or disabled members, those in rural areas, the homeless, households residing on reservations, and households speaking a language other than English);

(2) provide timely, accurate, and fair service to applicants and participants;

(3) permit applicants to apply and participate on the same day they first contact the food stamp office during office hours; and

(4) consider an application filed on the date the applicant submits an application that contains the applicant's name, address, and signature.

Permits States to establish operating procedures that vary for local food stamp offices to reflect regional and local differences.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. APPLICATION AND DENIAL PROCEDURES

Present law

A single interview for determining AFDC and food stamp benefits is required. Food stamp applications generally are required to be contained in public assistance applications, and applications and information on how to apply for food stamps must be provided local general assistance applicants. Applicants (including those who have recently lost or been denied public assistance) must be certified eligible for food stamps based on the information in their public assistance casefile (to the extent it is reasonably verified).

No household may be terminated from or denied food stamps solely on the basis that it has been terminated from or denied other public assistance and without a separate food stamp eligibility determination.

House bill

No provisions.

Senate amendment

Deletes noted existing requirements for single interviews, applications, and food stamp determinations based on public assistance information.

Permits disqualification for food stamps based on another public assistance program's disqualification for failure to comply with its rules or regulations.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

46. STATE EMPLOYEE AND TRAINING STANDARDS

Present law

States must employ agency personnel doing food stamp certifications in accordance with current Federal "merit system" standards. States must provide continuing, comprehensive training for all certification personnel. States may undertake intensive training of certification personnel to ensure they are qualified for certifying farming households. States may provide or contract for the provision of training/assistance to persons working with volunteer or nonprofit organizations that provide outreach and eligibility screening activities. [Sec. 11(e)(6)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Deletes noted existing provisions for merit system standards and training.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

47. EXPEDITED COUPON SERVICE

Present law

States must provide expedited benefits to applicant households that (1) have gross income under $150 a month (or are "destitute" migrant or seasonal farmworker households) and have liquid resources of no more than $100, (2) homeless households, and (3) households that have combined gross income and liquid resources less than the household's monthly shelter expenses.

Expedited service means providing an allotment no later than 5 days after application. [Sec. 11(e)(9)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Deletes noted existing requirements to provide expedited service to the homeless and households with shelter expenses in excess of their income/resources.

Lengthens the period in which expedited benefits must be provided to 7 business days.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment providing that expedited benefits must be provided in 7 calendar days.

48. FAIR HEARINGS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Permits households to withdraw fair hearing requests orally or in writing. If it is an oral request, the State must provide a written notice to the household confirming the request and providing the household with another chance to request a hearing.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment providing that permission for households to withdraw fair hearing requests orally or in writing is a State option.

49. INCOME AND ELIGIBILITY VERIFICATION SYSTEM

Present law

States must use the "income and eligibility verification systems" established under Sec. 1137 of the Social Security Act to assist in verifying household circumstances; this includes a system for verifying financial circumstances (IEVS) and a system for verifying alien status (SAVE). [Sec. 11(e)(19) of the Food Stamp Act and Sec. 1137 of the Social Security Act.]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Makes use of IEVS and SAVE optional with the States.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

50. TERMINATION OF FEDERAL MATCH FOR OPTIONAL INFORMATION ACTIVITIES

Present law

If a State opts to conduct informational ("outreach") activities for the food stamp program, the Federal Government shares half the cost. [Sec. 11(e)(1) & Sec. 16(a)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Terminates the Federal share of optional State outreach activities. [Note: Sec. 333(b) makes a technical amendment to Sec. 16(g) of the Food Stamp Act.]

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment that does not terminate the Federal share of optional State outreach activities but bar a Federal share for 'recruitment activities.'

51. STANDARDS FOR ADMINISTRATION

Present law

The Secretary is required to (1) establish standards for efficient and effective administration of the program, including standards for review of food stamp office hours to ensure that employed individuals are adequately served, and (2) instruct States to submit reports on administrative actions taken to meet the standards. [Sec. 16(b)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Deletes provisions on standards for administration.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

52. WAIVER AUTHORITY

Present law

The Secretary may waive Food Stamp Act requirements to the degree necessary to conduct pilot/demonstration projects, but no project may be implemented that would lower or further restrict food stamp income/resource eligibility standards or benefit levels (other than certain projects involving the payment of the average value of allotments in cash and certain work program demonstrations). [Sec. 17(b)(1)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Replaces existing waiver authority with authority for the Secretary to waive Food Stamp Act requirements to the extent necessary to conduct pilot/experimental projects , including those designed to test innovative welfare reform, promote work, and allow conformity with other assistance programs.

Requires that any project involving the payment of benefits in the form of cash maintain the average value of allotments for affected households.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

53. AUTHORIZATION OF PILOT PROJECTS

Present law

Existing pilot projects for the payment of food stamp benefits in the form of cash to households composed of elderly persons or SSI recipients are authorized to continue through October 1, 1995, if a State requests. [Sec. 17(b)(1)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Extends the authorization for elderly/SSI cash-out projects through October 1, 2002.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

54. RESPONSE TO WAIVERS

Present law

No provisions.

House bill

No provisions.

Senate amendment

Requires that, not later than 60 days after receiving a demonstration project waiver request, the Secretary (1) approve the request, (2) deny the request and explain any modifications needed for approval, (3) deny the request and explain the grounds for denial, or (4) ask for clarification of the request. If a response is not forthcoming in 60 days, the waiver would be considered approved. If a waiver request is denied, the Secretary must provide a copy of the waiver request and the grounds for denial to the House and Senate Agriculture Committees.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

55. PRIVATE SECTOR EMPLOYMENT INITIATIVES

Present law

No provisions.

House bill

[Note: See item 4E.]

Senate amendment

Allows certain States to operate "private sector employment initiatives" under which food stamp benefits could be paid in cash to some participating households. States would be eligible to operate private sector employment initiatives if not less than 50% of the households that received food stamp benefits in the summer of 1993 also received AFDC benefits. Households would be eligible to receive cash payments if an adult member so elects and (1) has worked in unsubsidized private sector employment for not less than the 90 preceding days, (2) has earned not less than $350 a month from that employment, (3) is eligible to receive family assistance block grant benefits (or was eligible when cash payments were first received and is no longer eligible because of earned income), and (4) is continuing to earn not less than $350 a month from private sector employment. States operating a private sector employment initiative for 2 years must provide a written evaluation of the impact of cash assistance (the content of the evaluation would be determined by the State).

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment requiring States that select this option to increase benefits to compensate for State or local sales taxes on food purchases.

56. OPTIONAL BLOCK GRANTS

Present law

No provisions.

House bill

[Note: Sec. 556 (b) of the House bill adds a new section 25 to the Food Stamp Act containing provisions for an optional block grant.]

Allows States that have fully implemented an electronic benefit transfer system to elect an annual block grant to operate a low-income nutrition assistance program in lieu of the food stamp program.

Grants funds to States electing a block grant—States would receive (1) the greater of: the total fiscal year 1994 amount they received as food stamp benefits; or the fiscal years 1992–1994 average they received as food stamp benefits and (2) the greater of: the fiscal year 1994 Federal share of administrative costs; or the fiscal years 1992–1994 average they received as the Federal share of administrative costs. Grant payments would be made at times and in a manner determined by the Secretary.

Requires annual submission of a State plan specifying the manner in which the block grant nutrition assistance program will be conducted. The plan must:

(1) certify that the State has implemented a State-wide electronic benefit transfer system under Food Stamp Act conditions;

(2) designate a single State agency responsible for administration;

(3) assess the food and nutrition needs of needy persons in the State;

(4) limit assistance to the purchase of food;

(5) describe the persons to whom aid will be provided;

(6) assure that assistance will be provided to the most needy;

(7) assure that applicants for assistance have adequate notice and fair hearing rights comparable to those under the regular food stamp program;

(8) provide that there be no discrimination on the basis of race, sex, religion, national origin, or political beliefs; and

(9) include other information as required by the Secretary.

In general, permits block grant payments to be expended only in the fiscal year in which they are distributed to a State. States may reserve up to 5% of a fiscal year's grant to provide assistance in subsequent years, but reserved funds may not total more than 20% of the total grant received for a fiscal year.

Requires States to keep records concerning block grant program operations and make them available to the Secretary and the Comptroller General.

If the Secretary finds there is substantial failure by a State to comply, requires the Secretary to (1) suspend all or part of a grant payment until the State is determined in substantial compliance, (2) withhold all/part of a grant payment until the Secretary determines that there is no long a failure to comply, or (3) terminate the State's authority to operate a nutrition assistance block grant program.

Requires States to provide for biennial audits of block grant expenditures, provide the Secretary with the audit, and make it available for public inspection.

Requires an annual "activities report" comparing actual spending for nutrition assistance in each fiscal year with the spending predicted in the State plan; the report must be made available for public inspection.

Requires that whoever knowingly and willfully embezzles, misapplies, steals, or obtains by fraud, false statement, or forgery any funds or property provided or financed under a nutrition assistance block grant be fined not more than $10,000, imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

Requires that the State plan provide that there will be no discrimination on the basis of race, sex, religion, national origin, or political beliefs.

Requires that all assistance provided under the block grant be limited to the purchase of food. [Note: Because the State would have fully implemented an electronic benefit transfer system, benefits would be provided through these systems.]

Senate amendment

[Note: Sec. 343(a) of the Senate amendment adds a new section 25 to the Food Stamp Act containing provisions for an optional block grant]

Requires the Secretary to establish a program to make grants to States, in lieu of the food stamp program, to provide food assistance to needy individuals and families, wage subsidies and payments in return for work for needy individuals, funds to operate an employment and training program for needy individuals, and funds for administrative costs incurred in providing assistance.

Grants funds to States electing a block grant—States would receive (1) the greater of: the total fiscal year 1994 amount they received as food stamp benefits; or the fiscal years 1992–1994 average they received as food stamp benefits and (2) the greater of: the fiscal year 1994 Federal share of administrative costs and employment/ training program costs; or the fiscal years 1992–1994 average they received as the Federal share of administrative costs and employment/training program costs. If total allotments for a fiscal year would exceed the amount of funds made available to provide them, the Secretary is required to reduce allotments on a pro rata basis to the extent necessary. Grant payments would be made by issuing 1 or more letters of credit, with necessary adjustments for overpayments and underpayments.

Requires annual submission of a State plan containing information as required by the Secretary. The plan:

(1) must have an assurance that the State will comply with block grant requirements;

(2) must identify a "lead agency" responsible for administration, development of the plan, and coordination with other programs;

(3) must provide that the State will use grant funds as follows:

(a) to give food assistance to needy persons (other than certain residents of institutions);

(b) at State option, to provide wage subsidies and workfare for needy persons;

(c) to administer an employment and training program for needy persons (and provide reimbursement for support services); and

(d) to pay administrative costs incurred in providing assistance;

(4) must describe how the program will serve specific groups of persons (and how that treatment will differ from the regular food stamp program) including the elderly, migrants or seasonal farmworkers, the homeless, those under the supervision of institutions, those with earnings, and Indians;

(5) must provide that benefits be available statewide;

(6) must provide that applicants and recipients are provided with notice and fair hearing rights;

(7) may coordinate block grant assistance with aid under the family assistance block grant;

(8) may reduce food assistance or otherwise penalize persons or families penalized for violating family assistance block grant rules;

(9) must assess the food and nutrition needs of needy persons in the State;

(10) must describe the income and resource eligibility limits established under the block grant;

(11) must establish a system to ensure that no persons receive block grant benefits in more than 1 jurisdiction;

(12) must provide for safeguarding and restricting the use and disclosure of information about recipients; and

(13) must contain other information as required by the Secretary.

Same as the House bill, except that States may reserve up to 10% a year and reserved funds may not total more than 30% of the total grant received.

Requires the Secretary to review and monitor State compliance with block grant rules and State plans. If the Secretary (after notice and opportunity for a hearing) finds that there has been a failure to substantially comply with the State's plan or the provisions of the block grant, the Secretary must notify the State and no further payments would be made until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer a failure to comply or that noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

Allows the Secretary (in cases of noncompliance) to impose other appropriate sanctions on States in addition to, or in lieu of, withholding block grant payments; these sanctions may include recoupment of money improperly spent and disqualification from receipt of a block grant. The Secretary also is required to establish procedures for (1) receiving, processing, and determining the validity of complaints about States' failure to comply with block grant obligations and (2) imposing sanctions. In addition, the Secretary is permitted to withhold not more than 5% of a State's annual allotment if the State does not use an "income and eligibility verification system" established under Sec. 1137 of the Social Security Act.

Requires States to arrange for annual independent audits of block grant expenditures. Each annual audit must include an audit of payment accuracy based on a statistically valid sample and be submitted to the State legislature and the Secretary. States must repay any amounts the audit determines have not been expended in accordance with the State plan, or the Secretary can offset amounts against any other amount paid the State under the block grant.

Provides that a State that elects a food assistance block grant option may subsequently reverse that choice only once.

Finds that the Senate has adopted a resolution that Congress should not enact/adopt any legislation that will increase the number of hungry children, that it is not its intent to cause more children to be hungry, that the food stamp program serves to prevent child hunger, and that a State's election for a food assistance block grant should not serve to increase the number hungry children in the State.

Provides that a State's election for a food assistance block grant be permanently revoked 180 days after the Secretary of Health and Human Services has made 2 successive findings (over a 6-year period) that the "hunger rate" among children is significantly higher in a food assistance block grant State than it would have been if the State had not made the choice.

Specifies procedures for a finding that a State's child hunger rate has risen significantly. Every 3 years, the Secretary must develop data and report with respect to any significant increase in child hunger in States that have elected a food assistance block grant. The Secretary must provide the report to States that have elected a block grant and must provide States with a higher child hunger rate with an opportunity to respond. If the State's response does not result in a reversal of the Secretary's determination that the child hunger rate is significantly higher than it would have been without the State's block grant election, the Secretary must publish a determination that the State's block grant choice is revoked.

Requires States to designate a lead administrative agency. The agency must administer (either directly or through other agencies) the food assistance block grant aid, develop the State plan, hold at least 1 hearing for public comment on the plan, and coordinate food assistance block grant aid with other government assistance. In developing the State plan, the lead agency must consult with local governments and private sector organizations so that services are provided in a manner appropriate to local populations.

Provides that nothing in the new food assistance block grant section of the Food Stamp Act entitles anyone to assistance or limits the right of States to impose additional limits or conditions.

Requires that no funds under the food assistance block grant be spent for the purchase or improvement of land, or for the purchase, construction, or permanent improvement of any building/facility.

Requires that no alien otherwise ineligible to participate in the regular food stamp program be eligible to participate in a food assistance block grant program, and that the income of the sponsor of an alien be counted as in the regular food stamp program.

Requires that (1) no person be eligible to receive food assistance block grant benefits if they do not meet regular food stamp program work requirements and (2) that each State operating a food assistance block grant implement an employment and training program under regular food stamp program rules.

Bars the Secretary from providing assistance for any program, project, or activity under a food assistance block grant if any person with operational responsibilities discriminates because of race, religion, color, national origin, sex, or disability. Also provides for enforcement through title VI of the Civil Rights Act.

Requires that, in each fiscal year, at least 80% of Federal funds expended under a State's block grant be for food assistance and not more than 6% be for administrative expenses. A State could provide food assistance to meet the 80% requirement in any manner it determines appropriate (such as electronic benefit transfers, coupons, or direct provision of commodities), but "food assistance" would be limited to assistance that may only be used to obtain food (as defined in the Food Stamp Act).

Provides that the Secretary may conduct research on the effects and costs of a State food assistance block grant program.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill with and amendment. States that meet one of three conditions may elect to receive an annual block grant to operate a food assistance program for needy persons in lieu of the food stamp program. Eligible States may opts for a block grant at any time, but, if the State chooses to withdraw from the block grant or is disqualfied, it may not again opt for a block grant. Eligible States include: (1) those that have fully implemented a statewide electronic benefit transfer system, (2) those for which the dollar value of erroneous benefit and eligibility determinations (overpayments, payments to ineligibles, and underpayments) in the food stamp program or their food assistance block grant program is 6% of benefits issued or less (a 'payment error rate' of 6% or less), and (3) those with a payment error rate higher than 6% that agree to contribute, from non-Federal sources, a dollar amount equal to the difference between their payment error rate and a 6% rate to pay for benefits and administration of their food assistance block grant program. A States's payment error rate for block grant purposes is the most recent rate available, as determined by the Secretary.

States electing a block grant would be provided an annual grant equal to: (1) the greater of the fiscal year 1994 amount they received as food stamp benefits, or the 1992-1994 average they received as food stamp benefits and (2) the greater of the fiscal year 1994 Federal share of administrative costs, or the 1992-1994 average they received as the Federal share of administrative costs. However, grants to States with payment error rates above 6 % would be reduced by the amount they are required to contribute (i.e., the dollar amount equal to the difference between their payment error rate and a 6% rate). In general, block grant payments must be expended in the fiscal year for which they were distributed; but States may reserve up to 10% a year, up to a total of 30% of the block grant. If total allotments for a fiscal year would exceed the amount of funds made available to provide them, the Secretary is required to reduce allotments or a pro rata basis to the extent necessary. Grant payments would be made by issuing letters of credit.

Block grant funding may only be used for food assistance and administrative costs related to its provision, and, in each fiscal year, not more than 6% of total funds expended (including State funds required to be spent) may be used for administrative costs.

Each participating block grant State is required to maintain a food stamp quality control program to measure erroneous benefit and eligibility determinations, and block grant States would continue to be subject to the food stamp program's quality control system (including eligibility for incentive payments and imposition of fiscal sanction for very high payment error rates). Each participating State is required to implement an employment and training program under Food Stamp Act terms and conditions and is eligible to receive Federal funding for employment and training activities (in addition to the food stamp block grant amount).

In order to receive a block grant, a State must annually submit a State plan for approval by the Secretary. The State plan must: (1) identify a lead administering agency, (2) describe how and to what extent the State's program serves specific groups (e.g., the elderly, migrant and seasonal farmworkers, the homeless, those with earnings, Indians) and how the treatment differs from their treatment under the food stamp program, (3) provide that benefits are available statewide, (4) provide for notice and an opportunity for a hearing to those adversely affected, (5) assess the food and nutrition needs of needy persons in the State, (6) desribe the State's eligibility standards for assistance under the block grant program, (7) establish a system for exchanging information with other States to verify recipients' identity and the possible receipt of benefits in another State, (8) provide for safeguarding and restricting the use and disclosure of information about recipients, and (9) other information required by the Secretary.

Eligibility for assistance under the block grant is determined by the State, and there is no individual entitlement to assistance. However, certain Federal rules apply: (1) aliens who would not be eligible under the food stamp program are not eligible for block grant aid; and (2) persons and households who would be ineligible under the food stamp program's work rules are not eligible for block grant aid.

If the Secretary finds that there has been a failure to comply with provisions of the block grant or the State's approved plan or finds that, in the operation of any program or activity for which assistance is provided, there is a State failure to comply substantially with block grant provisions—the Secretary must withhold funding, as appropriate, until satisfied there is no longer a failure to comply or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected. In addition, the Secretary may impose other appropriate penalities, including recoupment of improperly spent money and disqualification from the block grant. States must be provided notice and an opportunity for a hearing in this process.

The Secretary is authorized to conduct research on the effects and costs of a State food assistance block grant.

57. SPECIFIC PERIOD FOR PROHIBITING PARTICIPATION OF STORES BASED ON LACK OF BUSINESS INTEGRITY

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Authorizes the Secretary to issue regulations establishing specific time periods during which retailers/wholesalers that have been denied approval or had approval withdrawn on the basis of "business integrity and reputation" may not submit a new application for approval. The periods established would be required to reflect the severity of the business integrity infractions on which the denial/withdrawal was based.

Conference agreement

See Item 20 above.

58. INFORMATION FOR VERIFYING ELIGIBILITY FOR AUTHORIZATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Permits the Secretary to require that retailers and wholesalers seeking approval submit relevant income and sales tax filing documents. Permits regulations requiring retailers and wholesalers to provide written authorization for the Secretary to verify all relevant tax filings and to obtain corroborating documentation from other sources in order to verify the accuracy of information provided by retailers and wholesalers.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

59. BASES FOR SUSPENSIONS AND DISQUALIFICATIONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires criteria for finding violations by retailers and wholesalers (and their suspension or disqualification) on the basis of evidence including on-site investigations, inconsistent redemption data, or electronic benefit transfer system transaction reports.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill. The Conferees note that the Secretary currently has the authority contained in the Senate amendment.

60. PERMANENT DEBARMENT OF RETAILERS WHO INTENTIONALLY SUBMIT FALSIFIED APPLICATIONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires regulations permanently disqualifying retailers and wholesalers that knowingly submit an application for approval that contains false information about a substantive matter. A permanent disqualification for a knowingly false application would be subject to administrative and judicial review, but the disqualification would remain in effect pending the review.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment permitting the Secretary to disqualify a store or concern, including permanently, upon knowing submission of false information on an application.

61. CATEGORICAL ELIGIBILITY

Present law

Households in which all members are recipients of AFDC are categorically eligible for food stamps. [Sec. 5(a)]

Child support payments received by a household and excluded under the AFDC program may be disregarded for food stamps, at State option and expense. [Sec. 5(d)(13)]

Household members who are AFDC recipients are considered to have met food stamp resource (asset) eligibility standards. [Sec. 5(j)]

Persons who are AFDC recipients are exempt from food stamp rules barring eligibility to most postsecondary students. [Sec. 6(e)]

In general, food stamp eligibility is barred to those with total (gross) household income above 130% of the Federal income poverty guidelines. [Sec. 5(c)]

Political subdivisions electing to operate workfare programs for food stamp recipients may comply with food stamp requirements by operating a workfare program under title IV of the Social Security Act. [Sec. 20(a)]

Households exempt from food stamp work rules because of participation in an AFDC community work experience program are subject to a limit on the number of hours of work—their cash assistance plus food stamps, divided by the minimum wage (but no person can be required to work more than 120 hours a month). [Sec. 20(a)]

House bill

No provision. [Note: TANF households would presumably be categorically eligible for food stamps under existing provisions of law.]

No provision. [Note: TANF recipients would presumably be considered to have met food stamp resource standards under existing provisions of law.]

No provision. [Note: TANF recipients would presumably not be exempt from food stamp postsecondary student rules under existing provisions of law.]

Senate amendment

Provides that households in which all members are recipients of benefits under a

State's family assistance block grant program be categorically eligible for food stamps, if the Secretary determines that the program complies with Secretarial standards that ensure that State program standards are comparable to or more restrictive than those in effect June 1, 1995.

Deletes the existing provision for a State-option child support disregard. [Note: A separate provision (Sec. 5(m) of the Food Stamp Act) providing for State funding of the disregard is not deleted.]

Provides that persons receiving benefits under a State's family assistance block grant program will be considered to have met food stamp resource eligibility standards, if the Secretary determines that the program complies with Secretarial standards that ensure that State program standards are comparable to or more restrictive than those in effect June 1, 1995.

Provides that persons receiving benefits under a State's family assistance block grant program are exempt from food stamp rules barring eligibility to most postsecondary students, if the Secretary determines that the program complies with Secretarial standards that ensure that State program standards are comparable to or more restrictive than those in effect June 1, 1995.

Provides that households may not receive food stamp benefits as the result of eligibility under a State's family assistance block grant program unless the Secretary determines that households with income above 130% of the poverty guidelines are not eligible for the State's program—notwithstanding any other provision of the Food Stamp Act.

Deletes the existing provision allowing compliance with food stamp workfare rules by operating a workfare program under title IV of the Social Security Act.

Deletes the existing rule placing limits on hours worked for food stamp recipients in community work experience programs.

Makes various technical amendments to the Food Stamp Act conforming its existing references to the AFDC program to cite the new family assistance block grant program.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment deleting references to standards comparable to June 1, 1995, and revising various amendments conforming Food Stamp Act references to the AFDC program to the new family assistance block grant program.

62. PROTECTION OF BATTERED INDIVIDUALS

Present law

No provision. [Note: Certain work rules contain a "good cause" exemption.]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

In the case of individuals who were battered or subjected to extreme cruelty, permits States to exempt them from the following provisions of food stamp law (or modify their application) if their physical, mental, or emotional well-being would be endangered:

(1) the requirement that the income and resources of a sponsor of an alien be deemed to the sponsored alien;

(2) the requirement that custodial parents cooperate with child support agencies (as added by the Senate amendment); and

(3) all work requirements (including the new work requirement added by the Senate amendment).

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill. The conferees note that the Food Stamp Act already provides protection to battered individuals in the application of child support enforcement and work rules.

63. RECONCILIATION PROVISIONS

A. TRANSITIONAL HOUSING

Present law

Payments form regular welfare benefits made on behalf of households in transitional housing are disregarded as income. (Sec. 5(k)]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Deletes disregard of transitional housing payments.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

B. AMERICAN SAMOA

Present law

No provision. [Note: A food assistance program for American Samoa is supported under provisions of law granting Secretarial discretion to extend Agriculture Department programs to American Samoa.]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides for funding of not more than $5.3 million a year through fiscal year 2002 for a nutrition assistance program in American Samoa.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

C. ASSISTANCE FOR COMMUNITY FOOD PROJECTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Authorizes $2.5 million a year for community food project grants to meet the food needs of low-income people, increase the self-reliance of communities in providing for their own food needs, and promote comprehensive responses to local food, farm, and nutrition issues.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with an amendment making the funding for community food projects mandatory.

COMMODITY DISTRIBUTION

1. SHORT TITLE

Present law

The Emergency Food Assistance Act (EFAA), The Hunger Prevention Act of 1988, The Commodity Distribution Reform Act and WIC Amendments, The Charitable Assistance and Food Bank Act of 1987, The Food Security Act of 1985, The Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973, and The Food, Agriculture, Conservation, and Trade Act of 1990.

House bill

Combines several existing commodity donation programs and authorities under one title, the Commodity Distribution Act of 1995.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill with an amendment striking the House provision and replacing it with a provision combining the emergency food assistance program (TEFAP) with the soup kitchen/food bank program into one program to be known as the TEFAP. The revised TEFAP is reauthorized through 2002, and the Secretary is required to purchase $300 million of commodities each year through 2002 for distribution through the TEFAP. The requirement to purchase $300 million of commodities is included in the Food Stamp Act authorization for appropriations.

2. AVAILABILITY OF COMMODITIES

Present law

Requires the Secretary to purchase a variety of nutritious and useful commodities using the resources of the CCC or Section 32 to supplement commodities acquired from the excess inventories of CCC for distribution to emergency feeding organizations. [Sec. 214(c) of Emergency Food Assistance Act (EFAA)]

In addition to commodities donated from excess CCC holdings, authorizes the Secretary to donate Section 32 commodities to eligible recipient agencies participating in TEFAP. [Sec. 202(c)]

Requires the Secretary to make available to eligible recipient agencies, CCC commodities in excess of those needed to meet domestic and international obligations and market development and food aid commitments and to carry out farm price and income stabilization features of the AAA of 1938, the AA of 1949, and the CCC Charter. [Sec. 202(a), EFAA]

House bill

For fiscal years 1996–2000, authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase a variety of nutritious and useful commodities to distribute to the States for purposes laid out in the subtitle.

Similar to current law, but also authorizes the use of Section 32 funds not otherwise used or needed, to purchase, process, and distribute commodities for purposes under the new program.

Leaves current general authority untouched; maintains EFAA requirement but adds language stipulating that donations are to be in addition to authorized Section 32 donations.

Senate amendment

Extends existing law purchasing authorities through fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

See Item 1 above.

3. BASIS FOR COMMODITY PURCHASES

Present law

Requires that commodities made available under the EFAA include a variety of items most useful to eligible recipient agencies, including diary products, wheat and wheat products, rice, honey, and cornmeal. [Sec. 202(d), EFAA]

House bill

Requires the Secretary to determine the types, varieties, and amounts of commodities purchased under this subtitle, and to make such purchases, to the maximum extent practicable and appropriate, on the basis of agricultural market conditions, State and distributing agency preferences and needs, and the preferences of recipients.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 1 above.

4. STATE AND LOCAL SUPPLEMENTATION OF COMMODITIES

Present law

Requires the Secretary to establish procedures by which State and local agencies, charitable institutions, or other person may supplement the commodities distributed under TEFAP for use by emergency feeding organizations with donations of nutritious and wholesome commodities. [Sec. 203D(a), EFAA]

Allows States and emergency feeding organizations to use TEFAP funds, equipment, structures, vehicles, and all other facilities and personnel involved in the storage, handling, and distribution of TEFAP commodities to store, handle, or distribute commodities donated to supplement TEFAP commodities. [Sec. 203D(b), EFAA]

Requires States and emergency feeding organizations to continue to use volunteer workers and commodities and foods donated by charitable and other organizations, to the maximum extent practical, in operating TEFAP.

House bill

Similar to current law except that supplementation applies to all programs eligible to receive commodities under the new program, not just TEFAP.

Similar to current law except it allows use of these sources to all programs eligible to participate in the new program (not just TEFAP), and explicitly identifies the funds that States and eligible agencies may use to help with supplemental commodities as those appropriated for administrative costs under the new Section 519(b).

Same as current law, except substitutes recipient agencies for emergency feeding organizations to reflect expansion of provisions to cover other commodity donation programs as well as TEFAP.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 1 above.

5. STATE PLAN

Present law

Requires Secretary to expedite the distribution of commodities to agencies designated by the Governor, or directly distribute commodities to eligible recipient agencies engaged in national commodity processing; allows States to give priority to donations to existing food bank networks serving low-income households. Requires States to expeditiously distribute commodities to eligible recipient agencies, and to encourage distribution to rural areas. Also requires States to distribute commodities only to agencies that serve needy persons and to set their own need criteria, with the approval of the Secretary. [Sec. 203B(a) and (c) of EFAA]

House bill

Requires that States seeking commodities under this program submit a plan of operation and administration every four years for approval by the Secretary and allows amendment of the plan at any time.

Requires that, at a minimum, the State receiving commodities include in its plan:

designation of the State agency responsible for distributing commodities;

the plan of operation and administration to expeditiously distribute commodities in amounts requested by eligible recipient agencies;

the standards of eligibility for recipient agencies; and the individual or household eligibility standards for commodity recipients, which shall require that they be needy, and residing in the geographic location served by the recipient agency.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

6. ADVISORY BOARD

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Requires the Secretary to encourage States to establish advisory boards consisting of representatives of all interested entities, public and private, in the distribution of commodities.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

7. COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS/TRANSFERS

Present law

Permits States receiving TEFAP commodities to enter into cooperative agreements with agencies of other States to jointly provide commodities serving eligible recipients from each State in a single area, or to transfer commodities. [Sec. 203B(d)]

House bill

Similar to current law, except adds language specifying that the State may advise the Secretary of such agreements and transfers. Note: Because the new commodity distribution program covers more than TEFAP agencies, this represents a new provision for other recipient agencies now receiving commodities (e.g. CSFP, charitable institutions).

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 1 above.

8. ALLOCATION OF COMMODITIES TO STATES

Present law

Requires Secretary to allocate commodities purchased for TEFAP to States in the following proportions:

60% of the value of commodities available based on each State's proportion of the national total of persons with incomes below the poverty line; and

40% based on each State's proportion of the national total of the average monthly number of unemployed persons.

House bill

Similar to current law as relates to allocation of TEFAP commodities. CSFP commodities are exempted from the allocation method, however, other recipient agencies currently receiving commodities under authority other than the EFAA (e.g. charitable institutions) are covered by the allocation formula.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 1 above.

9. NOTIFICATION

Present law

Requires the Secretary to notify each State of the amount of commodities it is allotted to receive. Requires each State to notify the Secretary promptly if it will not accept commodities available to it, and requires the Secretary to reallocate and distribute such commodities as he deems appropriate and equitable. Further requires the Secretary to establish procedures to permit State to decline portions of commodity allocations during each fiscal year and to reallocate and distribute such commodities, as deemed appropriate and equitable. [Sec. 214(g), EFAA]

House bill

Same as current law, except applies to all eligible agencies receiving commodities, not just TEFAP agencies.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 1 above.

10. DISASTERS

Present law

Permits the Secretary to request that States consider assisting other States where substantial numbers of persons have been affected by drought, flood, hurricane or other natural disasters by allowing the Secretary to reallocate commodities to those States affected by such disasters. [Sec. 214(g), EFAA]

House bill

Same as current law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

11. NATIONAL COMMODITY PROCESSING

Present Law

Requires through fiscal year 1995 that the Secretary encourage agreements with private companies for reprocessing into end-use products those commodities donated at no charge to nutrition programs. [Sec. 1114(a)(2)(A) of Agriculture and Food Act of 1981]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

12. PURCHASES AND TIMING

Present law

Requires that in each fiscal year, the Secretary purchase commodities at times and under conditions determined appropriate; deliver such commodities at reasonable intervals to States (but no later than the end of the fiscal year), based on the allocation formula, and entitles each State to the additional commodities purchased for TEFAP in amounts based on the allocation formula. [Sec. 214(h), EFAA]

House bill

Similar to current law except for reference to CSFP, deletion of language relating to "additional" commodities, and requirement that commodities be delivered by December 31 of the following fiscal year.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 1 above.

13. PRIORITY SYSTEM FOR STATE DISTRIBUTION OF COMMODITIES

A. EMERGENCY FEEDING ORGANIZATIONS

Present law

Requires States to give priority for commodities to emergency feeding organizations if sufficient commodities are not available to meet requests of all eligible agencies, and encourages States to distribute commodities to rural areas. [Sec. 203B(b), EFAA]

House bill

Requires that in distributing commodities allocated under this section for other than CSFP, the State agency offer its full allocation of commodities to emergency feeding organizations.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

B. CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Permits States agencies to distribute commodities that are not able to be used by emergency feeding organizations to charitable institutions (excluding penal institutions) that do not receive commodities as emergency feeding organizations.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

C. OTHER ELIGIBLE AGENCIES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Permits the State agency to distribute commodities that are not able to be used by emergency feeding organizations or other charitable institutions to other eligible recipient agencies not receiving commodities under the previous distributions.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

14. INITIAL PROCESSING COSTS

Present law

Permits the Secretary to use CCC funds to pay the cost of initial processing and packaging of commodities distributed under this Act into forms and quantities the Secretary determines are suitable for use by individual households or institutional use. Permits payment in the form of commodities equal in value to the cost, and requires the Secretary to ensure that such payments in kind do not displace commercial sales. [Sec. 203A, EFAA]

House bill

Similar to present law, except substitutes term "eligible recipient agencies" for "institutional use."

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

15. ASSURANCES; ANTICIPATED USE

Present law

Requires the Secretary to take precautions to assure that eligible recipient agencies and persons receiving commodities do not diminish their normal expenditures for food because of receipt of commodities, and to ensure that commodities made available under the Act do not displace commercial sales. Prohibits Secretary from donating commodities in a quantity or manner that will substitute for agricultural produce that otherwise would be purchased in the market. Requires Secretary to submit a report to the Congress each year on whether and to what extent displacement or substitution is occurring. [Sec. 203C(a)]

House bill

Similar to current law but does not refer to individual displacement or substitutions or prohibit donation in a quantity or manner that might interfere with market sales. Also sets December 1997, and at least every two years thereafter as the dates for displacement reports.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

16. WASTE

Present law

Requires that the Secretary purchase and distribute commodities in quantities that can be consumed without waste, and prohibits eligible recipient agencies receiving commodities under this Act from receiving commodities in excess of anticipated use (based on inventory records and controls), or in excess of their ability to accept and store. [Sec. 203C(b)]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

17. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

A. COMMODITY PURCHASES

Present law

Authorizes $175 million for fiscal year 1991, $190 million for fiscal year 1992, and $220 million for each of fiscal year 1993–1995 to purchase, process and distribute additional commodities to TEFAP agencies. [Sec. 214(e)]

House bill

Authorizes $260 million annually for each of fiscal years 1996 through 2000 to purchase, process, and distribute commodities to States for distribution to eligible recipient agencies, which include charitable institutions and CSFP agencies, as well as TEFAP agencies.

Senate amendment

Extends funding authority for commodity purchases at $220 million annually through fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

B. ADMINISTRATIVE FUNDING

Present law

Authorizes $50 million for fiscal year 1991–95 for the Secretary to make available to States for State and local payments of costs associated with the distribution of commodities by eligible recipient agencies. Requires Secretary to allocate funds to States on advance basis in the same proportion as the proportion each State receives of allocated commodities, and requires the Secretary to reallocate funds not able to be used by a State to other States in an appropriate and equitable manner. Permits States to use funds for costs associated with the distribution of additional commodities purchased for the program and for soup kitchens and food banks. [Sec. 204(a)(1)]

House bill

Authorizes $40 million annually for each of fiscal years 1996 through 2000 for payments to States and local agencies (except for the CSFP) for the costs associated with transporting storing, and handling commodities other than those distributed to CSFP agencies. Same as current law with respect to allocations and reallocations, and advanced funding. No specific reference to soup kitchens and food banks, which are included as eligible recipient agencies.

Senate amendment

Extends authority for administrative funding at $50 million annually through fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that administrative funds may be used for processing, transporting, or distributing commodities other than TEFAP commodities.

18. LOCAL ADMINISTRATIVE PAYMENTS

Present law

Requires each State to make available not less than 40% of the funds it receives for administrative costs in each fiscal year to pay for, or provide advance payments to eligible recipient agencies, for allowable expenses incurred by such agencies in distributing commodities to needy persons. Defines "allowable expenses" to include the costs of transporting, storing, handling, repackaging and distributing commodities after receipt by the eligible recipient agency; costs associated with eligibility, verification, and documentation of eligibility; costs of providing information to commodity recipients on appropriate storage and preparation of commodities; and costs of recordkeeping, auditing, and other required administrative procedures. [Sec. 204(a)(2), EFAA]

House bill

Same as current law except also applies to non–TEFAP agencies.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

19. STATE COVERAGE OF LOCAL COSTS

Present law

Requires that amounts of funding that States use to cover the allowable expenses of eligible recipient agencies be counted toward the amount a State must make available from administrative funding provided under this Act for eligible recipient agencies. [Sec. 204(a)(2), EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law except that it references the CSFP, which is excluded from this rule.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

20. FINANCIAL REPORTS

Present law

Requires States receiving funds to submit financial reports on a regular basis to the Secretary on the use of such funds and prohibits any such funds from being used by States for costs other than those used to the distribution of commodities by eligible recipient agencies. [Sec. 204(a)(3), EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

21. NON-FEDERAL MATCHING FUNDS

Present law

Requires that each State receiving administrative funds under this subsection provide cash or in-kind contributions from non-Federal sources in an amount equal to the amount of Federal administrative funds it receives that are not distributed to eligible recipient agencies or used to cover the expenses of such agencies. Permits States to receive administrative funding prior to satisfying the matching requirement, based on their estimated contribution, and requires the Secretary to periodically reconcile estimated and actual contributions to correct for overpayments and underpayments. [Sec. 204(a)(4), EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law, except excludes administrative funds distributed for the CSFP from the non-Federal matching requirements and rules.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

22. FEDERAL CHARGES

Present law

Prohibits any charge against the appropriations authorized by this section for the value of commodities donated for the purposes of this Act, or for the funds used by the CCC for the costs of initial processing, packaging, and delivery of program commodities to the States. [Sec. 204(b), EFAA]

House bill

Similar to present law except it applies the prohibition to bonus donations of Section 32 and CCC commodities, as well as those bought for the program.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

23. STATE CHARGES

Present law

Prohibits States from charging for commodities made available to eligible recipient agencies and from passing along the cost of matching requirements. [Sec. 204(a)(5), EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item #1 above.

24. MANDATORY FUNDING FOR NUTRITION PROGRAM COMMODITIES

Present law

For each of fiscal years 1994–1996, requires $230,000 of Treasury funds not otherwise appropriated to be provided to the Secretary to purchase, process and distribute commodities that are low in saturated fats, sodium, and sugar, and a good source of calcium, protein, and other nutrients to 2 States, selected by the Secretary, to carry out a three year project to improve the health of low-income participants of TEFAP. Requires that commodities be easy for low-income families to store, use, and handle, and include low-sodium peanut butter, low-fat and low sodium cheeses and canned meats, fruits, and vegetables. Also requires that $5000 of the amount provided be given to each of the participating States to help with administrative costs. [Sec. 13962 of OBRA, 1993]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Extends this requirement through fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill.

25. COMMODITY SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM (CSFP)—AUTHORIZATION

Present law

For each of fiscal years 1991–1995, authorizes the Secretary to purchase and distribute sufficient agricultural commodities with appropriated funds to maintain the traditional level of assistance for food programs including the supplemental food programs for women, infants, children, and the elderly. [Sec. 4(a), Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973]

House bill

Requires that $94.5 million of the amount appropriated for programs under this subtitle for the period fiscal year 1996–2000 be used each fiscal year to purchase and distribute commodities to supplemental feeding programs for women, infants, and children, or elderly individuals participating in the commodity supplemental food program.

Senate amendment

Extends appropriations authority through fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconcilation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

26. CSFP ADMINISTRATIVE FUNDING

Present law

Requires the Secretary to provide administrative funds to State and local agencies administering the CSFP for each of fiscal years 1991–1995. Authorizes appropriations in an amount equal to not more than 20% of the value of commodities purchased for the program. [Sec. 5(a), Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973]

Defines administrative costs to include expenses for information and referral, operation, monitoring, nutrition education, start-up costs, and general administration (including staff, warehouse, and transportation personnel, insurance and administration of the State or local office. [Sec. 5(c), Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973]

House bill

Requires that not more than 20% of the funds made available for commodity purchase and distribution for the CSFP be made available to States for the State and local payments of costs associated with the distribution of commodities by CSFP agencies.

Senate amendment

Extends present law authority through fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

27. CSFP—COMMODITY PURCHASES AND ADVANCE WARNING

Present law

Permits the Secretary to determine the types, varieties, and amounts of commodities purchased for the CSFP, but requires the Secretary to report to the House and Senate Agriculture Committees plans for significant changes from commodities available or planned at the beginning of the fiscal year before implementing such changes.

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

28. CHEESE AND NONFAT DRY MILK

Present law

In each of fiscal years 1991–1995, the CCC is required to provide at least 9 million pounds of cheese and 4 million pounds of nonfat dry milk (to the extent inventory levels permit), for the Secretary to use, before the end of each fiscal year, to carry out the CSFP. [Sec. 5(d)(2), Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973]

House bill

Implements this present law provision for fiscal years 1996–2000, otherwise it is exactly the same as present law.

Senate amendment

Extends present law provision through fiscal year 2002.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

29. ADDITIONAL CSFP SITES

Present law

Requires the Secretary to approve additional sites each fiscal year, including sites serving the elderly, in areas where the program does not operate to the full extent that applications can be approved within the funding available, and without reducing participation levels (including the elderly) in areas where the program is in effect. [Sec. 5(f), Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

30. ADDITIONAL RECIPIENTS

Present law

Permits a local agency to serve low-income elderly persons, with the approval of the Secretary, if it determines that the amount of assistance it receives is more than is needed to provide assistance to women, infants and children. [Sec. 5(g), Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

31. COMMODITY PRICE INCREASES

Present law

Requires the Secretary to determine the decline in the number of persons able to be served by the CSFP if the price of one or more commodities purchased for the program is significantly higher than expected; to promptly notify State agencies operating programs of the decline; and ensure that State agencies notify local agencies of the decline. [Sec. 5(j)(1) and (2), Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

32. AFFECT OF CSFP COMMODITIES ON OTHER RECIPIENT AGENCIES

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Stipulates that commodities distributed to CSFP agencies under this section not be considered when determining commodity allocations to States for other eligible recipient agencies receiving commodities under this Act, or in following the priority for distribution of commodities to such agencies.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

33. COMMODITIES NOT INCOME

Present law

Specifies that commodities distributed under this Act not be considered income or resources for any purposes under Federal, State, or local law. [Sec. 206, EFAA]

House bill

Similar to present law, but narrower. Specifies that receipt of commodities cannot be considered in "determining eligibility for any Federal, State, or local "means-tested program," instead of the broader "any purposes" outlined in present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

34. PROHIBITION ON STATE CHARGES

Present law

Prohibits States from charging eligible recipient agencies any amount that exceeds the difference between the State's direct costs of storing and transporting commodities to recipient agencies and the amount of funds provided for this purpose by the Secretary. [Sec. 208, EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

35. DEFINITIONS

A. AVERAGE MONTHLY NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED PERSONS

Present law

The average monthly number of unemployed persons within a State in the most recent fiscal year for which information is available, as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor. [Sec. 2143(b), EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill with an amendment providing that all definitions included in the TEFAP and soup kitchen/food bank program will be included in the revised TEFAP.

B. ELDERLY PERSONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Defines "elderly persons" to mean persons 60 years or older.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 35A above.

C. ELIGIBLE RECIPIENT AGENCIES; EMERGENCY FEEDING ORGANIZATIONS

Present law

Combines definition of "eligible recipient agencies" and "emergency feeding organizations, as follows: "Eligible recipient agency" means public or non-profit organizations that administer activities or projects providing nutrition assistance to relieve situations of emergency and distress through the provision of food to needy persons (including those in charitable institutions, food banks, hunger centers, soup kitchens, and similar non-profit recipient agencies (hereinafter referred to as "emergency feeding organizations"); and school lunch, summer camps, and child nutrition meal service, elderly feeding programs, CSFP, charitable institutions for the needy, and disaster relief. [Sec. 201A, EFAA]

House bill

Similar to present law, but separates into two separate definitions, as follows: Defines "eligible recipient agency" to mean a public or non-profit organization that administers:

an institution operating a CSFP;

an emergency feeding organization (EFO);

a charitable institution (including a hospital and a retirement home, but excluding a penal institution) serving needy persons;

a summer camp for children or a child nutrition food service program;

an elderly feeding program; or a disaster relief program.

Defines "emergency feeding organization" to mean public or private organizations that administer activities and projects (including charitable institutions, food banks and pantries, hunger relief centers, soup kitchens, or similar non-profit eligible agencies) providing nutrition assistance to relieve situations of emergency and distress by providing food to needy persons, including low-income and unemployed persons.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 35A above.

D. FOOD BANK

Present law

The term "food bank" means a public and charitable institution that maintains an established operation providing food to food pantries, soup kitchens, hunger relief centers, or other feeding centers that provide meals or food to feed needy persons on a regular basis as an integral part of their normal activity. [Sec. 110, Hunger Prevention Act of 1988]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 35A above.

E. FOOD PANTRY

Present law

Defines "food pantry" to mean a public or private nonprofit organization distributing food (including other than USDA food) to low-income and unemployed households to relieve situations of emergency and distress. [Sec. 110, Hunger Prevention Act of 1988]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 35A above.

F. NEEDY PERSONS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Defines "needy persons" to mean individuals who have low incomes or are unemployed as determined by the State, as long as this is not higher than 185% of the poverty line; households certified as food stamp participants or individuals participating in other Federally-supported means-tested programs.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 35A above.

G. POVERTY LINE

Present law

The term "poverty line" is the same as the term used in Section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C.9902(2)). [Sec. 110, Hunger Prevention Act]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 35A above.

H. SOUP KITCHEN

Present law

The term "soup kitchen" means a public and charitable institution that, as an integral part of its normal activities, maintains an established feeding operation for needy homeless persons on a regular basis. [Sec. 110, Hunger Prevention Act]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

See Item 35A above.

36. REGULATIONS

Present law

Requires the Secretary to issue regulations within 30 days to implement this subtitle; to minimize to the extent practicable the regulatory, recordkeeping and paperwork requirements imposed on eligible recipient agencies, to publish in the Federal Register as early as feasible, but not later than the beginning of each fiscal year, an estimate of the types and quantities of commodities anticipated to be available; and to include in regulations provisions that set standards relating to liability for commodity losses when there is no evidence of negligence or fraud, and establish conditions for payment to cover such losses, taking into account the special needs and circumstances of the recipient agencies. [Sec. 210, EFAA]

House bill

Similar to present law except provides 120 days for Secretary to issue regulations and includes reference to "non-binding" nature of Secretary's estimates of donations.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

37. FINALITY OF DETERMINATIONS

Present law

Specifies that determinations made by the Secretary concerning the types and quantities of commodities donated under this subtitle, when in conformance with applicable regulations, be final and conclusive and not reviewable by any other officer or agency of the Government. [Sec. 211, EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

38. PROHIBITION ON SALE OF COMMODITIES

Present law

Prohibits the sale or disposal of commodities in commercial channels in any form, except as permitted under Section 517 for in-kind payment of initial processing costs by the CCC. [Sec. 205(b), EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

39. SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS

Present law

Gives the Secretary or designee authority to determine the amount of, settle and adjust any claim arising under this subtitle, and waive any claim when the Secretary determines it will serve the purposes of this Act. Specifies that nothing in this Act diminishes the authority of the Attorney General to conduct litigation on behalf of the United States. [Sec. 215, EFAA]

House bill

Same as present law.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

40. REPEALERS AND AMENDMENTS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Repeals the Emergency Food Assistance Act of 1983.

In the Hunger Prevention Act of 1988, strikes Section 110 (soup kitchens and food banks); Subtitle C of Title II (Food processing and distribution); and Section 502 (food bank demonstration project).

Strikes Section 4 of the Commodity Distribution Reform Act of 1987 (Food bank demonstration).

Strikes Section 3 of the Charitable Assistance and Food Bank Act of 1987.

Amends the Food Security At of 1985 by striking Section 1571, and striking Section 4 of the Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act (CSFP) and inserting Section 110 of the Commodity Distribution Act of 1995.

In the Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973: In Section 4(a) strikes "institutions (including hospitals and facilities caring for needy infants and children) supplemental feeding programs serving women, infants, and children, and elderly, or both, wherever located, disaster areas, summer camps for children" and inserting "disaster areas;" In subsection 4(c) strikes "the Emergency Food Assistance Act of 1983" and inserts "The Commodity Distribution Act of 1995"; and strikes Section 5.

In the Food Agriculture, Conservation, and Trade Act of 1990, strikes Section 1773(f).

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconcilation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

SUBTITLE K—MISCELLANEOUS

1. EXPENDITURE OF FEDERAL FUNDS IN ACCORDANCE WITH LAWS AND PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO EXPENDITURE OF STATE FUNDS

Present law

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, there currently are six States in which Federal funds go to the Governor rather than the State legislature. Those States are Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, New Mexico, and Oklahoma.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Stipulates that funds from certain Federal block grants to the States are to be expended in accordance with the laws and procedures applicable to the expenditure of the State's own resources (i.e., appropriated through the State legislature in all States). This provision applies to the following block grants: temporary assistance to needy families block grant under title I, the optional State food assistance block grant under title III, and the child care block grant under title VI of the Senate amendment. Thus, in the States in which the Governor previously had control over Federal funds, the State legislatures now would have control.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

2. ELIMINATION OF HOUSING ASSISTANCE WITH RESPECT TO FUGITIVE FELONS AND PROBATION AND PAROLE VIOLATORS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Ends eligibility for public housing and Section 8 housing assistance of a person who is fleeing to avoid prosecution after conviction for a crime, or attempt to commit a crime, that is a felony where committed (or, in the case of New Jersey, is a high misdemeanor), or who is violating a condition of probation or parole. The amendment states that the person's flight shall be cause for immediate termination of their housing aid.

Requires specified public housing agencies to furnish any Federal, State, or local law enforcement officer, upon the request of the officer, with the current address, social security number, and photograph (if applicable) of any SSI recipient, if the officer furnishes the public housing agency with the person's name and notifies the agency that the recipient is a fugitive felon (or in the case of New Jersey a person fleeing because of a high misdemeanor) or a probation or parole violator or that the person has information that is necessary for the officer to conduct his official duties, and the location or apprehension of the recipient is within the officer's official duties.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

3. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING ENTERPRISE ZONES

Present law

No specific provision. However, as stated, the provisions outlined in the Sense of the Senate language already can be done under present law.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Outlines findings related to urban centers and empowerment zones and includes sense of the Senate language that urges the 104th Congress to pass an enterprise zone bill that provides Federal tax incentives to increase the formation and expansion of small businesses and to promote commercial revitalization; allows localities to request waivers to accomplish the objectives of the enterprise zones; encourages resident management of public housing and home ownership of public housing; and authorizes pilot projects in designated enterprise zones to expand the educational opportunities for elementary and secondary school children.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

4. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING THE INABILITY OF THE NON-CUSTODIAL PARENT TO PAY CHILD SUPPORT

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

It is the Sense of the Senate that States should pursue child support payments under all circumstances even if the noncustodial parent is unemployed or his or her whereabouts are unknown; and that States are encouraged to pursue pilot programs in which the parents of a minor non-custodial parent who refuses or is unable to pay child support contribute to the child support owed.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

5. FOOD STAMP ELIGIBILITY

Present law

For purposes of determining eligibility and benefits under the Food Stamp program, the income—less a pro rata share—and financial resources of an ineligible alien are included in the income and resources of the household of which the alien is a member. [Sec. 6(f) of the Food Stamp Act]

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Permits States to include all of an ineligible alien's income and resource in the income and resources of the household of which the alien is a member. (Note: This provision applies only to those aliens made ineligible under present food stamp law, not to those who might be made ineligible for food stamps under new provisions in the Senate amendment.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

6. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON LEGISLATIVE ACCOUNTABILITY FOR UNFUNDED MANDATES IN WELFARE REFORM LEGISLATION

Present law

P.L. 104–4, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995, enacted March 22, 1995, responds to the concern of many State and local officials regarding costs placed upon them by "unfunded mandates." The Act addresses this issue by requiring the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) to estimate the costs to State, local, and tribal governments and the private sector of unfunded intergovernmental mandates that exceed a specified amount and to make the information available to the Congress before a final vote on a given piece of legislation is taken.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Includes the "purposes" section of P.L. 104–4 as findings and states that it is the Sense of the Senate that before the Senate acts on the conference agreement on H.R. 4 (or any other welfare reform legislation), CBO include in its 7-year estimates the costs to States of meeting all work requirements (and other requirements) in the conference agreement, including those for single-parent families, two-parent families, and those who have received cash assistance for 2 years; the resources available to the State to meet these work requirements and what States are projected to spend under current welfare law; and the amount of additional revenue needed by the States to meet the work requirements. In addition, the Senate would like CBO to estimate how many States would pay a penalty rather than raise the additional revenue needed to comply with the specified work requirements.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

7. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING COMPETITIVE BIDDING FOR INFANT FORMULA

Present law

Under the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC), States must carry out cost containment measures in procuring infant formula (and, where practicable, other foods). Cost containment must be by competitive bidding or another method that yields equal or greater savings. Any cost savings may be used by the State for WIC program purposes. [Sec. 17(b) and (h) of the Child Nutrition Act]

House bill

With respect to assistance provided to women, infants, and young children under the Family Nutrition Block Grant, States are required to establish and carry out a cost containment system for procuring infant formula. States must use cost containment savings for any of the activities supported under the Family Nutrition Block Grant and must report on their system and the estimated cost savings compared to the previous year.

Senate amendment

Includes findings on the success of the WIC program in: improving the health status of women, infants, and children, saving Medicaid expenditures, and establishing the importance of infant formula manufacture rebates in helping to fund the WIC program. The amendment states that it is the sense of the Senate that any legislation enacted by Congress must not eliminate or in any way weaken present competitive bidding requirements for the purchase of infant formula in programs supported with Federal funds.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

8. ESTABLISHING NATIONAL GOALS TO PREVENT TEENAGE PREGNANCIES

A. GOALS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the Secretary of HHS to establish and implement by January 1, 1997, a strategy for:

(1) preventing an additional 2% of out-of-wedlock teenage pregnancies a year; and

(2) assuring that at least 25% of U.S. communities have teenage pregnancy programs in place.

HHS is required to report to Congress by June 30, 1998, on progress made toward meeting these 2 goals.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

B. PREVENTION PROGRAMS

Present law

The Social Services block grant (SSBG) (sec. 2002 of SSA, 42 USC 1397a) entitles States to an allotment for services not limited to, but including: child day care; protective services for children and adults; services for children and adults in foster care; home management services; adult day care; transportation; family planning services; training and related services; employment services; information, referral and counseling; meal preparation and delivery; health support services; and, combinations of services to meet the special needs of children, the aged, the mentally retarded, the blind, the emotionally disturbed, the physically handicapped, alcoholics, and drug addicts. Also, Title XX of the Public Health Service Act establishes the Adolescent Family Life (AFL) program to encourage adolescents to delay sexual activity and to provide services to alleviate the problems surrounding adolescent parenthood. One-third of all funding for AFL program services go to projects that provide "prevention services." The purpose of the prevention component is to find effective means within the context of the family of reaching adolescents, both male and female, before they become sexually active to maximize the guidance and support of parents and other family members in promoting abstinence from adolescent premarital sexual relations. (The fiscal year 1995 appropriation for AFL was $6.7 million.)

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends the Social Services block grant (SSBG) (sec. 2002 of the Social Security Act) to require the Secretary to conduct a study of the relative effectiveness of different State programs to prevent out-of-wedlock and teenage pregnancies and to require States conducting programs under this provision to provide data required by the Secretary to evaluate these programs.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

9. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING ENFORCEMENT OF STATUTORY RAPE LAWS

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Includes Sense of the Senate that States and local jurisdictions should aggressively enforce statutory rape laws.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

10. SANCTIONING FOR TESTING POSITIVE FOR CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES

Present law

Eligibility and benefit status for most of the Federal welfare programs are not affected by a recipient's use of illegal drugs. Even under the SSI program, as long as a recipient who is classified as a drug addict or alcoholic participates in an approved treatment plan when so directed and allows his or her treatment to be monitored, he or she is in compliance with the SSI rules, and in most cases the SSI benefit would continue without interruption.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Stipulates that States shall not be prohibited by the Federal Government from sanctioning welfare recipients who test positive for use of controlled substances.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

11. ABSTINENCE EDUCATION

Present law

The Maternal and Child Health (MCH) block grants (title V of the SSA, 42 USC 701) provides grants to States and insular areas to fund a broad range of preventive health and primary care activities to improve the health status of mothers and children, with a special emphasis on those with low income or with limited availability of health services. Sec. 502 includes a set-aside program for projects of national or regional significance. (The fiscal year 1995 appropriation for MCH was $684 million.) See also: Title XX of the Public Health Service Act establishes the Adolescent Family Life (AFL) program to encourage adolescents to delay sexual activity and to provide services to alleviate the problems surrounding adolescent parenthood. One-third of all funding for AFL program services go to projects that provide "prevention services." The purpose of the prevention component is to find effective means within the context of the family of reaching adolescents, both male and female, before they become sexually active to maximize the guidance and support of parents and other family members in promoting abstinence from adolescent premarital sexual relations. (The fiscal year 1995 appropriation for AFL was $6.7 million.)

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends the Maternal and Child Health (MCH) block grants (title V of the SSA) to set aside $75 million to provide abstinence education—defined as an educational or motivational program that has abstaining from sexual activity as its exclusive purpose—and to provide at the option of the State mentoring, counseling and adult supervision to promote abstinence with a focus on those groups most likely to bear children out-of-wedlock. Also increases the authorization level of MCH to $761 million.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

12. SCORING

Present law

In 1985, Congress passed legislation aimed at bringing the Federal budget into balance by the early 1990's. That legislation, the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, commonly referred to as Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act after its primary sponsors, establishes a series of declining annual deficit targets and creates a process (known as sequestration) intended to insure that the deficit targets are adhered to even if Congress and the President fail to reduce the deficit sufficiently through legislative action. Under the sequestration process, across-the-board reductions in spending for many Federal programs are made automatically toward the start of the fiscal year if the deficit for that year is estimated to exceed the statutory target.

House bill

The House bill specifies that the discretionary spending limits in the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 are to be adjusted each year based on actual appropriations compared to the level appropriated for fiscal year 1995. Thus, if appropriations equaled the authorized amounts, the discretionary spending limits would be increased by the difference between the authorization level under H.R. 4 and the 1995 appropriation. (Under the House bill AFDC-related child care expenditures would change from mandatory spending to discretionary spending.)

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

13. PROVISIONS TO ENCOURAGE ELECTRONIC BENEFIT TRANSFER SYSTEMS

Present law

In 1978, Congress passed the Electronic Fund Transfer Act to provide a basic framework establishing the rights, liabilities, and responsibilities of participants in electronic fund transfer systems and required the Federal Reserve Board to develop implementing regulations, which generally are referred to as Regulation E.

House bill

The House bill exempts from Regulation E requirements any electronic benefit transfer program (distributing needs-tested benefits) established under State or local law or administered by a State or local government.

Senate amendment

See Sec. 320 in Senate amendment, which exempts from Regulation E any food stamp electronic benefit transfers.

Conference agreement

This provision was dropped from the Reconciliation bill because it violates the Byrd Rule (section 313 of Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

13. SOCIAL SERVICES BLOCK GRANT

Present law

The Social Services Block Grant (Title XX) provides funds to States in order to provide a wide variety of social services, including:

(1) Child care;

(2) Family planning;

(3) Protective services for children and adults;

(4) Services for children and adults on foster care; and

(5) Employment services.

States have wide discretion over how they use Social Services Block Grant funds. States set their own eligibility requirements and are allowed to transfer up to 10 percent of their allotment to certain Federal health block grants, and for low-income home energy assistance (LIHEAP).

States can also use their block grant funds for staff training in the field of social services. This includes training at workshops, conferences, seminars, and educational institutions.

Funding for the Social Services Block Grant is capped at $2.8 billion a year. Funds are allocated among States according to the State's share of its total population. No State matching funds are required to receive Social Services Block Grant money.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Beginning in fiscal year 1997, the Social Services Block Grant will be reduced by 20 percent.

Conference agreement

The House recedes.

SUBTITLE L—REFORM OF THE EARNED INCOME CREDIT (SECS. 13701–13703 OF THE HOUSE BILL AND SECS. 7460–7466 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

Present law

In general

Certain eligible low-income workers are entitled to claim a refundable credit on their income tax return. The amount of the credit an eligible individual may claim depends upon whether the individual has one, more than one, or no qualifying children and is determined by multiplying the credit rate by the individual's earned income up to an earned income threshold. The maximum amount of the credit is the product of the credit rate and the earned income threshold. For individuals with earned income (or adjusted gross income (AGI), if greater) in excess of the phaseout threshold, the maximum credit amount is reduced by the phaseout rate multiplied by the amount of earned income (or AGI, if greater) in excess of the phaseout threshold. For individuals with earned income (or AGI, if greater) in excess of the phaseout limit, no credit is allowed.

For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995, an individual is not eligible for the credit if the aggregate amount of "disqualified income" of the individual for the taxable year exceeds $2,350. Disqualified income is the sum of:

(1) interest (taxable and tax-exempt),

(2) dividends, and

(3) net rent and royalty income (if greater than zero).

The parameters for the credit depend upon the number of qualifying children the individual claims. For 1996, the parameters are given in the following table (dollar amounts are projections expressed in 1996 dollars):

	Two or more qualifying children	One qualifying child	No qualifying children
Credit rate (percent)	40.00	34.00	7.65
Phaseout rate (percent)	21.06	15.98	7.65
Earned income threshold	$8,910	$6,340	$4,230
Maximum credit	3,564	2,156	324
Phaseout threshold	11,630	11,630	5,290
Phaseout limit	28,553	25,119	9,520

For years after 1996, the credit rates and the phaseout rates will be the same as in the preceding table. The earned income threshold and the phaseout thresholds are indexed for inflation; because the phaseout limit depends on those amounts as well as the phaseout rate and the credit rate, the phaseout limit will also increase if there is inflation.

In order to claim the credit, an individual must either have a qualifying child or meet other requirements. A qualifying child must meet a relationship test, an age test, an identification test, and a residence test. In order to claim the credit without a qualifying child, an individual must not be a dependent and must be over age 24 and under age 65.

To satisfy the identification test, individuals must include on their tax return the name and age of each qualifying child. For returns filed with respect to tax year 1996, individuals must provide a taxpayer identification number (TIN) for all qualifying children born on or before November 30, 1996. For returns filed with respect to tax year 1997 and all subsequent years, individuals must provide TINs for all qualifying children, regardless of their age. An individual's TIN is generally that individual's social security number.

Mathematical errors

The IRS may summarily assess additional tax due as a result of a mathematical error without sending the taxpayer a notice of deficiency and giving the taxpayer an opportunity to petition the Tax Court. Where the IRS uses the summary assessment procedure for mathematical or clerical errors, the taxpayer must be given an explanation of the asserted error and a period of 60 days to request that the IRS abate its assessment. The IRS may not proceed to collect the amount of the assessment until the taxpayer has agreed to it or has allowed the 60-day period for objecting to expire. If the taxpayer files a request for abatement of the assessment specified in the notice, the IRS must abate the assessment. Any reassessment of the abated amount is subject to the ordinary deficiency procedures. The request for abatement of the assessment is the only procedure a taxpayer may use prior to paying the assessed amount in order to contest an assessment arising out of a mathematical or clerical error. Once the assessment is satisfied, however, the taxpayer may file a claim for refund if the taxpayer believes the assessment was made in error.

Return preparer penalties

An income tax return preparer is subject to a penalty of $250 if any part of an understatement of tax on a return or refund claim is due to the return preparer taking a position for which there was not a realistic possibility of the position being sustained. The return preparer must have known (or reasonably should have known) of the unrealistic position and not disclosed that position. In addition, an income tax return preparer is subject to a penalty of $1,000 if any part of an understatement of tax on a return or refund claim is due to the return preparer's willful attempt in any manner to understate tax or to the return preparer's negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations. An income tax return preparer is also subject to a penalty of $50 for each failure to (1) furnish a copy of a return or refund claim to the taxpayer, (2) sign the return or refund claim, (3) furnish his or her identifying number, (4) furnish certain copies or lists of returns or refund claims, or (5) file certain information returns regarding his or her employees. In addition, tax return preparers who endorse or negotiate checks made to taxpayers pay a penalty of $500 for each check endorsed or cashed.

House bill

Deny eligibility for individuals without qualifying children

In order to claim the credit, an individual must have a qualifying child.

Modify definition of adjusted gross income used for phasing out the credit

The House bill modifies the definition of AGI used for phasing out the credit by including the following items:

(1) Social Security benefits not subject to income tax, and

(2) nontaxable distributions from pensions, annuities, and individual retirement arrangements (but only if not rolled over into similar vehicles during the applicable rollover period).

Credit rate for individuals with two or more qualifying children

No provision.

Phaseout of the credit

The phaseout rate of the credit is increased to 23 percent for individuals with two or more qualifying children and to 18 percent for individuals with one qualifying child. With these changes, the parameters of the credit for 1996 will be as follows:

	Two or more qualifying children	One qualifying child
Credit rate (percent)	40.00	34.00
Phaseout rate (percent)	23.00	18.00
Earned income threshold	$8,910	$6,340
Maximum credit	3,564	2,156
Phaseout threshold	11,630	11,630
Phaseout limit	27,126	23,608

For years after 1996, the credit rates and the phaseout rates will be the same as in the preceding table. The dollar values will continue to be indexed, as under present law.

Expand definition of disqualified income

No provision.

Deny credit to individuals not authorized to be employed in the United States

Under the House bill, individuals are not eligible for the credit if they do not include their taxpayer identification number (and, if married, their spouse's taxpayer identification number) on their tax return. Solely for these purposes and for purposes of the present-law identification test for a qualifying child, a taxpayer identification number is defined as a social security number issued to an individual by the Social Security Administration other than a number issued under section 205(c)(2)(B)(i)(II) (or that portion of sec. 205(c)(2)(B)(i)(III) relating to it) of the Social Security Act (regarding the issuance of a number to an individual applying for or receiving Federally funded benefits).

Use mathematical error procedures for certain omissions

If an individual fails to provide a correct taxpayer identification number, such omission will be treated as a mathematical or clerical error. If an individual who claims the credit with respect to net earnings from self-employment fails to pay the proper amount of self-employment tax on such net earnings, the failure will be treated as a mathematical or clerical error.

Increase return preparer penalties

No provision.

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Senate amendment

Deny eligibility for individuals without qualifying children

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Modify definition of adjusted gross income used for phasing out the credit

The Senate amendment modifies the definition of AGI used for phasing out the credit by including certain nontaxable income and by disregarding certain losses. The nontaxable items included are:

(1) tax-exempt interest,

(2) Social Security benefits not subject to income tax,

(3) nontaxable distributions from pensions, annuities, and individual retirement arrangements (but only if not rolled over into similar vehicles during the applicable rollover period), and

(4) child support payments received pursuant to a divorce or separation instrument, but only in excess of $6,000.

The losses disregarded are:

(1) net capital losses (if greater than zero),

(2) net losses from sole proprietorships (other than in farming),

(3) net losses from sole proprietorships in farming,

(4) net losses from other trades and businesses,

(5) net losses from nonbusiness rents and royalties,

(6) net losses from trusts and estates, and

(7) net operating losses.

Credit rate for individuals with two or more qualifying children

The increase in the credit rate for individuals with two or more qualifying children that was supposed to take effect for 1996 is repealed. Thus, for 1996 and following years the credit rate for individuals with two or more qualifying children is 36 percent.

Phaseout of the credit

The Senate amendment changes the method of phasing out the credit. Rather than specifying a phaseout rate (which, given a maximum credit that is indexed for inflation, results in a phaseout range that increases with inflation), the size of the phaseout range is fixed in nominal dollars. The maximum amount of credit that may be claimed by an individual is reduced by a certain percentage for each $100 (or portion thereof) by which the individual's earned income (or modified AGI, if greater) exceeds the applicable phaseout threshold. For individuals with one qualifying child, the applicable percentage is 0.86 percent, meaning that the credit is phased out over a $11,600 range. For individuals with two or more qualifying children, the applicable percentage is 0.66 percent, meaning that the credit is phased out over a $15,100 range. The size of these phaseout ranges is not indexed for inflation, although the phaseout thresholds continue to be indexed for inflation.

With these changes, the parameters of the credit for 1996 are as follows:

	Two or more qualifying children	One qualifying child
Credit rate (percent)	36	34
Earned income threshold	$8,910	$6,340
Maximum credit	3,208	2,156
Phaseout threshold	11,630	11,630
Phaseout limit	26,730	23,230

For years after 1996, the credit rates will be the same as in the preceding table. The dollar values for the earned income threshold and the phaseout threshold will continue to be indexed, as under present law. The phaseout limit will always be $15,100 greater than the phaseout threshold for individuals with two or more qualifying children and will always be $11,600 greater than the phaseout threshold for individuals with one qualifying child.

Expand definition of disqualified income

For purposes of the disqualified income test for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995, the following items would be added to the definition of disqualified income: net capital gain income (if greater than zero) and net passive income (if greater than zero).

Deny credit to individuals not authorized to be employed in the United States

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Use mathematical error procedures for certain omissions

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Increase return preparer penalties

The Senate amendment doubles the civil penalties applicable to income tax return preparers. Also, the Secretary of the Treasury is encouraged to use the maximum feasible review process to insure that originators of electronic income tax returns involving the credit comply with the law.

Effective date

The effective date is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

Deny eligibility for individuals without qualifying children

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Modify definition of adjusted gross income used for phasing out the credit

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

Credit rate for individuals with two or more qualifying children

The conference agreement provides that the credit rate for individuals with two or more qualifying children is maintained at 36 percent for 1996 and future years. The base to which this rate is applied, however, is changed for some individuals. In general, the maximum amount of the credit an eligible individual with two or more qualifying children may claim is determined by multiplying an enhancement factor times the credit rate times the individual's earned income up to the earned income threshold.

For married couples filing joint returns for whom earned income (or modified AGI, if greater) is less than or equal to $17,000, the enhancement factor is 10/9ths. For married couples filing joint returns for whom earned income (or modified AGI, if greater) is greater than $21,000, the enhancement factor is 1. For married couples filing joint returns for whom earned income (or modified AGI, if greater) is greater than $17,000 but less than or equal to $21,000, the enhancement factor is ratably reduced from 10/9ths to 1. For example, a married couple filing a joint return with an earned income (and modified AGI) of $18,000 has an income one-fourth [= ($18,000 - $17,000)/($21,000 - $17,000)] of the way into the ratable reduction. Thus, the enhancement factor for this couple is 13/12ths [= (10/9) - (1/4)((10/9) - 1)]. The $17,000 and $21,000 amounts are indexed for inflation after 1996.

For unmarried individuals for whom earned income (or modified AGI, if greater) is less than or equal to $14,000, the enhancement factor is 10/9ths. For unmarried individuals for whom earned income (or modified AGI, if greater) is greater than $18,000, the enhancement factor is 1. For unmarried individuals for whom earned income (or modified AGI, if greater) is greater than $14,000 but less than or equal to $18,000, the enhancement factor is ratably reduced from 10/9ths to 1. For example, an unmarried individual with an earned income (and modified AGI) of $16,500 has an income five-eighths [= ($16,500 - $14,000)/($18,000 - $14,000)] of the way into the ratable reduction. Thus, the enhancement factor for this individual is 25/24ths [= (10/9) - (5/8)((10/9) - 1)]. The $14,000 and $18,000 amounts are indexed for inflation after 1996.

The conferees do not intend that individuals will have to do the above calculations to determine enhancement factors; these rules will be reflected in the credit tables provided with the tax return materials.

Phaseout of the credit

The conference agreement increases the phaseout rate of the credit for individuals with earned income (or modified AGI, if greater) in excess of a second-tier phaseout threshold. For individuals with two or more qualifying children, the second-tier phaseout threshold is $17,750 and the phaseout rate for income in excess of that threshold is 25 percent. For individuals with one qualifying child, the second-tier phaseout threshold is $14,850 and the phaseout rate for income in excess of that threshold is 20 percent. These second-tier phaseout thresholds are indexed for inflation after 1996. The phaseout rate applied to income between the present-law phaseout threshold and the new, second-tier phaseout threshold is the same as would apply under present law for 1996 and future years. With these changes, the parameters of the credit for 1996 will be as follows:

	Two or more qualifying children	One qualifying child
Credit rate[1]	36.00	34.00
Earned income threshold	$8,910	$6,340
Maximum credit	$3,564	$2,156
First-tier phaseout threshold	$11,630	$11,630
First-tier phaseout rate (percent)	21.06	15.98
Second-tier phaseout threshold	$17,750	$14,850
Second-tier phaseout rate (percent)	25.00	20.00
Phaseout limit	$25,425	$23,055

[1] Subject to enhancement factor for individuals with two or more qualifying children.

For years after 1996, the credit rates and the phaseout rates will be the same as in the preceding table. The dollar values will continue to be indexed, as under present law.

Expand definition of disqualified income

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that net capital gain income would not be added to the definition of disqualified income.

Deny credit to individuals not authorized to be employed in the United States

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Use mathematical error procedures for certain omissions

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Increase return preparer penalties

The conference agreement doubles the civil penalties applicable to income tax return preparers. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Treasury to use the maximum feasible review process to insure that originators of electronic income tax returns involving the credit comply with the law.

Effective date

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Foreign affairs and related provisions

FOREIGN AFFAIRS AGENCIES CONSOLIDATION

House bill

Section 6002 of the House bill would have enacted into law division A of H.R. 1561, the Foreign Affairs Agencies Consolidation Act of 1995. The Act reforms the foreign affairs institutions that have grown up over the last forty years and adapts them to the requirements of the post-Cold War era.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment contained no comparable provision.

Conference agreement

The conferences concluded that the application of the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act) against the relevant provision of the House bill could not be avoided if reported as part of the conference agreement and, accordingly, agreed to omit the provision from the conference agreement.

CUBAN LIBERTY AND DEMOCRATIC SOLIDARITY (LIBERTAD) ACT OF 1995

House bill

The House bill would have enacted legislation identical to H.R. 927, as passed by the House of Representatives. H.R. 927 would reaffirm the U.S. policy continuing the economic and political isolation of the Castro regime and would protect the property interests of U.S. citizens whose property was confiscated by that regime. The bill would also have required immediate planning for U.S. support for a democratic transition in Cuba.

Senate amendment

Senate amendment contained no comparable provision.

Conference agreement

The conferences concluded that the application of the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act) against the relevant provision of the House bill could not be avoided if reported as part of the conference agreement and, accordingly, agreed to omit the provision from the conference agreement.

LEASE-PURCHASE

House bill

The House bill contained no comparable provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment would authorize the Department of State to acquire housing and other facilities overseas through lease-purchase arrangements. Authority is granted only within appropriated amounts and upon certification that the arrangement will result in less cost than direct purchase or construction.

Conference agreement

The conferences concluded that this provision would likely be subject to the application of the Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Congressional Budget Act) and, accordingly, agreed to omit the provision from the conference agreement.

BUDGET ENFORCEMENT

DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS

House bill

Reduces the discretionary spending limits from current law levels for fiscal years 1996, 1997, and 1998. Extends spending limits through fiscal year 2002. Further reduces spending limits by $12 billion for 1997-2002 levels in budget resolution conference report.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

CRIME TRUST FUND SPENDING LEVELS

House bill

Reduces spending limits for programs authorized by last year's crime bill, P.L. 103-322, in fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998. The bill also extends enforcement of the spending limit on these programs through fiscal year 2000.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

SPECIAL ADJUSTMENT

House bill

Eliminates special adjustment in the discretionary spending limits for changes in inflation.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

PAYGO EXTENSION

House bill

Permanently extends PAY-AS-YOU-GO requirements for entitlement and legislation. Specifies that PAYGO requirements for any bill extend for four years after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

DISCRETIONARY SPENDING ADJUSTMENT FOR H.R. 4

House bill

Provides adjustment in the discretionary spending limits to accommodate funding for two categorical grants that would be subject to appropriations in the House-passed welfare reform bill, H.R. 4, but were previously funded as entitlement (outside the discretionary spending limits). Adjustment provides the Appropriations Committee with the necessary resources to fund the program while guaranteeing that the funds will actually be used for the specified welfare programs.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

CHAMPUS SEQUESTRATION EXEMPTION

House bill

Allows President to effectively exempt from sequestration personnel accounts used to fund CHAMPUS (the account would be subject to sequestration, but could be replenished with funds from other DoD accounts).

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

SEQUESTRATION OF DOD ACCOUNTS

House bill

Specifies that any sequester effecting DoD accounts be across the accounts identified in the DoD appropriations bill.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

DIRECT STUDENT LOAN SCORING

House bill

Puts direct student loans and loan guarantees on an equivalent budgetary basis by stipulating that the administrative costs of direct student loan must be included in the cost estimates used to enforce PAYGO and the discretionary spending limits.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

RELATIONSHIP OF DISCRETIONARY SPENDING AND PAYGO

House bill

Provides that in the 104th Congress any reduction in the discretionary spending limits shall be treated as a reduction in the deficit under PAYGO procedures. Effectively allows the revenue loss from tax cuts to be offset, in part, by a reduction in discretionary spending.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

MEDICARE SAVINGS PRECLUDED FROM PAY-GO

House bill

Provides that none of the savings from Medicare reforms can be counted for PAYGO purposes. Effectively precludes using the deficit reduction resulting from Medicare changes to offset the revenue loss from the tax cuts.

Senate amendment

There is no comparable provision in the Senate amendment.

Conference agreement

House recedes to the Senate. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

GENERATIONAL ACCOUNTING

House bill

There is no comparable provision in the House bill.

Senate amendment

Requires the President's Budget to include an analysis of the generational accounting consequences of the budget.

Conference agreement

Senate recedes to the House. Language would violate the Byrd Rule.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on House Oversight, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 2002. An act making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1996, and for other purposes.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 395. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of Energy to sell the Alaska Power Administration, and to authorize the export of Alaska North Slope crude oil, and for other purposes.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on House Oversight, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2002. An act making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 10, 1996, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 11 minutes a.m.), the House adjourned until today, Thursday, November 16, 1995, at 10 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1685. A letter from the Administrator, Environmental Protection Agency, transmitting the Agency's report entitled "National Annual Industrial Sulfur Dioxide Emission Trends, 1995–2015," pursuant to Public Law 101–549, section 406(a) (104 Stat. 2632); to the Committee on Commerce.

1686. A letter from the Chairman, Broadcasting Board of Governors, transmitting the Board's annual report on the location of administrative, managerial, and technical staff; and salary, benefits, and personnel classifications of Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 6207(b)(2); to the Committee on International Relations.

1687. A letter from the Assistant Secretary for Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting a copy of a Presidential Determination with respect to suspending restrictions on United States relations with the Palestine Liberation Organization, pursuant to section 583(a) of the Middle East Peace Facilitation Act of 1994, as amended; to the Committee on International Relations.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 2564

OFFERED BY: MR. CLINGER

AMENDMENT NO. 3: Beginning on page 25, redesignate sections 8 through 24 as sections 9 through 25, respectively, strike "this Act" each place it occurs and insert "this Act (other than section 8)", and insert after line 2 the following:

SEC. 8. PROHIBITION ON USE OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR LOBBYING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter III of chapter 13 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§1354. Prohibition on lobbying by Federal agencies

"(a) PROHIBITION.—Except as provided in subsection (b), until or unless such activity has been specifically authorized by an Act of Congress and notwithstanding any other provision of law, no funds made available to any Federal agency, by appropriation or otherwise, shall be used by such agency for any activity (including the preparation, publication, distribution, or use of any kit, pamphlet, booklet, public presentation, news release, radio, television, or film presentation, video, or other written or oral statement) that is intended to promote public support or opposition to any legislative proposal (including the confirmation of the nomination of a public official or the ratification of a treaty) on which congressional action is not complete.

"(b) CONSTRUCTION.—

(1) COMMUNICATIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not be construed to prevent officers or employees of Federal agencies from communicating directly to Members of Congress, through the proper official channels, their requests for legislation or appropriations that they deem necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business or from responding to requests for information made by Members of Congress.

"(2) OFFICIALS.—Subsection (a) shall not be construed to prevent the President, Vice President, any Federal agency official whose appointment is confirmed by the Senate, any official in the Executive Office of the President directly appointed by the President or Vice President, or the head of any Federal agency described in paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (d), from communicating with the American public, through radio, television, or other public communication media, on the views of the President for or against any pending legislative proposal. The preceding sentence shall not permit any such official to delegate to another person the authority to make communications subject to the exemption provided by such sentence.

"(c) COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—

"(1) ASSISTANCE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL.—In exercising the authority provided in section 712, as applied to this section, the Comptroller General may obtain, without reimbursement from the Comptroller General, the assistance of the Inspector General within whose Federal agency activity prohibited by subsection (a) of this section is under review.

"(2) EVALUATION.—One year after the date of the enactment of this section, the Comptroller General shall report to the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate on the implementation of this section.

"(3) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Comptroller General shall, in the annual report under section 719(a), include summaries of investigations undertaken by the Comptroller General with respect to subsection (a).

"(d) DEFINITION.—For purpose of this section, the term 'Federal agency' means—

"(1) any executive agency, within the meaning of section 105 of title 5;

"(2) any government-sponsored enterprise, within the meaning of section 3(8) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974; and

"(3) any private corporation created by a law of the United States for which the Congress appropriates funds.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 13 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1353 the following new item:

"1354. Prohibition on lobbying by Federal agencies.".

(c) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to the use of funds after the date of the enactment of this Act, including funds appropriated or received on or before such date.

H.R. 2564

OFFERED BY: MR. DEFAZIO

AMENDMENT NO. 4: At the appropriate point in the bill:

SEC. . RECORD OF VISITS BY LOBBYISTS.

Each Member of the House of Representatives and the Senate shall keep a record available to any member of the public, in which shall be recorded each visit to such Member by an individual who is registered under section 308 of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 267). Such record shall include the date of the visit recorded, the name and affiliation of the individual who made the visit, and the subject of the visit to such Member. At the end of each calendar quarter, such record shall be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SEC. . EFFECTIVE DATE.

Section shall take effect on January 1, 1996.

H.R. 2564

OFFERED BY: MR. DINGELL

AMENDMENT NO. 5: Add at the end of section 14 the following:

(d) MISUSE OF NAME.—

(1) AMENDMENT.—Chapter 47 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 1035. Misappropriation of Person's Name in Connection with Lobbying Contact

"Whoever falsely uses or employs the name of any person, or causes such name to be falsely used or employed, in any telegram, letter, other printed or written matter, or electronic communication intended or designed to influence in any manner a Member of Congress to favor or oppose, by vote or otherwise, any legislation before the Congress or any nomination pending before the Senate, whether before or after the introduction of such legislation or the submission of such nomination, for the purpose of conveying the impression that such person authorized such use or employment of the person's name shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.".

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such chapter 47 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"1035. Misappropriation of person's name in connection with lobbying contact.".

H.R. 2564

OFFERED BY: MR. FOX OF PENNSYLVANIA

AMENDMENT NO. 6: Page 23, insert after line 2 the following:

(d) PROHIBITION ON GIFTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—No lobbyist who is registered under section 4 may provide any gift to a Member of the House of Representatives, a Senator, or an officer or employee of the House of Representatives or the Senate unless the lobbyist is related to the Member, Senator, or officer or employee.

(2) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of paragraph (1), the term "gift" means any gratuity, favor, discount, entertainment, hospitality, loan, forbearance, or other item having monetary value. The term includes gifts of services, training, transportation, lodging, and meals, whether provided in kind, by purchase of a ticket, payment in advance, or reimbursement after the expense has been incurred.

(3) EXCEPTION.—The restriction in paragraph (1) shall not apply to the following:

(A) Anything for which the Member, Senator, officer, or employee pays the market value, or does not use and promptly returns to the donor.

(B) A contribution, as defined in section 301(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) that is lawfully made under that Act, a contribution for election to a State or local government office limited as prescribed by section 301(8)(B) of such Act, or attendance at a fundraising event sponsored by a political organization described in section 527(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(C) A gift from a relative as described in section 109(5) of title I of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-521).

(D)(i) Anything provided by an individual on the basis of a personal friendship unless the Member, Senator, officer, or employee has reason to believe that, under the circumstances, the gift was provided because of the official position of the Member, Senator, officer, or employee and not because of the personal friendship.

(ii) In determining whether a gift is provided on the basis of personal friendship, the Member, Senator, officer, or employee shall consider the circumstances under which the gift was offered, such as:

(I) The history of the relationship between the individual giving the gift and the recipient of the gift, including any previous exchange of gifts between such individuals.

(II) Whether to the actual knowledge of the Member, Senator, officer, or employee the individual who gave the gift personally paid for the gift or sought a tax deduction or business reimbursement for the gift.

(III) Whether to the actual knowledge of the Member, Senator, officer, or employee the individual who gave the gift also at the same time gave the same or similar gifts to other Members, officers, or employees.

(E) A contribution or other payment to a legal expense fund established for the benefit of a Member, Senator, officer, or employee that is otherwise lawfully made in accordance with the restrictions and disclosure requirements of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct.

(F) Any gift from another Member, Senator, officer, or employee of the Senate or the House of Representatives.

(G) Food, refreshments, lodging, and other benefits—

(i) resulting from the outside business or employment activities (or other outside activities that are not connected to the duties of the Member, Senator, officer, or employee as an officeholder) of the Member, Senator, officer, or employee, or the spouse of the Member, Senator, officer, or employee, if such benefits have not been offered or enhanced because of the official position of the Member, Senator, officer, or employee and are customarily provided to others in similar circumstances;

(ii) customarily provided by a prospective employer in connection with bona fide employment discussions; or

(iii) provided by a political organization described in section 527(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 in connection with a fundraising or campaign event sponsored by such an organization.

(H) Pension and other benefits resulting from continued participation in an employee welfare and benefits plan maintained by a former employer.

(I) Informational materials that are sent to the office of the Member, Senator, officer, or employee in the form of books, articles, periodicals, other written materials, audiotapes, videotapes, or other forms of communication.

(J) Awards or prizes which are given to competitors in contests or events open to the public, including random drawings.

(K) Honorary degrees (and associated travel, food, refreshments, and entertainment) and other bona fide, nonmonetary awards presented in recognition of public service (and associated food, refreshments, and entertainment provided in the presentation of such degrees and awards).

(L) Donations of products from the State that the Member represents that are intended primarily for promotional purposes, such as display or free distribution, and are of minimal value to any individual recipient.

(M) Training (including food and refreshments furnished to all attendees as an integral part of the training) provided to a Member, Senator, officer, or employee, if such training is in the interest of the Senate or House of Representatives.

(N) Bequests, inheritances, and other transfers at death.

(O) Any item, the receipt of which is authorized by the Foreign Gifts and Decorations Act, the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act, or any other statute.

(P) Anything which is paid for by the Federal Government, by a State or local government, or secured by the Government under a Government contract.

(Q) A gift of personal hospitality (as defined in section 109(14) of the Ethics in Government Act) of an individual other than a registered lobbyist or agent of a foreign principal.

(R) Free attendance at a widely attended convention, conference, symposium, forum, panel discussion, dinner, viewing, reception, or similar event provided by the sponsor of the event.

(S) Opportunities and benefits which are—

(i) available to the public or to a class consisting of all Federal employees, whether or not restricted on the basis of geographic consideration;

(ii) offered to members of a group or class in which membership is unrelated to congressional employment;

(iii) offered to members of an organization, such as an employees' association or congressional credit union, in which membership is related to congressional employment and similar opportunities are available to large segments of the public through organizations of similar size;

(iv) offered to any group or class that is not defined in a manner that specifically discriminates among Government employees on the basis of branch of Government or type of responsibility, or on a basis that favors those of higher rank or rate of pay;

(v) in the form of loans from banks and other financial institutions on terms generally available to the public; or

(vi) in the form of reduced membership or other fees for participation in organization activities offered to all Government employees by professional organizations if the only restrictions on membership relate to professional qualifications.

(T) A plaque, trophy, or other item that is substantially commemorative in nature and which is intended solely for presentation.

(U) Anything for which, in an unusual case, a waiver is granted by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct.

(a) RESTRICTION.—Section 207(f) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking "Any" and inserting "Subject to paragraph (2), any";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (4); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following:

"(2) ADDITIONAL RESTRICTIONS FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.—Any person who is a Member of Congress and who, after that person leaves office as such Member—

"(A) represents a foreign government before any officer or employee of any department or agency of the United States with the intent to influence a decision of such officer or employee in carrying out the officer's or employee's official duties; or

"(B) aids or advises a foreign government with the intent to influence a decision of any officer or employee of the United States in carrying out the officer's or employee's official duties; shall be punished as provided in section 216 of this title.".

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Section 207(f)(4) of title 18, United States Code, as redesignated by subsection (a)(2) of this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'foreign entity' means the government of a foreign country as defined in section 1(e) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 or a foreign political party as defined in section 1(f) of that Act; and

"(B) the term 'foreign government' means the government of a foreign country as defined in section 1(e) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to any person whose service as a Member of Congress (as defined in section 202(d) of title 18, United States Code) terminates before, on, or after the effective date set forth in paragraph (1), but shall not apply to activities prohibited by such amendments which are conducted before such effective date.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A POSITIVE ASPECT TO THE MEDIGRANT DISCUSSION

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to encourage my colleagues to support the principles of home- and community-based services for the disabled and to urge States to consider these services as part of State initiatives to reform Medicaid through the MediGrant proposal.

I have had a longstanding admiration for the ability of our Nation's disabled to bear the burdens imposed on their day-to-day lives and the difficulties they face. It is no wonder that individuals affected by disabilities, as well as their families and friends, have sought greater access to long-awaited advancements in providing care for the disabled. Although this process has been slow at times, we are beginning to see a mindset emerge that encourages personal liberties, not discourages them.

I practice a management technique based on listen, learn, help, and lead. Well, I have listened to the disabled around the Nation and in the 6th Congressional District of Georgia where I have appointed a task force on disabilities. This task force has developed ideas that I think are thoughtful in addressing the needs of the disabled and which add a tremendously positive aspect to the MediGrant discussion.

The task force believes that there currently exists a bias in Medicaid toward institutionalization and away from home- and community-based services. While there are circumstances where institutionalization is the only viable choice, the task force believes that home- and community-based services should be the first option when appropriate for people with disabilities. I share in their assertion that no person should be forced into an institution to receive services that can be more effectively and more economically delivered in the home or community.

The task force points to the fact that 31 percent of the current Medicaid budget goes to institutional long-term care and only 6 percent goes to community-based long-term care. Furthermore, they assert that the average cost of nursing home care per person is $38,000 annually and that allowing persons to remain in their homes and communities is more economical, as well as more humane.

I hope that my colleagues will carefully consider these ideas on behalf of their constituents and help to empower individuals to realize their maximum freedoms and potentials.

GIFT BAN LEGISLATION

HON. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of legislation sponsored by my Texas colleague, Representative JOHN BRYANT, to require lobbyists to register with the House and Senate and make conforming changes to the Rules of the House of Representatives with regard to restrictions on gifts given by lobbyists. In light of my support of this legislation, I have agreed to sign a discharge petition to bring this legislation to the floor of the House for consideration.

In the past, I have not signed discharge petitions. It is my belief that such devices are generally harmful to the legislative process, as they call for the avoidance of the committee system which serves our Government well. However, because of the majority's disdain for that very process, and the lack of consideration given to the attempts to bring the legislation before the appropriate committees for action, this extreme step has become necessary. Therefore, I will add my name to those seeking to bring the legislation before the House.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I have added my name as a cosponsor to House Resolution 264, legislation sponsored by Republican Representative BURTON. This bill, which I hope will be up for a vote this week on the floor of the House, would require greater disclosure of gifts given to Members of Congress. I support the bill as a bipartisan solution to the need for comprehensive gift legislation. Under the Burton bill, Members are required to disclose all gifts and meals received which are worth more than $50. The bill makes other appropriate changes to the Rules of the House regarding this issue.

TRIBUTE TO HARRY A. SCARR

HON. WILLIAM H. ZELIFF, JR.

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. ZELIFF. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment today to note the unexpected passing of Mr. Harry Scarr, the Deputy Director of the Bureau of the Census.

Immediately prior to his position as Deputy Director, Mr. Scarr served as the Bureau's Acting Director for almost 22 months. In 1988, Mr. Scarr received the Department of Commerce's highest award, a Gold Medal, for his contributions to Federal economic statistics and to the preparation for the 1990 census.

Mr. Scarr's 25 years of dedicated service to the Federal Government includes tenures at the Department of Commerce, the Department of Justice, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the National Institute of Mental Health. Having received his degrees from the University of Michigan and Harvard University, and having taught at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, Mr. Scarr chose a career in Federal service. His distinguished career is an example for all. He was among the best and brightest, and nobly chose Federal service.

As chairman of the subcommittee which exercises oversight over the Bureau of the Census, I was looking forward to working with Mr. Scarr. The Census Bureau will greatly miss his expertise and knowledge as it prepares for the 2000 census. I offer my condolences to the family of Mr. Scarr and his fellow workers at the Bureau.

CONGRATULATIONS TO BISHOP ANTHONY M. PILLA: CHOSEN AS PRESIDENT OF CATHOLIC BISHOPS

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to extend congratulations to Bishop Anthony M. Pilla, a resident of my congressional district and leader of the Diocese of Cleveland. On yesterday, Bishop Pilla was elected as the new president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops. In this influential post, he will serve as the chief spokesman for the Catholic Church and provide leadership for its 60 million American parishioners. Previously, Bishop Pilla served as vice president of this distinguished organization. On behalf of the residents of the 11th Congressional District, we express our strong support and encouragement to Bishop Pilla as he assumes the presidency.

Since 1980, Bishop Anthony Pilla has led the Diocese of Cleveland. Throughout his tenure, he has been outspoken on the social, political, and religious issues confronting our community and the Nation. His strong leadership and dedication has earned him the respect of the entire community. He is not only admired, but he is an individual of the highest integrity and commitment.

As he assumes the helm of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Bishop Pilla does so with the full support of the organization. In the election, he garnered 170 of the 238 votes cast, and bested 10 other candidates to win the 3-year presidency.

Mr. Speaker, on Friday, November 17, 1995, the Cleveland community will express its pride in Bishop Anthony Pilla with a Mass being held in his honor. I take pride in expressing my personal congratulations to Bishop Pilla. He is someone whom I greatly admire, and I wish him well as he assumes this major post.

PICK-SLOAN PROJECT FACILITIES TRANSFER ACT

HON. PAT ROBERTS

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, one of the key reform goals of this Congress is to examine all aspects of the Federal Government's involvement in the day-to-day lives of our citizens, and determine which of those Federal roles would be more efficiently managed on the local level and/or by the private sector. The portions of the Pick-Sloan project in Kansas and Nebraska, appear to fit this category.

However, the procedures established that allow the Bureau of Reclamation to transfer title—and the management and financial responsibilities—to the irrigation districts are often contentious and inordinately time consuming.

Today I am introducing a bill to expedite this process and so all interested parties can raise their issues and concerns relative to the title transfer of the Kansas and Nebraska Pick-Sloan projects. There are sure to be provisions in this bill that some may find problematic. The introduction of this legislation will encourage a comprehensive discussion on this transfer to ensure all appropriate issues are adequately addressed.

The Missouri River Basin, Kansas and Nebraska, Pick-Sloan Facilities Transfer Act will contribute to our continuing efforts to reduce and reform the role of the Federal Government. And by the consideration of this act, Congress will provide an opportunity for all interested parties to register their concerns so they can be properly addressed.

TRIBUTE TO FATHER PAUL STAUD

HON. WILLIAM J. COYNE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Father Paul R. Staud, the parochial vicar at Saint Malachy Parish in Coraopolis, PA. Father Paul will celebrate 25 years of service in the priesthood with an afternoon liturgy at Saint Malachy on November 26, 1995.

Father Paul was ordained at Holy Innocents Church in Sheraden, PA, on October 31, 1970. He studied at Assumption School, Avalon High School, Point Park College, Saint Gregory Seminary in Cincinnati, John Carroll University, and Saint Vincent Seminary.

Father Paul has been parochial vicar at Saint Malachy Parish since November 1991. His service to the parish has been exemplary.

His service to the church has also included stints as parochial vicar at Holy Innocents Church [from 1970 to 1974], Saint Theresa Church in Munhall, PA [from 1974 to 1975], Saint Veronica Church in Ambridge, PA [from 1975 to 1978], and Saint Joseph Church in Mount Oliver, PA [from 1978 to 1983]. He subsequently served as pastor at Saint Alphonsus Church in Murrinsville, PA, and at Epiphany Church in Boyers, PA, from 1983 to 1991, and he was also in residence at Saint Columbkille Church in Imperial, PA, in 1991.

Father Paul was deanery director of religious education at the South Pittsburgh Deanery from 1979 to 1983, and deanery director of the Butler Deanery in Butler, PA, from 1984 to 1991. Father Paul has been a master catechist for the diocese since 1979, and he is currently the program manager for religious education at Saint Malachy.

Father Paul has provided 25 years of dedicated service to many of the Catholic parishes of southwestern Pennsylvania. I want to congratulate Father Paul on his silver anniversary.

THANK YOU MRS. RUTH MACDONALD FOR YOUR YEARS OF DEDICATED PUBLIC SERVICE

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to thank Mrs. Ruth Macdonald of McLeansboro, IL for her years of dedicated public service to the people of Hamilton County. In 1976 she was elected as Hamilton County coroner. Three years later Ruth was appointed circuit clerk, and was elected to that position in 1980. She subsequently was re-elected in 1984, 1988, and 1992. Ruth retired on July 31, 1995 after serving 16 years as the Hamilton County circuit clerk.

A native of Kentucky, Ruth moved to McLeansboro in 1959 with her husband and three children. Since her arrival in southern Illinois Ruth has worked hard to ensure that her family and neighbors live in a community that strives for excellence. Through her tireless efforts as a mother and public servant she has helped her children excel and contribute to their communities. Ruth's daughter, Alice, is a circuit court judge in Wayne County, IL; her son, John, is an engineer in Cincinnati, OH; and her son, James, is a professor at Weber State University in Ogden, UT.

Mr. Speaker, until the 1992 election, Hamilton County still used paper ballots. Many times the election results were not known until noon the following day, and it was Ruth's office that would remain open to the public around the clock on primary and general election nights, serving coffee and food to those interested in the election outcome.

There is no question Ruth Macdonald has been a public servant of the highest standards, and she will be missed as circuit clerk. I take great pride in honoring her service to the citizens of Hamilton County and all others she served. Ruth Macdonald has set a very good example for all of us to follow, and I wish her the very best as she begins her retirement.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1995

HON. JACK METCALF

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Mr. CASTLE, my good friend and chairman of the Subcommittee on Domestic and International Monetary Policy, for allowing me to discuss some issues about the Defense Production Act.

The Defense Production Act has been an important tool for acquiring needed equipment and technology for our Armed Forces in the event of a national emergency. Yet, the Defense Production Act is a multi-issue law. Much of this expansive act deals with advising and working with commercial activities to study, invent, and produce materials that could be used in the event of wartime activity.

When the DPA came up in subcommittee, concerns were raised by other Members and myself. Besides the continuance of authorizing funds for such an outdated, all-encompassing and convoluted act—it also has sweeping authority given to the President. This nebulous language must be cleared to set a direct mission for use of DPA authority. What we have now can be interpreted as essentially a War Powers Act clothed in 1950's post-World War II language—language that gives heavy leeway to the executive branch.

Make no mistake, I am not favoring withholding vital equipment from our Armed Forces and thus I am favoring reappropriating this bill, but the report language fostered for this bill mandates the executive branch to review and to reform the outdated language and to set clear the mission for the DPA. It requires the President to provide an interim report and a final report before appropriations end in 1998. The goal of this report language is to help refine the bill, provide what is necessary for the Armed Forces by Presidential order, and to set a direction for a rewrite of the legislation before the next appropriation cycle.

Maintaining vital procurement in times of national emergency is imperative—but modernizing statutes to ensure proper legality is also extremely critical.

GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWN

HON. RON PACKARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, it absolutely galls me that the President has chosen to play politics and shut down the Federal Government rather than join us in making a downpayment on a balanced budget and a brighter future for our children.

The Government shutdown is solely on the President's shoulders. He has provided no leadership and no plan for a balanced budget. Despite his rhetoric to the contrary, the President has no balanced budget. Never has.

I urge my colleagues not to give in to the scare tactics propagated by the White House.

We need to stay our course and pass the remaining bills necessary to balance the budget. We must remain committed to real reform—reform in welfare, reform in Medicare, and tax cuts for families. Once we have completed the bills, it is up to the President to do what is right and sign on for the future of America.

We have a promise to keep to America. A year ago this month, we promised to end business as usual in Government. The American people are counting on us.

IN MEMORY OF JOHN BEN SHEPPERD

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, during the recent dedication of the Korean War Memorial and during last weekend's Veteran's Day memorial ceremonies in east Texas, I was reminded of the oratorical prowess of a legendary Texan and former constituent of mine, the late John Ben Shepperd (1915–90). John Ben was one of the first statewide officials that I met when I first entered politics in the 1950's. He was a kind and considerate man—so capable of friendship—and so strong as a leader.

The caption on the Korean War Memorial, "Freedom Is Not Free," is a phrase that was coined by John Ben in the late 1940's and used in hundreds of public appearances during his civic and political career. In 1953 he published an excerpt of his speeches and entitled the booklet, "Freedom Is Not Free." This and his book, "Freedom's Advocate," won him the coveted George Washington Medal from the Freedom Foundation of Valley Forge, PA.

John Ben would have been pleased and proud to see his language used to memorialize the sacrifices of American soldiers who defended freedom in distant parts of the globe, and I am sure that this pleases his widow, Mamie Shepperd, who lives in my district in Gladewater, TX. He would have joined in the praise and recognition, which is so long overdue.

John Ben was one of America's strongest advocates of democracy. He often reminded us that freedom is not a gift to be enjoyed, but an ideal that must be defended. He continually called on every citizen to uphold and promote our system of government and free enterprise.

In 1948, as president of the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce, John Ben organized the "Freedom Flight." According to Jaycee archives, he traveled over 250,000 miles and gave three hundred speeches heard by a quarter of a million people. As Texas Secretary of State and attorney general from 1950 to 1957, he continued to be an eloquent spokesman for democracy.

John Ben had a special concern for young Americans. According to our former colleague, the Hon. Jake Pickle, who first knew John Ben at the University of Texas, he passionately cared that future generations should understand their roots in order to appreciate the American legacy of democracy and heroism.

John Ben's phrase, "Freedom is Not Free," on the Korean Memorial is a stirring reminder to future generations and a fitting tribute to a dynamic Texan. Mr. Speaker, John Ben Shepperd leaves behind a powerful legacy that serves as an inspiration to us all. I ask my colleagues to join me today in paying tribute to this outstanding American. His contributions to freedom's cause cannot be forgotten.

TRIBUTE TO BOY SCOUT TROOP 283

HON. JIM RAMSTAD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the proud history, rich tradition and remarkable accomplishments of Boy Scout Troop 283 of Wayzata, MN, in my Third Congressional District.

This Sunday, November 19, Troop 283 will be celebrating its 80th anniversary.

I am particularly proud of Boy Scout Troop 283 since it is based at my own Wayzata Community Church. I know the great work this troop has done and its commitment to excellence.

Boy Scout Troop 283 has represented the highest standards in Scouting for eight decades. The hundreds of Scouts and their many volunteer leaders have displayed an inspiring dedication through these past 80 years which has had a powerful and positive impact on the quality of life in our area.

The young people of today, who now more than ever need strong adult guidance and parental involvement in learning valuable skills that will help them mature into good citizens, have been extremely well served by the generous and dedicated volunteers and parents who have led Troop 283 through the years.

Troop 283's emphasis on providing our young people with positive role models, the importance of community service to help people in the need and protect the environment, and the critical value of exercising active, good citizenship has been truly remarkable. There is no price you can place on that kind of public service, leadership, and good citizenship.

The participation of adult volunteers and the Scouts of Troop 283 will continue to make a huge difference in the future of our community, State, and Nation. These young people are tomorrow's leaders and they are getting the skills, knowledge, moral guidance, and inspiration they need to keep America the greatest country in the world and a lighthouse for freedom and liberty into the 21st century.

Everyone who has been involved with Boy Scout Troop 283 through the years is to be congratulated on their invaluable 80-year investment in the future of our Nation. Troop 283 has our deepest admiration and sincerest gratitude for a job well done, as well as our best wishes for the future.

On behalf of all the people in our area, I wholeheartedly thank Boy Scout Troop 283 for its contributions to making our area a great place to live, work, and raise a family.

SALUTE TO AMERICORPS PARTICIPANTS OF SOUTH DAKOTA

HON. TIM JOHNSON

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the participants of the second AmeriCorps team in South Dakota. On October 24, 1995, at an Oath of Service ceremony in Rosebud, SD, 15 dedicated individuals committed themselves to 1 year of community service in South Dakota as participants in the AmeriCorps Program. I strongly support the concept of national community service, and I commend each of the participants who will provide much needed assistance to communities all over the country.

The AmeriCorps team will be working on two projects both of which will help rebuild rural America and protect the environment. The first project, headquartered at the Bad River watershed area in Ft. Pierre, SD, involves five members of the AmeriCorps team, and focuses on range and water quality improvements, as well as youth and adult education projects. The second project on the Rosebud Reservation involves a 10-member team which is helping with locally identified projects. These projects include range improvement, water quality activities, and other locally identified natural resource improvement projects.

I am confident that the experiences of the participants as members of AmeriCorps will establish a lasting ethic of civic duty in each of them. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I wish to recognize each member of the second AmeriCorps team of South Dakota: Matthew Blumer, Ft. Pierre, SD; Kevin Boyd, Rosebud, SD; Roger Brush Breaker, Rosebud, SD; Michele Edelbach, Ft. Pierre, SD; Harvey Elk Looks Back, Rosebud, SD; Paula Hoerner, Ft. Pierre, SD; Kathy Knife, Rosebud, SD; Lester Leader Charge, Rosebud, SD; Joseph Nichols, Ft. Pierre, SD; Clarence Poorman, Rosebud, SD; Pat Buscher, Ft. Pierre, SD; John Sitting Bear, Rosebud, SD; Melvin Staples, Rosebud, SD; Richard Traversie, Rosebud, SD; and Emily White Hat, Rosebud, SD. I am confident that the work of these individuals will not only provide much-needed assistance to the Rosebud Reservation and the Bad River watershed project, but also that the next year will be immensely rewarding for each of the participants. I congratulate each participant on their commitment to service and to furthering their education—I firmly believe that education is essential to a productive life and vital to American efforts to remain a first-class economic power.

Today, I would also like to commend the USDA for its innovative and extensive participation in AmeriCorps, and the members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. AmeriCorp-Team USDA provides for a truly unique partnership involving tribal, State, and Federal Government, and this effort will address a lot of the traditional native concerns for the environment. So, as the GOP threatens to terminate funding for AmeriCorp, I am proud that rural enhancement and environmental protection is taking place in the great State of South Dakota and I believe that these programs are examples of why the continuation of the AmeriCorps program is critically important.

IN APPRECIATION OF DR. HARRY SCARR

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I join with Chairman BILL CLINGER in expressing our deepest sympathy to the wife and children of Dr. Harry Scarr, the Deputy Director of the Census Bureau.

Dr. Scarr is one of those outstanding individuals who devoted his professional time and energies to making the Federal Government work better to serve the public. Trained at Harvard and the University of Michigan, Dr. Scarr chose to devote his considerable talent to public service, and we are all the better for it.

There are a number of sensitive positions in the Federal Government that require a manager with both skill and tact. Dr. Scarr held several of those posts. During the 1970's he worked at the Department of Justice guiding policy and planning decisions for research and statistics on the Federal Justice System. Among the positions he held there were the assistant director in the Office of Policy and Planning, administrator of the Federal Justice Research Program, and Director of the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

In the 1980's he moved to the Department of Commerce Economic and Statistics Administration. He subsequently was appointed Deputy and then Acting Director of the Census Bureau. Dr. Scarr brought stability to the Census Bureau which was without a director for a year and a half.

The Federal Government has many dedicated and hard working employees. The dedication and contribution of Dr. Harry Scarr was among its best.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE SECOND SOUTH CENTRAL LEADERSHIP PROGRAM GRADUATION CEREMONY

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, on November 17, 1995, the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund [MALDEF] will hold its second South Central Leadership Program Graduation Ceremony. At the ceremony, 100 graduates of the program will be honored for their successful completion of the program and dedication to community service in the South Central Los Angeles area.

This year were four projects: the Youth and Parent Empowerment Conference, the Citizenship Conference, the Economic Development Conference, and Alternative Methods for Education. The Youth and Parent Empowerment Conference deserves special merit for its collaborative effort with the leadership development in inter-ethnic relations program. The Citizenship Conference, with assistance from the National Association of Appointed and Elected Officials [NALEO], resulted in the processing of more than 100 applications for citizenship. The Economic Development Conference, working with L.A. Councilman Mark Ridley Thomas' district 8, enlisted several organizations, such as Bank of America, the Mexican American Opportunities Foundation, and the University of Southern California, to name a few, and designed new strategies and opportunities for local economic growth. The alternative method for education project, using the Montessori School Model, shared the successes of the tested and innovative approach to education.

The South Central Leadership Program is another example of MALDEF's efforts to help the Latino community build and strengthen the social, economic, and political infrastructure in this neglected area of Los Angeles. Through the program's grassroots leadership training and support of existing and emerging community based organizations, MALDEF plays an important role in opening new doors of access for Latinos.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me today in honoring these distinguished graduates. From the Technical Assistance Program the graduates are: Maria Alvarez; Marina Alvarez; Sonia Alvarez; Rosa Avelar; Gloria Barragan; Maria Campos; Kwame Cooper; Eduardo Cordero; Jeanette Lopez Escobar; Maria Flores; Grace Galindo; Rudy Garavito; Maria Gonzales; Vivian Harmon; Ramiro Hernandez; Letisia Mauricio; Bertha Melgoza; Gloria Mendez; Dina Moreno; Maria T. Palacios; Faustina Palomares; Yolanda Perales; Eduardo Peregrina; Sonia Ramos; Ana Maria Rodriguez; Irma Rodriguez; Maria Rubalcava; Gloria Saldana; Reina Schmitz; Leticia Vega; Laura Villegas, and Enrique Carrillo.

Graduating from the Leaders of the Future Program are: Gloria Barragan; Maria Campos; Magdalena Cervantes; Maria Dubon; Maria Gonzalez; Evelia Landaverde; Margarita Landeros; Rosalia Lucero; Gloria Mendez; Ana Alicia Munoz; Sara Olivera; Eduardo Peregrina; Guillermina Pereź; Alicia Ramirez; Estela Tortoledo; Hermelinda Gonzalez; Sonia Alvarez; Maria Alvarez; Wendy Rivera; Laura Villegas; Fermin Rivera; Marina Meraz; Ivone Garcia; Maria Palacios; Ana Maria Rodriguez; Enrique Carrillo; Marcos Aguilar; Pastel Mireles; Maria Ortiz, and Salvador Rios.

IN HONOR OF S. REID GUSTAFSON

HON. ZOE LOFGREN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct privilege for me to rise today to recognize and honor S. Reid Gustafson, a man who, for many years, has contributed greatly to the community of Santa Clara County, CA.

On Tuesday, the 21st of November, 1995, Mr. Gustafson is being honored as the 1995 Distinguished Citizen, at the 21st Annual Distinguished Citizen Award Dinner of the Santa Clara County Council of the Boy Scouts of America. The dinner will take place in the Imperial Ballroom of the Fairmont Hotel in San Jose, CA. I am honored to join with the Santa Clara County Council of the Boy Scouts of America in congratulating Mr. Gustafson on this momentous occasion.

As the Santa Clara County Council of the Boy Scouts of America has noted in their event program from the Distinguished Citizen Award Dinner, Mr. Gustafson is, "a person who exemplifies a commitment to the community, integrity and leadership." Those who know Reid Gustafson know that his spirit and dogged commitment of the community make it a better place for all of us to live and work.

By profession, Mr. Gustafson is a leader in the housing industry, having been president of Shea Holmes of northern California for the last 12 years. In spite of a very busy work schedule, Mr. Gustafson has also found the time to become involved in numerous community programs and activities, and is a role model for all of us in terms of his outstanding commitment to community service. From a personal standpoint, I admire Reid Gustafson very much for this dedication to the people of Santa Clara County.

Mr. Gustafson's extensive community involvement includes serving as the current chairman of the Board of Directors of the San Jose Symphony. Mr. Gustafson also serves on the board of directors of the San Jose Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce, and is a past chairman of the board of managers for the central branch of the YMCA in Santa Clara County.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to honor Mr. Gustafson for the very important role he has played in raising funds for many outstanding community based programs. Through Shea Holmes, Mr. Gustafson has played an integral part in supporting such worthy organizations as the Boy Scouts of Santa Clara County, the YMCA Current Support Campaign, the Crippled Children's Society and the new Children's Shelter of Santa Clara County.

Throughout his career, Mr. Gustafson has served on numerous building industry associations, and has helped to shape the planning of numerous homes and communities throughout California. He has served as the past chairman of the board of directors of the Building Industry Association of northern California, and has also served on the boards of both the State and National Homebuilders' Association. In addition, Mr. Gustafson has served as a commissioner on the Bay Vision 20/20 Taskforce, a key regional planning body in northern California.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite you and my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join with me in expressing gratitude and appreciation to Reid Gustafson for his efforts to make our community a better place. I also would like to thank the Santa Clara Council of the Boy Scouts of America for their outstanding leadership in our community, and for giving me the opportunity to share in their recognition of Reid Gustafson as the 1995 Distinguished Citizen Award recipient.

THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF HOLY CROSS POST NO. 417 CATHOLIC WAR VETERANS

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Catholic War Veterans, Holy Cross Post 417 in Trenton, NJ on the 50th anniversary of their founding.

Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1945, shortly after the surrender of Japan, the young men of Holy Cross Parish, like young men all across the country including my dad who was a combat veteran in the South Pacific began returning from the Armed Forces. At a young age they had stood up to aggression and prevailed. Now they were home, and anxious to get on with their lives that had been interrupted by tyranny. Monsignor Francis Kasprowicz, pastor of Holy Cross Parish took a great interest and concern for the young veterans. So he granted permission to have a Catholic War Veterans Post formed in the Parish. This interest in our returning servicemen led to the founding of Catholic War Veterans, Holy Cross Post 417.

Over the years, Post 417 has opened membership to all those who served in the Armed Forces during World War II, the Korean and Vietnam wars, and beyond. During those years they have been honored for having the largest membership of any post in New Jersey. Others have fallen by the roadside, but Post 417 continues to serve the veterans, not only in Holy Cross Parish, but in all of Mercer County, NJ.

That service is found in the Post Catholic Action and Americanism programs which are year round efforts. Post 417's Palm Sunday Breakfast, Wafer Supper, Fifth Sunday Corporate Communions, Memorial Day Mass, Veterans and Pearl Harbor Day Services are annual events. A Christmas party and an Easter egg hunt are also held yearly for the children of members of the Post as well as the children of auxiliary members.

The Welfare Program also plays an important role in Holy Cross Post 417. Members give of their time to visit disabled veterans at the VA home in Menlo Park, NJ. Often they will play bingo and provide refreshments during their visits with the veterans. The Post holds an annual Cross of Peace collection and they send cards to sick veterans.

The Post organized a Ladies Auxiliary in 1949. They have grown to become not only the largest auxiliary in the State, but also the largest auxiliary in the Nation. The members of Post 417 are well aware that their programs would not be possible without the assistance of their impressive auxiliary.

Mr. Speaker, many influential voices on the American scene today are of the opinion that the United States' greatest ailment is not a lack of wealth, or opportunity. Rather, they see a breakdown in the communal bonds that give people a sense of belonging in an otherwise uncertain and often hostile world. Few would argue with these voices that a sense of community is essential to a cohesive society. Obviously the family must provide the primary bulwark—grounding the individual with a sense that they are not alone in the world. But it is difficult for the family alone to enrich life with the kind of meaning and fraternity we all crave. Certainly careers and Government services can not fill the void either. It is precisely organizations such as Catholic War Veteran, Holy Cross Post 417 which best link us all with the larger community that exists beyond our homes and individual lives.

Post 417, by their long record of involvement in our community is a model of exactly the type of organization which brings us all together in a stable and free society. The service and fellowship they provide to each other, as well as numerous other veterans of our Nation's armed conflicts, certainly yield countless benefits to us all as members of the human family and residents of central New Jersey. We are all truly blessed for their 50 years of service to, as their motto proclaims, God, Country, and Home.

Catholic War Veterans, Holy Cross Post 417, I salute you and all your members both living and deceased on your first half-century of service and wish you the best of success for the many, many years your future surely holds.

FINALLY, BUSINESS AS UN-USUAL

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, let's cut right through the political fog and rhetoric and take a good, objective look at what is actually driving the budget impasse and showdown we are currently embroiled in with President Clinton. The heart of the debate boils down to ideology and principles. Are we going to reign in the role of the Federal Government or not? It has been 40 long years of Democrat rule in the House of Representatives. In that time, the welfare state has ballooned out of control because the answer to all the societal problems is to spend more, more, more.

Well, Mr. Speaker, all we need to do is look at the indisputable facts. As Federal spending skyrocketed, so too has crime and violent crime, drug use, illegitimate children, fatherless homes, and the number of welfare recipients. These trends are indicative of the degree to which the very fabric of American ideals have been shredded. But what was it that actually ripped and tore at the core principles and values upon which this Nation was founded? Clearly, the policies of the welfare state are at the root of this destruction. Now, the only questions that remain are what made the welfare state such a failure and how do we fix it.

This is the crux of the current debate and what makes this moment truly historic. The overwhelming majority of the American public can tell you that the root cause is the inherent message of the welfare state that people not only can get, but deserve, something for nothing. Even President Clinton knows this is the popular opinion. He campaigned on real welfare reform and being tough on crime and drugs yet this week he has said he will veto the Republican proposal to bring real reform to the welfare state and the facts show that drug use is on an undeniable upswing. He has said he is for a balanced budget but now he refuses to even commit to one, yet alone act on it. Why? Because in reality, he is entrenched in this failed ideology along with all the leftist leaders of the Democrat Party. He is entrenched in this bureaucratic mindset which resists change at all costs, even when the American public recognizes and has demanded such change. That's why people are leaving the party in droves.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed unfortunate that political pandering, class warfare and outright scare tactics are the only responses they have left because their only core principles are tax and spend. However, I would like to submit to the RECORD an editorial from the Wall Street Journal of November 13, 1995, which cuts right to the chase. I hope we can all take their lead and keep an eye on the real debate because it is a truly momentous period in American history.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Nov. 13, 1995]

REVIEW AND OUTLOOK—AT LAST, A CHOICE

So President Clinton vows to shut down the federal government tomorrow if Republican majorities in Congress don't bow to his budget will. Well, be our guest. By all means, let's shut down "non-essential" parts of the government and see if anyone cares.

At least a shutdown might focus Americans, and maybe even a bored media, on the real stakes in this year's budget debate: Is the United States, for the first time since the 1920s, going to rein in the federal government, or not? This is the heart of the matter. The rest is political fog.

Republicans are close to putting on Mr. Clinton's desk a bill that does more or less what they promised to do last November. For the first time in decades, Congress would actually cut some spending. A few parts of Leviathan would even go out of business. The tax burden would ease. Welfare policy would be opened up to 50 state experiments. And so on.

Readers of these columns know we've criticized some parts of this GOP budget. We wish it cut more spending, especially on pet Congressional fiefs, and that it cut taxes in a way that better promoted economic growth. We wish a lot of things, But if this effort fails, the alternative isn't a better budget. The alternative is a victory for the Beltway status quo. That's why this budget fight really is a seminal moment in American politics.

Precisely because Bill Clinton knows this, he wants to delay or obfuscate the real choice. They very last thing he wants is to have to decide whether to sign or veto this budget. For months, ever since Dick Morris came back as his strategist, Mr. Clinton has had it both ways. He claims to be for all of the things the public wants—tax cuts, a balanced budget, welfare reform—but he hasn't had to do anything to prove it.

Meanwhile, his left wing has come down on him with a wrath usually reserved for Republicans. Marian Wright Edelman, Hillary Clinton's mentor and mother superior of the welfare state, wrote an open letter all but accusing Mr. Clinton of child abuse for endorsing a welfare bill that got 35 Democratic votes in the Senate.

So Mr. Clinton has, for now, dropped his compromise budget zig and adopted an opposition zag. His advisers are openly bragging that this will help him on the "character" issue. If he vetoes the budget, he'll lose his reputation for flip-flopping! At least, we suppose, until the Dec. 15 filing deadline for the New Hampshire primary, after which the left won't be able to field a challenger against him.

Which brings us back to the real issue of reining in government. On this score the GOP budget is hardly radical. Over seven years, it would shrink federal spending's share of the economy only slightly—to 18.5% of GDP in fiscal 2002, from 21.7% in 1995, says the Congressional Budget Office. Total federal spending would continue to rise.

We repeat: Total spending would rise—to $1.844 trillion in 2002 from $1.530 trillion.

Tax revenues would climb even faster—to $1.853 trillion from $1.355 trillion in 1995. As a share of the economy, taxes would fall only slightly—to 18.6% of GDP in 2002 from 19.3% this year. Taxation's share of GDP has stayed remarkably near 19% for 20 years now, so this is no great change either. Congress is merely bringing its spending into line with the maximum tax burden Americans seem willing to pay.

It's hard to know what Mr. Clinton means whey he says this budget is "extreme." Does he want Congress to spend $1.9 trillion a year, or $2 trillion, or what? How much is enough?

The president has been most shameless on Medicare and Medicaid, which are growing by 10% a year. Under current law these and other entitlements plus interest are growing so fast they will consume all federal tax revenues by 2012. Every dime. There'll be nothing left for defense or education or anything else Mr. Clinton claims to value.

The logic of Mr. Clinton's demagoguery is that taxes will have to go up, sooner or later. Medicare is financed in part by a payroll tax that in 1937 was 2% on incomes up to $3,000. Today it is 15.3% on $62,600 of income. How high does Mr. Clinton want the payroll tax to go if he doesn't want to accept Republican reforms? And by the way, where are the budget scolds (Warren Rudman, Pete Peterson, David Broder) who've griped for years that politicians lack the courage to tackle middle-class entitlements? When Republicans finally do it, they temporize.

These are the real stakes in this budget debate. They have been obscured by a president who wants to change the subject. And by a media class which decries political "bickering" while ignoring the substance of the debate. The shouting is so loud inside Washington this year precisely because this is the first budget in years that is not business as usual. Mr. President, it's time to choose.

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF TEMPLE ISRAEL

HON. SUE MYRICK

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I insert the following for the RECORD:

In the United States House of Representatives November 18, 1995.

Whereas Temple Israel in Charlotte, North Carolina is celebrating its 100th Anniversary; and

Whereas Temple Israel is the oldest and largest Conservative congregation in the Carolinas; existing to strengthen Judaism through worship, study, celebration and the promotion of human well-being; and

Whereas Temple Israel has been an integral part of the Jewish community in Charlotte and surrounding areas, and has given her congregants a warm environment in which to expand their minds, hearts, and souls; and

Now, Therefore I, Sue Myrick, Member of Congress for North Carolina's 9th District of Congress, do honor the congregation and of the Temple Israel as it celebrates 100 years of spiritual growth; and heartily congratulate the entire synagogue family. Best wishes for continued success, health and happiness; and

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand this Seventeenth day of November, Nineteen Hundred and Ninety-Five.

OUTRAGE OVER CONTINUING RESOLUTION

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my outrage over the continuing resolution shutdown of the Federal Government and the furlough of 800,000 Federal employees nationwide. No American is being left unaffected. The House leadership is holding the American people hostage to a radical philosophy that has little credibility. Some of the services that all Americans depend upon are now unavailable. An example of these services include the following:

The Social Security Administration can no longer accept any new applications for benefits.

The Veterans' Administration is unable to issue benefit payments for December 1, 1995.

Individuals cannot receive passports.

Federal Home Administration cannot make housing loans.

National parks and the Smithsonian Institution are closed.

In Houston, 2,200 Federal employees at Johnson Space Center have been furloughed.

The House considered another continuing resolution today that eliminates some of the extraneous provisions such as the increase in Medicare part B premiums that caused the President to veto the second continuing resolution. I still have some concerns about this new continuing resolution because of some of the assumptions used in drafting the bill. It remains to be seen whether President Clinton will veto this resolution.

The ironic aspect of this shutdown is that the Federal Government is not saving any money. When a budget impasse occurred in 1990 and the Government shutdown over the Columbus Day weekend, it cost $1.6 million. According to White House Budget Director Alice Rivlin, the Government incurs expenses to secure vacant Federal buildings, pay penalties on contracts that cannot be honored and expenses to reimburse furloughed Federal employees since those employees that are usually paid for the time away from the office.

I would like to remind my colleagues that Americans are closely watching these deliberations. A USA Today/CNN? gallup poll taken yesterday indicated that 49 percent of those individuals survey blame the Republican leadership for the shutdown.

Moreover, 61 percent of those individuals are angry about the impasse. Forty-nine percent prefer the Democratic Party's approach to reducing the Federal deficit and maintaining critical Federal programs. Finally, 48 percent of the respondents approve of the President's handling of the budget negotiations whereas only 22 percent of the respondents agree with the manner in which the Speaker of the House has handled the negotiations.

Therefore, we must end the political posturing and end the disruption of the lives of millions of Americans. Another issue is the impending default by the Federal Government on its debt obligations. A major interest payment on the Federal debt is due today. We like to boast that we are a superpower and that the world should look to us for leadership. We are a poor example for the rest of the world if we allow the Federal Government to be in default. This is unacceptable to the American people. It should be unacceptable to every Member of the House of Representatives. We must pass legislation to extend the debt ceiling without delay. And we should pass a streamlined continuing resolution to get America working again.

MONTEREY BAY AND LANGUAGE LEARNING

HON. SAM FARR

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, on November 1, 1995, I had the honor of introducing a resolution heralding the Monterey Language Capital of the World initiative.

H. Res. 266 commends the Monterey Bay public-private partnership for its recognition of the unique language resources that are located in the 17th Congressional District and its strong commitment to promoting language diversity.

Monterey is directly involved with 25 percent of the Nation's postsecondary learning in languages other than English. What Research Triangle Park is to applied academics, what Silicon Valley is to high technology, Monterey Bay will be to language learning.

California's central coast has a rich heritage of professional language resources, including: the Defense Language Institute, the U.S. Naval Postgraduate School, the AT&T Language Line Services, the Monterey Institute of International Studies, California State University at Monterey Bay, the University of California at Santa Cruz, Monterey Peninsula College, CTB McGraw-Hill, and American Global Studies Institute.

One of my earliest initiatives after being elected in 1993 was to convene a higher education summit in the district. The participants—CSUMB, USSC, Monterey Peninsula College, MIIS—all agreed to hammer out a language memorandum of understanding whereby the educational institutions agreed to share resources in language training.

In order to make the Defense Language Institute a participant in the Language MOU, I secured passage of a provision in the fiscal year 1994 defense bill which allows civilians to attend the DLI. With a faculty of 900 and a student body of 3,000, DLI is the largest language training institution in the world. It has been located in Monterey since 1946, and teaches foreign languages to other Federal agencies like the FBI, NASA, and the DEA. For instance, when an American astronaut participates in a joint United States-Russian space mission, he has been trained in Russian at the DLA so that he can talk to his mission counterpart.

The U.S. Naval Postgraduate School provides professional, service-oriented educational programs for the U.S. Armed Forces and foreign militaries, and has played host to students from more than 100 nations. While no foreign languages are taught at the NPGS, its students learn other languages at DLI and contribute to the multicultural fabric of Monterey.

The AT&T Language Line Services, the largest provider of telephone-based language services in the world, provides around the clock interpretation for business, emergency service providers, communities and institutions across the United States and Canada, and the United Kingdom in 140 languages.

It was created from the vision of a former San Jose police officer who saw the critical need for law enforcement officers to be able to communicate with the people they served.

AT&T bought the service in 1989. Eighty percent of major hospitals in the United States and more than 45 percent of all hospitals subscribe to the service, as do the INS, the U.S. Coast Guard, the SBA, and most major insurance companies and financial institutions throughout the United States. In fact, at my suggestion the attending physician of U.S. Congress subscribes to the service in order to be able to communicate with any foreign speaking tourists who may require medical treatment while visiting the U.S. Capital.

The Monterey Institute of International Studies has an extensive graduate school curriculum that includes the only master's degree in translation and interpretation in the Western Hemisphere. It was established in 1955 to teach modern languages in their cultural context. The programs at the MIIS are designed to develop bilingual professionals, integrating advanced foreign language education into professional programs in business, public administration and policy studies.

California State University at Monterey Bay will house the new Center for Intensive Language and Culture and an Institute of Collaborative Human Services that will provide nonemergency telephone help, like 911, for non-English speakers.

Working with the AT&T Language Line Services for simultaneous translation, CSUMB, which just opened this fall, will expand its basic language programs for teaching students enrolled overseas. It is these types of innovative, collaborative partnerships that reinforce Monterey's foundation as the language capital of the world.

Monterey Peninsula College offers eight foreign languages, a significant number for a 2-year community college, including Arabic, Mandarin Chinese, Japanese, and Russian. It is committed to maintaining a strong language department with emphasis on Pacific rim languages, in keeping with international economic trends for business and commerce.

What is unique abouth this public-private initiative is that all the language resources interface with each other to create a seamless language web. For example, graduates of the MIIS work at the AT&T Language Line and at the DLI. CSUMB will employ faculty from the DLI and MIIS to teach language classes. Some NPGS students may be assigned to the DLI for specific language training classes.

Moreover, there are very sound economic reasons to promote language diversity, particularly as they relate to the travel and tourism industry, the Nation's second largest employer which provides more than 13 million jobs.

For instance, did you know that: $58 billion in Federal, State and local tax revenues were generated through travel and tourism in 1994; the typical American household spends $3,900 per year on travel; the World Tourism Organization projects that in the year 2000, more than 661 million people will travel internationally; and international visitor spending now accounts for over 14 percent of all travel expenditures in the United States, compared to 5 percent in 1983.

What these statistics indicate to me is that we must compete aggressively for the international travel and tourism dollar and the international traveler—who is most likely multilingual. We can only do that by strengthening our commitment to language training and encourage language development in the citizenry of our own country.

I encourage my colleagues to cosponsor H. Res. 266 and to support your local language resources to ensure continued U.S. global leadership and enhance U.S. economic competiveness.

PARTIAL SHUTDOWN OF GOVERNMENT

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 15, 1995

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member highly commends to his colleagues this editorial which appeared in the Omaha World-Herald on Nov. 15, 1995.

[From the Omaha World-Herald, Nov. 15, 1995]

PARTIAL SHUTDOWN OF GOVERNMENT RESULT OF DEMOCRATIC SCARE TACTICS

Government workers and the public were plunged into unnecessary inconvenience by a partial government shutdown Tuesday. The reason: President Clinton put politics ahead of the public.

Clinton vetoed a stopgap spending bill that would have temporarily kept the museums open, the passport office functioning and the national parks in full operation. The "continuing resolution" that would let the government go on spending was needed because the White House and Congress haven't passed a final budget for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

The president had been saying for days that he couldn't sign the stopgap spending bill because it contained an increase in the monthly premium paid by retirees for Medicare. Then, as Republican Sen. Pete Domenici offered a compromise on the Medicare premium issue, Clinton added that he also objected to decreases in some other spending programs, including his pet, Ameri-Corps. Of the Medicare change, he said that the price of signing the bill was too high "if America must close down access to . . . affordable health care for our seniors."

Of course the legislation would do nothing of the kind. Clinton's words were a reflection of a cynical and deceptive campaign that Democrats are waging. They try to scare retirees by saying that the Republicans are out to eliminate Social Security and Medicare. This cruel Democratic distortion deserves strong condemnation. In addition, as Republican Sen. Bob Dole pointed out, Clinton has been "playing the Medi-scare game all weekend. That wasn't their real problem. It was cutting spending."

Republicans are proposing a reasonable change. They want to cancel a 1990 Democratic-sponsored measure that, left alone, would have the unintended effect of reducing the monthly premium for Medicare. Without action, the monthly payment would drop from $46.10 to $42.50 as of Jan. 1. The GOP wants to raise the payment to $53.50, thereby keeping the current recipient-funded portion of the program costs at 31.5 percent. Domenici came a long way around by offering to freeze premiums at $46.10.

The increase to $53.50 would prevent a larger burden from shifting to the taxpayers and prepare the way for the long-term adjustments that the public is going to have to make to keep Medicare solvent.

Taxpayers should applaud this responsible suggestion. General-fund expenditures must be cut wherever possible if the budget is ever going to be balanced. Certainly this is no time to be reducing the amount of money that retirees are asked to contribute to the insurance program from which they benefit.

Furthermore, the logical time to make the change is now. To leave it until Clinton and the GOP hammered out all their differences could mean that the rate would drop in January. That would make it even harder to raise it later.

The increased payment by retirees would not be substantial. An average Social Security recipient would be $10.60 ahead each month after collecting the Social Security cost-of-living increase and having the higher Medicare premium withheld.

But Clinton said it was preferable to furlough hundreds of thousands of federal employees Tuesday, suspending a wide variety of services for the public. He made it sound as though he did that to preserve hospital care for the elderly, or to avoid driving them into bankruptcy. He said he cast the veto because he refused to "destroy" Medicare.

Such talk is highly misleading. It frightens people unnecessarily. It tarnishes public debate by creating anger and suspicion that are unwarranted by the facts. President Clinton is known to have advisers who want him to project a more centrist, more reasonable image in the hope of winning moderate support in the next election. If he is ever to succeed at that, he must first learn to keep his Medicare demagoguery under control.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference.

This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, November 16, 1995, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Thursday, November 16, 1995

The Senate met at 9 a.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Lord God, You are the light of truth for those who know You, the security of those who love You, the strength of those who trust You, the patience of those who wait on You, and the courage of those who serve You. Fill this Senate Chamber with Your presence. May all that we say and do here today be said and done with an acute awareness of our accountability to You. Help us to ask, "What would the Lord do?" and then, "Lord, what do You want us to do?" In our present impasse over the Federal budget, give us long fuses to our tempers and a long view for our vision of the future of America. We invite You not only to dwell in this place but in our minds so that we can think Your thoughts and discover Your solutions. In the name of our Lord. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senate has before it what?

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1996

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now consider House Joint Resolution 122, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 122) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1996, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senate now has under consideration House Joint Resolution 122, making further continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1996. The resolution provides authority to obligate funds for programs and activities normally funded in the nine regular appropriations bills not yet signed into law. The rate of operations is to be the lowest of the current rate, the rate proposed by the Senate or the rate proposed by the House. Programs and activities terminated or significantly reduced under that formulation may be maintained at a rate not to exceed 60 percent of the current rate. And the rate of operations may be adjusted further to avoid reductions in force.

The expiration date of this continuing resolution is December 5, 1995. This resolution does not include the provision relative to Medicare part B premiums that was in the measure vetoed by the President on Monday. Let me emphasize, that has been removed. That was the great focus of debate and discussion on that first continuing resolution. That is gone.

Instead, there is included the following provision which I will read in its entirety.

Section 301 of this continuing resolution:

> (a) The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002 as scored by the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.
> (b) The unified balanced budget in subsection (a) shall be based on the most current economic and technical assumptions of the Congressional Budget Office.

That is it. Nothing more. Simple, straightforward. Mr. President, I want to say, in adopting this resolution, we are simply recommending and committing ourselves to a balanced budget. That is a commitment I believe we all share.

There is nothing in this resolution, Mr. President, that says we will achieve balance with tax increases or with tax cuts. There is nothing here that says whether defense spending will rise or fall. There is no mention of Medicare or COLA's or highways or education or the environment. We will have our arguments about all of those things, but we ought to be able to agree that we will balance the budget. That is all we are committing ourselves to.

And in stipulating that our efforts should be measured by the Congressional Budget Office, we are only restating what we are already required to do and what the President of the United States, Mr. Clinton himself, asked us to do in his address to a joint session of Congress some time ago. We cannot bring any proposal to this floor that has not been scored by the Congressional Budget Office. The President has agreed to that.

As one of those who voted against the constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget, I argued that we did not need to encumber the Constitution when we could achieve balance within legislation. Members on the other side of the aisle argued the same. I still hold that position, and I ask my colleagues who stood with me to stand with me in voting for this continuing resolution.

I am very interested to hear responses. I cannot understand how anybody can stand on this floor or before the American public and say they are against balancing the budget. We say 2002, and we only say the Congressional Budget Office shall do as is required to be done to score proposals. How can anyone oppose this continuing resolution, unless they have turned their back on the very principle of balancing the budget?

Now, if that is so, so be it, but let us be honest and frank with one another. This stalemate we are in now is unnecessary, and we can end it. At the same time, we can commit ourselves to the American public that is expecting us to give some kind of a statement as to when we are going to balance the budget.

So let us not get into all these byways and these sidetracks about Medicare and education and all those things. My position is well known on those social programs. I would have liked to have written perhaps a certain major reduction in military spending, but that is a personal view. I will argue that at some other time. But on this continuing resolution, let us put the Government back on track, let us end the stalemate, let us say to the American people we have a separation of powers, but at the same time we can unite ourselves, regardless of our party, regardless of the branch of Government, to a simple goal of balancing the budget by 2002. I yield the floor.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Oregon for his opening remarks, and I am pleased that we are at least getting to this so-called continuing resolution. I hope that we can move on it in an expeditious fashion, because after we move on it and after it passes the Senate, as it is foreordained that it will given the commitment that the majority in the House and Senate have expressed; everyone knows it is going to the President. Everyone knows when it gets to the President, he is going to veto it.

So we continue the charade that we have been going through now for entirely too long. This is the third day of the Government shutdown. Tomorrow will be the fourth day and the day after that will be the fifth.

Mr. President, it seems to me it is time we begin to get serious about this and stop the charades, but nevertheless, under the process, we must go through it.

The real issue, I suggest, before us today is whether the Congress of the United States wants to stop acting like a bunch of spoiled children and start acting like adults. On the way in this morning, I was treated to a radio program that was unbelievable. It said that the Speaker of the House of Representatives said that he was very upset, piqued by not being treated properly by the President en route to the funeral in Israel. Someone suggested that probably that was not a proper way to act, and I believe the words by the Speaker were something like, "Well, it may be petty, but it's human."

That is a sad commentary, indeed, but probably sums up much better than I could in any words how ridiculous this whole process is.

We have this continuing resolution which was just explained by the leader of the Appropriations Committee. I simply say to my friend that regardless of how well-intentioned this continuing resolution is—and as yet I have not even seen the numbers, but as I understand it, it is a continuing resolution to continue the Government of the United States and get people back to work until sometime in December; is that correct?

Mr. HATFIELD. December 5.

Mr. EXON. I have been advised, for the record, on the 5th of December.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield for a moment for me to give a little further explanation?

Mr. EXON. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, as you well know, we have 13 appropriations bills. We now have 7 of those 13 bills that are in the process of being sent down to the White House that we expect to be signed. We have had three or four signed by now: transportation, energy and water, the military construction, and the agriculture bills. We have acted upon foreign operations, and we will be acting today probably on Treasury-Post Office. We have already acted on the legislative.

In other words, I think we will have by, hopefully, the end of today seven of these bills on the President's desk signed into law. That means we have the remaining bills. The Defense bill we hope to have acted upon today, the conference, to reach some kind of a conclusion. HUD is meeting today. In other words, December 5 has a very specific reason; we believe that we can get the rest of these appropriations bills completed. And we have stripped things from those bills that have been unacceptable by the President, as the Istook amendment on the Treasury-Post Office, as abortion language that was on the foreign operations bill. So what I am saying is simply that by the December 5 deadline, we expect to have all of those 13 bills completed and, hopefully, signed by the President.

As the Senator knows, as the President signs each one of these bills, that part of the Government drops out of this particular stalemate, because that means that money has been appropriated and approved by the President.

So we are hoping to have all 13 of those bills completed by December 5.

As I say, we hope to have seven signed within the hours of today, or maybe early tomorrow. That is all out of the continuing resolution, all seven of those bills. As we pass each succeeding bill, that will be removed from the continuing resolution, and that part of the Government will be back in full operation, like the energy and water, and agriculture, and so forth, that we have now assigned, and transportation. So that is the reason for the December 5.

Mr. EXON. I appreciate the explanation by my friend. Another way of saying that is that you were hopeful that in the next few hours, or in the next few days at least, that seven of the 13, or roughly half of the appropriations bills, will have been completed and, hopefully, signed by the President.

Mr. HATFIELD. Yes, of which we have four of those seven now signed by the President.

Mr. EXON. Now, another way of saying that is that we only finished approximately half of the 13 key appropriations bills and presented them to the President, is that correct? Or we will in the next day or so?

Mr. HATFIELD. Yes. Let me further explain that the real problem we have had with appropriations in this particular year is—there are a number of reasons, but let me give you two major reasons. As the Committee on the Budget, on which the Senator serves as the ranking member, presented the budget resolution to this Congress, it called for about a $22 billion reduction in nondefense discretionary programs. Therefore, all of the nondefense programs had to make a rather serious and severe reduction, and the judgments on that have certainly varied. And so we have faced a dollar question, a reduction of dollars. I would like to have had far less in the defense spending. But somehow, the Budget Committee and the bodies, the House and the Senate, have agreed that that is not part of our great reduction scheme. But rather, it is going to be the nondefense programs—education programs, health programs, welfare programs, and so forth. So the committee had to make those judgments.

The second problem we have faced—and there are not sufficient dollars to meet the needs on the level of spending that the President has requested or wants—but the other problem we have had increasingly over the years, as the Senator knows, is that nonappropriation matters have been piggybacked on appropriation bills—abortion, school prayer, striker replacement, on and on I could go about legislative matters on the appropriations bills. We could have handled a number of these bills far faster if we had not had to deal with the riders. That has been the second factor. We had an abortion issue on three separate appropriation bills, with a little different wording, a little different application, and so forth and so on. You know how hot an item that is. I happen to be pro-life. The Senator happens to be pro-choice, but nevertheless——

Mr. EXON. Let me correct the Senator, so that we keep the record straight.

Mr. HATFIELD. I will just say that some Senators are pro-life and some are pro-choice.

Mr. EXON. To advise and correct the RECORD, this Senator has, I think, been generally along the same line with the Senator from Oregon. I am a pro-life Senator, not a pro-choice Senator. Let us correct the RECORD.

Mr. HATFIELD. I will correct the RECORD, as well, by saying that the Senator and I have agreement on that. We do not share that same agreement, of course, with other views here in the Senate. Consequently, what I am saying is that that issue has been a very contentious issue over the years. As a consequence, it has slowed the whole process of appropriations down.

Those are the reasons that we are at this point in time relating to the appropriations process. We are hoping to strip the riders, as we have been doing, or modify them, or amend them, to make them acceptable downtown in the White House.

So I just wanted to indicate again why, from the appropriations point of view, we happen to be in this situation today and are fast trying to extricate ourselves from it, as indicated by the fact that we have seven bills on the President's desk, four of them signed, and how we hope to get the others down to the President within the period between now and December 5.

Mr. EXON. Let me further inquire of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, with whom I have worked very long and very well over the years. I believe that the Senator from Oregon has been on the Appropriations Committee nearly all of the time he has served with great distinction in the U.S. Senate.

Does the Senator from Oregon ever recall a time when we have been this far behind in passing appropriations bills, regardless of what the reason was for the delay?

Mr. HATFIELD. Oh, yes. I would say that back in the 1980's we had a CR that went a whole year. We could not resolve those problems. We had other CR's. We had probably three or four in a period from 1981 to 1985, short-term CR's. We had the Government shut down for a couple of days. This is not new. It is not the way to do business.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend. Again, I will proceed with my remarks.

I was saying, Mr. President, I was disappointed in the fact that we have delay upon delay upon delay, and we are going through charades, as we are going through today on this continuing resolution that is going to be passed, very likely, and vetoed by the President.

So this is an exercise in futility, unfortunately, at a time when the Nation is wanting. I simply say, Mr. President, that in negotiations during the last few days, myself and others have been pleading, and the administration has been pleading, with the Republican majority to just give us a clean continuing resolution. By "clean", I mean every extraneous measure, or thought, or condition, or concept would be thrown off, and we would just have a continuing resolution for 24 hours, or 48 hours. That was rejected. I was mystified by that because I could not understand how any reasonable group of people, regardless of their political affiliation, would not agree that it was wise to continue the normal functions of Government, at least for a short period of time, while we continued to negotiate.

I now understand why we were turned down flatly on what would appear to any reasonable person as the course of action which could be taken. It was because the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and others, clearly had in their hip pocket this new, ludicrous plan that they knew it would not open up Government once again, but it might give them, on a political scale, some advantage, or an up-bump in the polls that have been quite devastating to the Speaker and others in the last few weeks.

The measure before us today is a farce. It is game playing. It is not the way to do business, and it is not doing business; it is playing politics. Grown-ups know that it is a childish game to shut down the Government in order to blackmail the President into accepting extreme measures, the extreme Republican budget, and trying to make excuses for why they are doing it.

The sad part is that this game has real consequences to real people. Hundreds of thousands of Federal workers do not know whether they are going to be able to pay their bills. Thousands of Americans who are entitled to sign up for Social Security are not able to do so because no one is at work to process the new legitimate claims. Thousands of veterans who should be signing up for new benefits that they have earned are not able to do so because Government is not on the job. Thousands of Federal contractors are not being paid, but the Government has agreed to pay them.

According to press reports, for example, Mr. President, 39 illegal immigrants—I repeat, Mr. President, according to press reports, 39 illegal immigrants—were detained, as they should have been, and sent on their merry way, smiling and laughing on Tuesday because the Government was shut down. It left the Immigration and Naturalization Services shorthanded.

Another matter, the Colorado State Police stopped a van, called INS, and was informed they would be unable to investigate because they lacked the manpower to do so because the staff had been furloughed.

This is no way to run the Government. What we should do is pass a clean continuing resolution to allow the Government to serve the people, pay its bills, and do so in a timely fashion. That is our duty.

The majority wants to set the terms for the coming negotiations on the deficit reduction bill. All this political posturing about how to do the big deficit reduction bill is just a transparent attempt, I suggest, to coerce the President to weakening his negotiating position before—before—negotiations even begin.

The responsible thing to do, of course, would be to pass a clean continuing resolution for either a shorter or a longer number of days and allow the Republicans to get the extreme budget proposals that they are pushing out of their system, because they are not going to prevail.

We should let the President go ahead and veto these bills, which is what he is going to do, and then and only then start some real serious negotiations where people of good will can sit down and say, "We are not, any of us, going to get exactly what we want". Through negotiations and compromise, we can do our job as we were sent here to do.

In these real negotiations, everything should be on the table. Let me repeat that, Mr. President, because that is not the mode that we are operating under now. In these real negotiations to come that I am quite prepared for at this time, and will have some recommendations to make at the proper time that I think might be an important step toward bringing us together—bringing us together—these real negotiations have to start with everything being laid on the table. Otherwise, we will not get anything done.

The length of time it takes to balance should be on the table, along with everything else. The economic assumptions that we use should be on the table. What do we need to make the extreme cuts in Medicare that the Republicans advocate should be on the table, and will be on the table. At least I am pleased that the Republicans at this very late hour have taken the Medicare matter off the table temporarily.

Also on the table should be whether we want to give tax breaks to the wealthiest among us. That has to be on the table. Let me tell my colleagues, I have run the numbers on this budget and I have been trying to figure out a way to get to a balanced budget. I do not agree with the White House with regard to a 7-year budget. I think we can come to agreement to balance a budget by 7 years.

I believe under the proper circumstances we would be able to convince the President to sign such a measure if we can put everything on the table and if we can sit down as adults and reach a compromise.

I must say, Mr. President, that if the Republicans continue to insist—I repeat this, if the Republicans continue to insist—on a $245 billion tax break for the wealthy, and if they continue to insist on using CBO assumptions only and purely, there is no way that we can get to a balance in 7 years without extreme and deep cuts in Medicare, in nursing home care, nursing homes, and in education.

We hold out the hand, the offer of compromise, once again. After we get through with this ridiculous exercise that is going nowhere today, maybe we can get to that point tomorrow or the next day or the day after that.

I am proud, and the President is right to oppose such a budget. I support him in that. Passing of the continuing resolution that has just been offered to us from the House of Representatives would tie the President's hands to such an extent that it would be almost impossible to start meaningful negotiations on a compromise.

Therefore, I will strenuously oppose this continuing resolution and hope that we can move it along to a fair and honest role that can pass both Houses and receive the President's signature, and stop this charade and game playing. I yield the floor.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I have listened to the Senator from Nebraska, whom I greatly admire as ranking member of the Budget Committee, and from what I have heard him say, I can understand no reason why he would not vote for this resolution.

This resolution does not use specifics as to how we reach a balanced budget. It does not say that we must follow the outline laid down by the Republicans on our side of the aisle—which outline I happen to think is a fairly reasonable one.

The Senator from Nebraska has characterized it as "extremist," but I do not know what is extreme about balancing a budget over 7 years, allowing the Government to grow by 3 percent over that period of time, allowing Medicare to grow by 6.5 percent, or $349 billion, over that time, allowing Medicaid to grow by about 5.4 to 5 percent or $146 billion over that period of time, saying to senior citizens, "We will spend $4,800 on you today but in the year 2002 we will spend $6,700 on your health care." Those are hardly extreme positions. They are fairly reasonable positions, and they allow us to reach a balanced budget by slowing the rate of growth of the Federal Government.

If you allow the terminology of the Senator from Nebraska to apply—"extremism"; this is what is being used often on the other side as a reason for rejecting a balanced budget—even if you accepted what the Senator from Nebraska has said that he would, however, be willing to agree to a budget which reaches balance in 7 years and that that is a doable event—he does not like our budget but it is a doable event.

What this continuing resolution says is, "Let's reach a balanced budget in 7 years." It does not say how. It does not give specifics. It does not bind the President or the Members of the other party to a specific glidepath to reaching that balanced budget. It simply says the President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002 as scored by the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.

Therefore, all it is saying is that we have to reach a balanced budget by the year 2002. It is not saying how we reach a balanced budget. It is not demanding a certain set of specifics be used for reaching that balanced budget. It simply is saying, during the term of this Congress, during our watch, we must put in place a balanced budget that is scored by the Congressional Budget Office which, of course, is what the President initially said he would use as a scoring agency.

Therefore, when the Senator from Nebraska, the ranking member of the Budget Committee, gets up and states he is for a balanced budget in 7 years, it seems to me he should be comfortable with this resolution which says exactly that: Let us reach a balanced budget in 7 years. It does not say let us reach the Republican game plan for a balanced budget, it says let us reach a balanced budget in 7 years. So, I do not see this resolution as being on the extreme. In fact, this resolution is right in the mainstream of the comments made by the distinguished Senator.

The further comments were made that it is ludicrous, and there is an attitude of futility here, in pursuing a balanced budget under these types of terms. Why is it ludicrous? Why is it futile to bind the Congress and the President to reaching a balanced budget in 7 years? We are not saying, in this resolution, you have to cut this program, you have to cut that program, you have to slow the rate of growth in this program, you have to raise this tax or cut that tax. We are just saying let us do it. Let us agree we are going to do it, we are going to balance the budget in 7 years. What could be ludicrous or futile about that? That seems like a fairly constructive statement. It is a statement which I suspect most Americans would say is maybe too passive on the issue of reaching a balanced budget. I suspect most Americans would like us to say specifically how we are going to do it.

We as Republicans have. We have laid down a plan for that. From the other side we have not seen such a plan, but we have heard statements, like the Senator from Nebraska's, saying they would agree to balance the budget in 7 years. So all we have done in this continuing resolution is say: All right, let us take one little baby step on the road to balancing the budget. Let us, as a Congress, agree, with the President's support, that we shall balance the budget in 7 years. Let us not get into specifics, but let us just take this little step into the water. Let us put our toes in the water, the water of a balanced budget, and say we are going to commit to it. That is neither ludicrous nor futile. That is what we are supposed to be doing as a Government. We do not say do it in 4 years or 5 years, which is what the President originally said he would do when he ran for this office, and what many of us would like to do. We say 7 years, which is a fairly reasonable timeframe.

During this period of 3 weeks, while we will be functioning under the continuing resolution, we have not unfairly impacted the spending accounts of this country. We have simply set up a structure which says we will spend at the levels, the lower levels of either the House or the Senate numbers. Or, if there is no spending on a program, we will have it function at 60 percent of its level, which is a fairly reasonable thing to do when we are talking about a short timeframe.

Why would you want to excessively fund programs over their funding levels which have been laid out in the appropriations bills as they have been coming through? It would be unreasonable to fund them at the higher level. It would be inconsistent with good government to fund them at a higher level when we as a Congress may choose the lower level when we finally pass the appropriating bills. So it is the safer and more thoughtful course to take the lower level.

Thus, this is a resolution which really does not do a whole lot. As I say, it just puts our toe in the water of the balanced budget issue. In fact, I happen to think it is far too weak. I have serious reservations about it. I personally am on the borderline of whether I even want to vote for something that is this weak on the issue of balancing the budget.

But the fact is, it is not extreme, it is not futile, and it is not ludicrous to suggest the Congress, the 104th Congress, should commit with the President on this resolution that we are going to balance the budget by the year 2002. That is not only not extreme, ludicrous, or futile, that is our job. That is what we should be doing. That is what the American people hired us for. And therefore I take a bit of exception to the statements of the Senator from Nebraska and ask him to review those statements in the context of the resolution. I think if he does, he will come to the conclusion he can support this resolution.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise to join those who expressed their reservation in opposition to the proposal that passed the House of Representatives last evening, some 16 pages or 17 pages of continuing resolution plus the words that have been mentioned in reference to the balanced budget.

I think it is only appropriate to look at where we are today to understand why the President is deeply concerned about signing this particular proposal. We have to really understand what the significance of all of this means, beyond just the words which are included in the continuing resolution. We have to look back at the fact that, in the spring of last year, the Speaker of the House had indicated what was going to happen in the late fall, that there would be a clash between the executive branch and the Congress on a budget for this country, and that he planned to shut the Government down to get his way. He has said that repeatedly, in the spring and in the early fall. My colleagues have included those statements in the RECORD.

Effectively, to sum up what the Speaker was talking about, Speaker GINGRICH's at-all-cost strategy shows little hint of compromise or common ground. For months he has implemented a strategy to blackmail the American people and the President into accepting his budget priorities. We have to consider all of the statements that were made by the Speaker predicting where we were going to be in the fall, the impasse that we find ourselves in today. That was all predicted. It is part of a plan. It was his intent to do so and this is where we are today as a result of that intransigence. This crisis we are facing today was predicted and planned by the Speaker and other Republican leaders. So no one should suddenly be surprised that we have this situation, because we have had a long period of notice.

Now it was not only the statements of the Speaker, but it has been how the House and the Appropriations Committee have been dealing with their business. Up to just a day or two ago, only 4 of the 13 appropriations bills were actually sent to and signed by the President of the United States.

I listened with interest to my good friend from Oregon, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who said we will be up to almost half in the next couple of days. The fact of the matter remains that, of the major appropriations bills that deal with the heavy commitments of the Federal Government, about 80 percent have not been sent down to the President. So we find, on the one hand, the prediction by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States saying we will have this train wreck, we will slow or stop the Government—repeatedly stating that. And with the other actions of the Speaker—because, as all of us know, those appropriations initiate over in the House of Representatives—we know we are going to have, effectively, the crisis, because he is not going to pass the appropriations bills. If you do not pass the appropriations bills you have the continuing resolution.

It was by design and intent, design and intent by Republican leadership, that we were going to have crisis—both by the statements and by the failure of the appropriations process and the leadership in the House of Representatives in sending those appropriations over here.

I would just add, as I heard the chairman of the Appropriations Committee say, "then there were so many riders that were put on those bills." Who is in charge here? Who put the riders on? They could not get on if they had not had the support of our Republican friends and colleagues. And, as we know, the tradition of this institution is we do not provide legislative matters on appropriations. We never used to. We do this year, because of the majority, and that has slowed the whole process down.

But, Mr. President, the Republican leadership understood that would be the direct impact of adding rider after rider on appropriations. The conferences have not done their work. They have not finished the appropriations and set them down and had them completed. So, where we are today should not surprise any Member here. It will become increasingly clear to the American public why we are here, and who intended us to be here with this particular crisis.

Mr. President, I listened last night to the debate over in the House of Representatives. I am mindful what is going to be on the floor of the Senate tomorrow—the Republican budget, the reflection of their priorities. You know something, Mr. President, in 24 hours we will probably have here on the floor of the U.S. Senate those same cuts in Medicare that were included in the continuing resolution. I mean come on, colleagues. We know exactly what is going on here. They are not even going to wait 24 hours. We are going to have the same cuts in Medicare that were included in the continuing resolution, tomorrow, on the floor of the U.S. Senate. What is the idea? They say, let us work this out together, we are coming with clean hands, and we are prepared to work with the President of the United States on a balanced budget—but they still bring their cuts in the Medicare Program.

This is a back-door cut in Medicare, and every senior citizen ought to know about it. And 24 hours from now we will have that budget with those cuts on the floor of the U.S. Senate We will have the budget with those tax breaks for the wealthiest individuals. And we will have the cuts in education programs on the floor of the U.S. Senate. We are going to have to have it within 24 hours.

So spare us the arguments my friends, the Republicans, that you just want to work this out with the President of the United States. Why did you not work out the budget with the President of the United States? Why did you not sit down and say, "All right. This is acceptable, and can't we work this out in order to move toward a balanced budget?" He is committed to do that, but we never had that opportunity. We never had that negotiation.

As has been stated repeatedly on the floor by the relevant committee chairman, most of the Democrats were not included in the conferences. They never had a chance to express an opinion. We were reduced the other night to a situation where Members could not address this body, or talk for their constituents in their State about what was really happening around the consideration of the budget.

Last night I took the time to watch that debate over in the House of Representatives. There was not one single Republican, not one, that stood up and said, with the passage of this proposal we are prepared to take Medicare off the table. Not one. Not one of them said, pass this resolution and we will reconsider our tax breaks for the wealthy. Not one. Not one of them said, pass this particular resolution and we will reconsider the severe cuts in the education programs that will put a dollar sign on every college door in this country that says "Only the Wealthy Need Apply." In 3 hours of debate, not one of them said we are going to reconsider our position on tax cuts and Medicare cuts. Not one.

So what are we left with? We are left with the language that we heard from a number of our Republican colleagues last night. They said, let us give the President a message. Let us put him on the spot. Let us drop this on the door of the President of the United States—over and over again.

So we ought to understand where we are, and why the President is absolutely correct in vetoing this measure. Mr. President, passage of this measure is just another indication that there will be cuts in the Medicare Program. Make no mistake about it. Do not listen to this Senator. Just take the time to listen to the debate tomorrow on the floor of the U.S. Senate. That is a better indication of where the Republican priorities are than all of the speeches that are made here this morning, this afternoon, and maybe even this evening. They can say, we are really just trying to do what the President says he wants to do. And they can say, all you have to do is put your toe in the water and move us toward a balanced budget. But that is hogwash. And every senior citizen ought to know about it. Their plan means an increase in premiums. It means an increase in the deductible. It means an increase in the copayments. It means a diminution of quality of health care. And it means taking away from the seniors their ability to choose their doctors.

So when our colleagues say, we want to go back to the basics, and we want to work this out with the President, we are really approaching this with good faith on that—that just does not fly, not when you look at the facts.

In the meantime, Mr. President, we see where we have gone with our Republican friends. They say everything is on the table. Yet, in this continuing resolution—they cut the heart out of many of the education programs which are essential to improving the quality of education for the young people of this country.

They reduce the Goals 2000 legislation. They cut it by some 40-percent. That is a block grant that makes sense. That says that 90 percent of the funds to improve and enhance the education of the young people of this country are going to go to the local school districts, go to the parents, go to the teachers, go to the school boards, and let the local communities help develop a program to increase academic achievement. It goes for education at the local level. It passed overwhelmingly with Republicans and Democrats alike last year. And nonetheless, because it was a President Clinton initiative on education, it was zeroed out in the House of Representatives—abandoned. Now it hobbles along under this particular resolution reduced from the previous resolution of the Republicans that left it at 90 percent. Now it is going to be funded at 60 percent—a 40-percent cut, Mr. President.

What will the Republican resolution be on December 6? This resolution only goes to December 5. And we have that kind of a cut from 90 percent. We cut it 40 percent in this continuing resolution. That is unacceptable.

You take safe and drug-free schools. How many times do we listen to our Republican colleagues talk about the problems of substance abuse, and here they are cutting out a significant program. That is not the answer. All of us understand from various hearings on these programs, you need not only a program in the schools, but you need after-school programs, and preschool programs. You need employment, you need sports, you need a variety of different activities to involve young people in this country. Safe and drug free schools and communities has been an effective program in many schools—and it is cut by 40 percent.

Take the funding for new technology for schools, which is already available to so many children in many of the private schools in this country. Effectively, that program is gutted—cut by 40 percent. Making new technology available in the public schools of this country is being cut by 40 percent.

Take the Eisenhower Professional Development Program. It is one of the very best teacher training programs in the Nation. It enhances the academic achievement and accomplishments of teachers and offers a wide range of new courses to strengthen their academic background and overall experience so that they can be better teachers in the classrooms across the country. That program is cut by 40 percent.

Then the Perkins Loan Program, which is an additional college loan program to help the students of this country pursue their education is cut by 40 percent. These are cuts in efforts to reform the basic education programs, cuts in technology, cuts again in help and assistance for those that are pursuing higher education.

And the summer jobs for youth is cut 40 percent. I guess an awful lot of those teenagers cannot vote. This program is zeroed out in the House of Representatives—summer jobs for youth, a program that makes a big difference to many of the young people in this country, and in urban and rural areas alike. Major cities, such as Boston, receive extensive matches in funds by the private sector. There is an effective recruiting mechanism for young students in the inner cities to find employment as they work in the summer jobs. They then work for many of these companies and corporations in the cities. This important effort is cut by 40 percent.

So there it is, Mr. President. That is what we are being asked to do. On the one hand, we are going to hear the same statements repeatedly today. They will say, let us just ask the President to work with us on a balanced budget. But every single Member in this body knows that we are facing the Republican budget tomorrow that cuts the Medicare Program, provides tax breaks for wealthy individuals, and cuts education.

If they were serious, they would have said, let us work out the priorities in those areas. Let us really move to a bipartisan balanced budget. Let us find out what we can do working together, and then have the opportunity to get beyond what the Speaker of the House called a train wreck. A train wreck that he predicted and an event that he effectively implemented by failing to provide leadership to ensure the timely completion of the appropriations bills. Let us not fool the American people, Mr. President. We know what is happening here.

They are just trying to score the political points, trying to put something to the President of the United States. They will not say today, all right, we will reconsider our tax cut.

I am going to watch today and see whether any Member who supports this proposal will say, look, we are operating in good faith. We will reconsider our tax cut for the wealthiest individuals. We will reconsider that. We will consider the Democrats' position on the Medicare Program and their wish to ensure its financial stability to the outer years. We will reconsider our $270 billion, and we will reconcile that with your $87 billion. We will look at that. We are serious about today. We will meet with you all during the day with our Budget Committee to consider some of the Democratic priorities. And we will also take another look at these extraordinary cuts that have been made in education. We have addressed the education issues. We have had some success in restoring them here. But do you think that is reflected in the continuing resolution? Absolutely not.

So, Mr. President, I think we all understand what is at risk here. The President is wise to reject this. But the President should challenge Republicans and Democrats alike to sit down and work this out. We have no preconditions, no preconditions to moving toward a balanced budget, as has been repeated by the President and leaders, every Member of this side. They are for the balanced budget, but not for the Republican priorities.

That is the problem. The Republicans are saying, oh well, you have to vote for this because it says balanced budget but we are going to stick it to the elderly on the Medicare cuts, and we are going to stick it to the children, and we are going to enhance the wealthiest corporations and richest individuals with unjustified tax breaks. That is wrong. This resolution should be defeated.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INHOFE). The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, first, I thank the Chair for recognizing me. I wish to say for Republicans on our side so they will understand, this is an appropriations matter. Chairman HATFIELD is going to be managing the bill. There are no time limits thus far. So if Senators think that we can allocate time, there is no allocation. It is a question of the Chair observing the precedents of the Senate in recognizing Senators either to speak or offer amendments. So everyone should know I do not think I can get them time if they just call on the phone. There is open debate unless and until we reach some unanimous-consent agreement with reference to the situation.

Mr. President, I wish to make a couple of points rather than go into a lot of detail. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] has failed to mention to the American people one thing. As he goes through a litany of reductions and cuts, he failed to tell the American people what we have before us is a 19-day bill—one-nine, 19 days.

For the next 19 days, if this is signed, the U.S. Government will continue to operate under an interim funding program described in this bill. This is not a year. This is 19 days. So all the comments about what is being reduced in expenditures, how much we are asking programs to take a cut is for the next 19 days, and until we finally reach a conclusion between the President and the Congress on the full year, this 19 days is a very insignificant portion of what is going to be funded and how things are going to come out.

It is generally and historically true around here that when the Congress and the Presidents are battling over expenditures continuing resolutions are funded at less than what you finally agree to do. So as to make the point, in this case we want to spend less overall rather than more. The problem we have is that some Democrats—and of late it seems the President joins with them—just want to spend more money rather than less while they are talking about reducing the deficit. So let us make sure that everybody understands, whoever comes to the floor from whichever side of the aisle during the next 3 or 4 hours and talks about what is being cut on the appropriations side, we are talking about an interim, short-term funding measure for 19 days. We are not talking about the entire year. We are not talking about final appropriations numbers.

For those who wonder about not getting all the appropriations bills done on time, let me suggest that the very last Democratic Senate with a Republican President had six continuing resolutions. If I recall, we have had one, so far. They had six to make their case to a President and then eventually were able to work something out. So it is not untoward or unexpected or something we have invented. At the end of the year, when you are arguing over important differences, frequently you have short-term extensions of the appropriations bills while you attempt to get something worked out.

Let us talk about getting something worked out and why we are here today. We are here today because we want to open the Government, put the people back to work, have a 19-day extension of funding, and then presumably the day after tomorrow we will pass a Balanced Budget Act of 1995. We will send that to the President. He has said he will veto it, and then we are left with nothing. We are left with no serious deficit reduction. Presumably, according to the President, he would like to work with us then. He submits that he would like a budget, a short-term appropriations bill that says, look, give us the right kind of funding, do not worry about that, and let us just state in there that we are going to get together after all of these vetoes and we are going to work on the budget. Then and there we are going to agree on when it is going to be balanced, and then and there we are going to agree on what economic assumptions we are going to use.

I see that as the end of a balanced budget. There is no chance you can work anything out that way. With the differences that exist, if there is not some kind of a benchmark that guides and leads those negotiations, you will be nowhere and probably nowhere forever.

Having said that, let me suggest that there is going to be a lot of debate on the other side of the aisle on how onerous and difficult this 7-year balanced budget using real economics is. There is going to be a lot of debate that the Republican agenda is mandated by this balanced-budget-in-7-years portion of this bill. Neither is true. This is not a balanced budget amendment that says how we will get to balance, when we start negotiating with the President.

It is not how we get there. It is whether we get there. It is not how we get there. It is whether we get there. The truth of the matter is that all the ideas for spending more money, for reducing the tax cuts, for saving every program that everybody wants to stand up and say we ought to save, they are all on the table. When the President comes to that meeting with his experts talking about this issue, they are all on the table. There is no agenda that is predetermined. Whatever any Member of the House or Senate says, the language is clear. Republicans do not dictate the agenda and the President does not. The benchmark is that we will all start with one premise, 7 years, and we will balance.

It seems to me that the President and others are saying we do not know if we can do a balanced budget in 7 years using real economics. Let me suggest there are 71 Senators that have said we can and have voted for a plan to do it.

Nineteen Democratic Senators voted for a plan, a bill, that says we should have balance in 7 years using real economics. Nineteen of them, added to the 52 Republican Senators, my arithmetic says that is 71. So, 71 have said it can be done. Nineteen say, "Do it a different way." Fifty-two say, "Do it the Republican way."

It is my understanding that last night 48 Democrats joined the Republicans in recommending this to the President. Previous balanced budgets this year voted on by the House, 299 House Members, considering two different plans, one by Democrats and one by Republicans, voted for a balanced budget in 7 years using real economics. What is the President afraid of? What are Democrats afraid of in terms of a 7-year balanced budget that says, "We aren't telling you how, we're just telling you whether we have a balanced budget or not"?

Having said that, Mr. President, I would like now to just read a few comments from The Washington Post editorial of this morning. Mr. President, it is called, "The Real Default." It is about half a page. I might suspect some would say, "If it's the Washington Post, they are probably saying the Republicans are 'in default.'" I regret to tell you Democrats, it is not us that they say are in default. It is the President and the Democratic leadership that this says are in default. I would like to just read a little bit of it.

That's the real default that could occur this year. In the end, the Treasury will meet its financial obligations. You can be pretty sure of that. The question is whether the president and the Democrats will meet or flee their obligations of a different kind. On the strength of the record so far, you would have to bet on flight.

Now, there is much more. I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 16, 1995]

THE REAL DEFAULT

The budget deficit is the central problem of the federal government and one from which many of the country's other, most difficult problems flow. The deficit is largely driven in turn by the cost of the great entitlements that go not to small special classes of rich or poor but across the board to almost all Americans in time. The most important of these are the principal social insurance programs for the elderly, Social Security and Medicare. In fiscal terms, Medicare is currently the greatest threat and chief offender.

Bill Clinton and the congressional Democrats were handed an unusual chance this year to deal constructively with the effect of Medicare on the deficit, and they blew it. The chance came in the form of the congressional Republican plan to balance the budget over seven years. Some other aspects of that plan deserved to be resisted, but the Republican proposal to get at the deficit partly by confronting the cost of Medicare deserved support. The Democrats, led by the president, chose instead to present themselves as Medicare's great protectors. They have shamelessly used the issue, demagogued on it, because they think that's where the votes are and the way to derail the Republican proposals generally. The president was still doing it this week; a Republican proposal to increase Medicare premiums was one of the reasons he alleged for the veto that has shut down the government—and never mind that he himself, in his own budget, would countenance a similar increase.

We've said some of this before; it gets more serious. If the Democrats play the Medicare card and win they will have set back for years, for the worst of political reasons, the very cause of rational government in behalf of which they profess to be behaving. Politically, they will have helped to lock in place the enormous financial pressure that they themselves are first to deplore on so many other federal programs, not least the programs for poor. That's the real default that could occur this year. In the end, the Treasury will meet its financial obligations. You can be pretty sure of that. The question is whether the president and the Democrats will meet or flee their obligations of a different kind. On the strength of the record so far, you'd have to bet on flight.

You'll hear the argument from some that this is a phony issue; they contend that the deficit isn't that great a problem. The people who make this argument are whistling past a graveyard that they themselves most likely helped to dig. The national debt in 1980 was less than $1 trillion. That was the sum of all the deficits the government had previously incurred—the whole two centuries' worth. The debt now, a fun-filled 15 years later, is five times that and rising at a rate approaching $1 trillion a presidential term. Interest costs are a seventh of the budget, by themselves now a quarter of a trillion dollars a year and rising; we are paying not just for the government we have but for the government we had and didn't pay for earlier.

The blamesters, or some of them, will tell you Ronald Reagan did it, and his low-tax, credit-card philosophy of government surely played its part. The Democratic Congresses that ratified his budgets and often went him one better on tax cuts and spending increases played their part as well. Various sections of the budget are also favorite punching bags, depending who is doing the punching. You will hear it said that someone's taxes ought to be higher (generally someone else's), or that defense should be cut, or welfare, or farm price supports or the cost of the bureaucracy. But even Draconian cuts in any or all of these areas would be insufficient to the problem and, because dwelling on them is a way of pretending the real deficit-generating costs don't exist, beside the point as well.

What you don't hear said in all this talk of which programs should take the hit, since the subject is so much harder politically to confront, is that the principal business of the federal government has become elder-care. Aid to the elderly, principally through Social Security and Medicare, is now a third of all spending and half of all for other than interest on the debt and defense. That aid is one of the major social accomplishments of the past 30 years; the poverty rate for the elderly is now, famously, well below the rate for the society as a whole. It is also an enormous and perhaps unsustainable cost that can only become more so as the baby-boomers shortly begin to retire. How does the society deal with it?

The Republicans stepped up to this as part of their proposal to balance the budget. About a fourth of their spending cuts would come from Medicare. It took guts to propose that. You may remember the time, not that many months ago, when the village wisdom was that, whatever else they proposed, they'd never take on Medicare this way. There were too many votes at stake. We don't mean to suggest by this that their proposal with regard to Medicare is perfect—it most emphatically is not, as we ourselves have said as much at some length in this space. So they ought to be argued with, and ways should be found to take the good of their ideas while rejecting the bad.

But that's not what the president and congressional Democrats have done. They've trashed the whole proposal as destructive, taken to the air waves with a slick scare program about it, championing themselves as noble defenders of those about to be victimized. They—the Republicans—want to take away your Medicare; that's the insistent PR message that Democrats have been drumming into the elderly and the children of the elderly all year. The Democrats used to complain that the Republicans used wedge issues; this is the super wedge. And it's wrong. In the long run, if it succeeds, the tactic will make it harder to achieve not just the right fiscal result but the right social result. The lesson to future politicians will be that you reach out to restructure Medicare at your peril. The result will be to crowd out of the budget other programs for less popular or powerful constituencies—we have in mind the poor—that the Democrats claim they are committed to protect.

There's a way to get the deficit down without doing enormous social harm. It isn't rocket science. You spread the burden as widely as possible. Among much else, that means including the broad and, in some respects, inflated middle-class entitlements in the cuts. That's the direction in which the president ought to be leading and the congressional Democrats following. To do otherwise is to hide, to lull the public and to perpetuate the budget problem they profess to be trying to solve. Let us say it again: If that's what happens, it will be the real default.

Mr. DOMENICI. Now, Mr. President, I want to repeat to every Democratic Senator here, to the President of the United States, this continuing resolution in this very simple language:

> The President and Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002 as scored by the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.
> The unified balanced budget in subsection (a) shall be based on the most current economic and technical assumptions of the Congressional Budget Office.

If ever there was a simple statement of whether or not we intend, whether or not we as a Congress, intend, and the President, as our leader, intends to stop spending our children's, grandchildren's, and unborn children's wealth to pay for programs of today, there could not be a better statement than that. Do you want to continue that or not?

I have been at it for a long time. I have been unsure from time to time when we could reach a balanced budget. But, Mr. President, and fellow Senators, I am absolutely convinced, and 19 Democrats backed this, and 299 House Members have voted it, that 7 years is ample time to get rid of the legacy of debt, and pass on a legacy of opportunity to our children. I am absolutely convinced it can be done.

For those who would argue we are trying to force our agenda, then I submit this is the people's agenda, 7 years using real economics. It is not a Republican agenda. And we are not even saying how you should do it. We are saying that we ought to continue this Government of America, put our people back to work, but we ought to make a commitment to the American people, and our President ought to join us. He has said he wants a balanced budget. And at one point he said 5 years. At one point he said 10 years. At another point he said 9 years, maybe 8.

Mr. President, you have to seriously consider what you are saying when you say, "We will not do one thing with the Republicans. We will not negotiate," if they say let us start with a very basic marker of a balanced budget in 7 years.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I would be pleased to yield without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, it is my understanding that anyone who votes for this resolution will not be voting for a tax cut or promise to vote for a tax cut, will not be voting for a reduction in Medicare spending, will not be voting for a reduction in Medicaid spending and will not be voting for any of the specifics that are laid out in the Republican budget? None of that is referenced in the continuing resolution; is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator from Pennsylvania is absolutely correct.

Mr. SANTORUM. No one can make the claim they are voting against this because they are against the Republican budget as outlined; is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. That is correct. I might put it another way. Nineteen Democratic Senators offered their own plan to balance the budget at the same time as the Republicans using the same economics. If that is what the Democrats want when we go meet with the President, and if that is what the President wants, it has the exact same validity and the exact same merit as the Republican budget.

Mr. SANTORUM. One additional question. The only other thing, other than saying we are to balance the budget in 7 years, is that we will use the Congressional Budget Office as the final arbiter; is that not correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. That is correct.

Mr. SANTORUM. Has there ever been objection by the other side using the Congressional Budget Office as the final arbiter that you are aware of?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am not going to say I never heard anyone on the other side of the aisle object to using the Congressional Budget Office, because they might have, but let me tell you, never in the Budget Committee as we debated this did I hear any of my good friends on the Democratic side, including their leader in the budget matters, say that we ought to depart this year or last year from the Congressional Budget Office's economics. I have not heard that.

Mr. SANTORUM. My understanding is that the Democratic leader said on June 25, "We will come to whatever accommodations that are to ensure that CBO is the final arbiter of the numbers." So that is the Democratic leader speaking.

I just want to know if anybody else has spoken differently, to your knowledge?

Mr. DOMENICI. I know of none.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I will be pleased to.

Mr. DORGAN. I thought I heard the discussion suggested that the only other change with CBO is also the case that this 15-page continuing resolution cuts by 40 percent some programs, including, for example, low-income energy assistance. It is now wintertime, of course. I come from a State that gets pretty cold. Some low-income folks get energy assistance. Does this not cut that by 40 percent? Is that not a change? I am using that as one example. Would that not be an example of other changes you put in this 15-page document?

Mr. DOMENICI. Might I answer the Senator this way. You were not on the floor, I believe, so I will answer again. This document does not run Government for the entire year of 1996. It runs Government for 19 days. And during those 19 days, those who are managing the programs cannot spend on the program you described at more than a rate of 60 percent of current program funding, but it does not set the year-long funding for those programs.

Continuing resolutions are for a short period of time only. I add, it will be for 19 days. I cannot conceive that that would be the level in the long run that we would be at. That is what we still have to work out, and that is what continuing resolutions are for.

I thank you for the question, and anybody who has questions on all the other 10 programs, the answer is the same. It does not eliminate anything. It does not set the pattern for the full year. It says 19 days from now. That is until December 5.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield for one additional question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. DORGAN. That is a change from previous CR's where it was 90 percent. It will now be 60 percent, so the cut would be 40 percent of things like star schools, low-income energy, et cetera.

Mr. DOMENICI. It is; yes. Frankly, when you are involved in this kind of situation in trying to get something done, it is not unusual that continuing resolutions change each time, seeing if some headway can be made about the loggerhead situation by adjusting it. That has been done before.

Now, Mr. President, I want to continue on. I want to talk a little bit about what I think is the real problem. First of all, I think the problem is that the President of the United States has committed to a balanced budget, and what I am saying I do not say about Democratic Senators. They had some very serious proposals, and I believe they tried very hard—19 of them—to get a balanced budget. I believe Senator EXON would clearly try to get a balanced budget in 7 years and achieve it.

But what I think the problem is, is that the President of the United States does not want to tell anybody how much money he wants to spend. The issue is how much do you want to spend in the next 7 years, not how much you want to cut taxes.

The Senator from Pennsylvania is correct, if you vote for this, the President can go to the table saying, "I don't want any taxes." And I repeat that. He can go to the table saying, "I don't want to cut one bit of education. I want it to increase education instead of it being frozen or reduced." This does not obligate any specifics.

What I believe is the case is that the President is not prepared to tell the American people how much he wants to spend. It is spending that is ruining America's future. It is spending too much that brings the Washington Post to saying, "The budget deficit is the central problem of the Federal Government and one from which many of the country's other most difficult problems flow."

Deficits do not come from the air. They come from spending more than you take in, and I believe if the President and his experts will sit down in a room between now and the time we finally send this bill to them and ask themselves seriously—forget the Republican agenda—"How much do we want to spend?" They do not have to tell anybody, but I believe they will come to one of two conclusions: One, they want to spend too much and, therefore, cannot agree to this, or, to their amazement, they will find under their priorities they can easily get a balanced budget by the year 2002.

I believe that without a question. In fact, I will volunteer to sit down with them and use their priorities. How much more do you really want in education? It is annually appropriated, but let us just put it on the table. I say to my colleague, Senator COCHRAN, put it on there. How much more do you want in the Environmental Protection Agency? Put it on the table. Not very big budget items. Put some more on that they have been talking about. Put them on the table.

Look at this resolution: "The unified balanced budget shall be based on the most current economic and technical assumptions of the Congressional Budget Office."

We did not use those because we kept our budget resolution to the April ones. But, Mr. President, I say to my fellow Democrats, I ask that you look at those. See how much more that gives us to spend. I will guess $30 billion. Your priorities can be plugged into those, but why in the world, with the effort that has gone forth and with over 85 percent of Americans wanting a balanced budget, why would the President not commit and why would Democratic Senators not vote for a very basic, simple cornerstone for the beginning of serious negotiations by the Executive and the Congress, and there are no other conditions? Right?

It does not say how we get there. It does not say what committee does it. It does not say which programs are in, which are out. Very, very simple: Do you want to agree to the cornerstone of fiscal sanity, which is 7 years using real economics, and sit down and do it? As a matter of fact, I would assume that if it turns out to be impossible, that it would turn out to be impossible because there is great justification on the part of the President not to do it and even that the American people might buy in after serious negotiations.

Nobody goes to jail. Nobody is run out of office. It just says the Congress and the President shall do this. We cannot tie our President's hands. We can just say let us get on with this.

Let me put into my last thoughts—this idea is sort of budgetese and hard to talk about—but whose economic assumptions should you use? Let me try to draw a distinction that maybe everybody can understand. We created an institution called the Congressional Budget Office, led by Democrats and Republicans. I am very pleased to say to this day to this Senator's satisfaction, and in my opinion, they are very objective and they are very good. Nobody owns them. They do not work for the majority or the minority or the President. They have a cadre of economists that are as good as any. They have number crunchers that are the best.

Why did we do that and why did we tell them to do their work and to give it to the U.S. Congress? Because we wanted a neutral, objective evaluator of the realities of the American economy, especially if you had to do some predicting.

Nobody is going to take the floor and say that they are inferior to the President's people who do the same kind of work. Most will say they are superior to the President's people. Most will get the record out and say they are right more times than any of the others, which is true.

What is this battle about? The President of the United States got up at a joint session of Congress. He had his first budget before us as President. In that budget, he used what? Congressional Budget Office assumptions. He bragged about it, and he said that we are not cooking the books anymore. I am paraphrasing. We are not cooking the books anymore. No more smoke and mirrors. We are using the real authenticator of economics.

Who was it he was talking about? The Congressional Budget Office. He directed that sort of at Republicans that night. At least we took it that way. The Democrats cheered. Republicans sort of said, I guess he is picking on us.

The very next year, the President of the United States, for some reason, said, "I am not using them anymore. I am going to use my own people." Everybody should understand that those who do this work for the President work for him. The Office of Management and Budget Director is appointed by the President. We confirmed him. His Chief of Economics, head of that council, he picks them. The Secretary of the Treasury, he picks them.

Why did we create CBO? Because we were not too sure that when it came to these kinds of things, that you would not just lean a little bit toward your boss, right? We think some of those did that for Ronald Reagan, and we were the ones that took it in the neck for it. We had to end up saying we do not like these magic asterisks anymore and rosy economics.

So, for some reason—I think I now know why—the President, after 1 year, changed his mind, and he produced a budget that used different economic assumptions—growth, interest rates, and how much programs would cost, such as Medicare and Medicaid. He did that with his people and said, "If you want to use the Congressional Budget Office up there on the Hill, that is your business." But it turns out, right now, that it happens to be everybody's business because, essentially, if you use what the President's own people did for him, you have a no-pain budget. You do not have to change things very much because you pick up great savings because of assumptions. You even save a huge amount of money on Medicare and Medicaid without changing anything. You do not change a sentence in the law, put a new period in; you just assume more savings and then the program costs less.

I must say, I really wish that, before I went to the trouble of producing the budget that we are going to bring up the day after tomorrow and that we voted on here, somebody would have given me a present. What kind of present? A $475 billion present saying you do not have to worry about $475 billion of these reforms and restraints and reductions, because we just found them. Where did you find them? We found them because the President's men, the President's workers, the President's OMB Director found them by changing the books.

Now, I understand—and there is no inference that there is anything illegal about this at all—they have their views, and they are competent, smart, informed people. But the truth of the matter is that they work for the President and the Congressional Budget Office does not, nor does it work for Republicans. They have been more right than wrong, and we have been burned many times using economic assumptions that turn out not to be right.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. What I think I am hearing from Members on the other side is they are trying to find a reason to vote against this continuing resolution. They may not be comfortable with voting against it because it balances the budget in 7 years or because we are using Congressional Budget Office scoring. But some are trying to find a reduction in the expenditure levels in the continuing resolution as a reason to vote against this continuing resolution.

I want to ask the Senator, who I know is on the Appropriations Committee—and I conferred with the Senator from Mississippi, who is also on the committee—is it not a custom that when a continuing resolution is passed, in that continuing resolution you use the lower of the House- or Senate-passed levels of spending for the various programs, and that becomes the continuing resolution? Is that not the custom of continuing resolutions, I ask the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. DOMENICI. While I was not intimately involved in the process that developed that theory, it actually has a name. It is called the Michel rule, which is from the former minority leader in the House, Representative Michel, because at a point in time when he was in his leadership role, we were confronted with a Republican President and a Democratic Congress, and they were trying to work together to get some time, like we are, in a continuing resolution. Bob Michel suggested the lower of either House for this short interval, and it has thus been known as the Michel rule. So that is the case. That has been the practice.

Mr. SANTORUM. This bill conforms with the Michel rule?

Mr. DOMENICI. Right.

Mr. SANTORUM. Have Members on both sides voted for CR's that do that?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. We have to lay that on the table. There is a slight addition because there are programs that are zeroed out in the Michel rule application. The House feels strongly about those. The President feels strongly about those. And so rather than using the Michel rule, which would have said the lower of either means zero, we have compromised at 60 percent for the next 19 days.

Mr. SANTORUM. So actually we are even spending more money than the Michel rule would require because we are taking programs that would have been zeroed out because the House zeroed out those programs. They are spending 60 percent just to continue those programs during this period of time. So, in fact, we are being more generous than previous CR's would have been; is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes, in the sense that if you had a zero and applied the Michel rule, that would be the lowest possible one. So it would be zeroed out. I do not know if there has ever been any such zeroing out in a continuing resolution applying the Michel rule. Maybe the Senator from Mississippi knows that.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for a question on that point?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES. The Michel rule never applied to a set of facts in which you were zeroing out programs.

Mr. DOMENICI. I just said that.

Mr. SARBANES. That is absolutely right. So the response to the question put from the Senator from Pennsylvania is contrary to his assertion. The Michel rule never reached the matter we are confronting with all the zeroing out of these very important programs, including the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program, which the Senator from North Dakota made reference to earlier.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I say, first, to Senator SARBANES, one might put it another way and be just as accurate as your statement. One might say that the Michel rule has to be modified because, as it was applied, there were no zeroing out of program funding. So it is being modified. And we are modifying it and saying 60 percent funding for a temporary period of 19 days. That is one way to say it. I think that is what we are acknowledging.

Mr. CONRAD. If the Senator will yield for a quick question, I ask if the Senator from New Mexico is aware that, this morning, the Wall Street Journal has endorsed the economic assumptions of the President, rather than the economic assumptions of the Congressional Budget Office. The Wall Street Journal this morning said: "While the Congressional Budget Office predicted 2.3 percent annual economic growth, OMB boosted it to 2.5 percent." And, interestingly enough, the Wall Street Journal, this morning, said: "In our view, both growth assumptions are overly pessimistic. Corporate profits look fairly cheerful. There is no reason the economy should not grow at 3 percent," according to the Wall Street Journal. "Government policies, whether monetary or fiscal, should not be designed to foreclose this result."

I wanted to know if the Senator from New Mexico was aware that the Wall Street Journal—this is perhaps the most conservative journal in the country with respect to these issues—has this morning endorsed the economic assumptions of the Office of Management and Budget—if you look at the last 2 years.

I further ask, is it not true that the actual results of economic growth have exceeded both CBO and OMB assumptions, and that the actual results on deficit reduction have been better—the actual results—than CBO or OMB assumptions?

In fact, both have been overly conservative, and that perhaps the Wall Street Journal has got it right in that both OMB and CBO are overly conservative.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is that the question?

Mr. CONRAD. That is the question.

Was the Senator aware the Wall Street Journal has endorsed the President's economic assumptions, saying that both OMB and CBO are overly pessimistic?

Mr. DOMENICI. I was not aware, but it does not surprise me. I have the greatest respect for the Wall Street Journal but their charter is not to balance the budget. Our charter is to balance the budget. Theirs is to write editorials and make assessments and predictions. They are good at it.

The fact of the matter is if you put to the American people in language they could understand, if you are going to work at a balanced budget would you want to take a chance on using a rosy economic scenario and pulling us in again, or do you want to be more conservative?

If the conservative economics are right, lo and behold, we will have a nice surplus. Is that all so bad? Especially when you look at what we have do to get there, and if the Democrats will look at what we have done to get there, and apply their priorities on it, you get to a balanced budget using the Congressional Budget Office's more conservative, historically more accurate, economic assumptions than those prepared either by OMB or confirmed by the Wall Street Journal in their opinion as being more appropriate.

Now, Mr. President——

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I have tremendous respect for the Senator and I want to ask one thing. There are a number of us here who are anxious to be part of the debate. Will the Senator hold the floor longer, or is there an opportunity to have this debate, I think many of us would like to have?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am fully aware you want to debate, and I am sure we will debate and I will be through very soon.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank my colleague.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me just give you, the people listening and those who at least understand where I am coming from, my last observations.

Mr. President, I want to give my last observation of the situation: It is going to be very difficult to get a balanced budget. Once the President has vetoed the Balanced Budget Act we will present, it will be very difficult. Then there is no game plan and we will have to sit down as best we can and see if we can put one together.

I predict with almost certainty that if we do not have at least a cornerstone from which to start that work of a balanced budget in 7 years with agreed-upon economics, I submit it will never happen. I sense that in my discussions with people from the White House.

The differences are so severe that we will be all over the lot, and without 7 years staring us in the face and agreed upon priorities—and I say "agreed upon" because they are not ours at that point, they are negotiable—we will not get there.

Senators on your side want to debate things, and I wonder, is Senator EXON the manager?

Mr. EXON. There are no time restraints. It is open season, so to speak.

I believe the Senator from North Dakota was very, very early, but it is up to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I did not yield because of the nature of this amendment that is pending and the fact that it can be amended. I have to either ask that there be no amendments to it for the next 30 minutes or 40 minutes or an hour or I will have to bring the Republican leader to the floor.

Mr. EXON. Would the chairman of the committee please restate the request.

Mr. DOMENICI. If I give up the floor without getting the majority leader to the floor so I can talk to him, could we have an agreement for the next hour we will debate and there will be no amendments?

Mr. EXON. There are some amendments that we want to offer. I simply inquire—we could not agree to that without further consideration.

The floor is open to amendments at any time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I was unaware of a conversation between the majority leader and your leader that has already occurred that straightens out my problem, so I yield the floor.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have listened for some while this morning, and I will respond to some of the discussion that I have heard.

This is either, in theatrical terms, a comedy or tragedy. I suppose some view it both ways.

A comedy—I came to the Capitol this morning to see a newspaper that says "Cry Baby," and a newspaper saying that the Speaker had a tantrum and closed down the Government because Clinton made him sit at the back of the plane.

I do not know the veracity of the news piece but the quote that is in this piece says, claiming that Clinton refused to open budget talks and snubbed him aboard Air Force One, GINGRICH said, "That's part of why you ended up with us sending down a tougher stopgap spending bill."

Well, I hope that is not the case. I hope that is just hyperbole, but if it is the case, it truly is comedy—low-grade comedy. It does not make any sense for this country to be in this situation. The tragedy is this affects a lot of people in a lot of significant ways.

I know that truth is often the first casualty in debates like this. I know that on the floor of the Senate there are people today who will work very hard to make the case that this debate is about whether we should balance the budget.

We will see contortions and acrobatic approaches today that suggest this is only about whether we should balance the budget. It is not about that at all.

Of course we should balance the budget. Of course we should balance the budget. I do not think anyone in here disagrees with that. That ought to be the goal.

The question is, how do you balance the budget? What approach do you use to balance the budget? I know that we will have people for the next hour who will say the debate here is about CBO versus OMB. I bet a lot of people do not understand the interests of that—CBO versus OMB. I do not care whether it is CBO, OMB, AT&T, or the NFL.

That is not the issue with me. What I do care about is the notion that people are bringing legislative initiatives to this floor to—they say—balance the budget, in a manner that cuts health care for the elderly and the vulnerable in our country, takes kids off the Head Start Program. It does dozens of things to the more vulnerable parts of our society and then rewards others with tax breaks.

As long as people are coming to this floor saying what we need to do is borrow money to give a tax break, some $245 billion, 80 percent of which will go to the top 20 percent of the income earners, as long as people are saying we must do that, and in order to pay for all of that, we ought to take a big hunk out of Medicare, Medicaid, education, low-income energy assistance for poor people, when they are trying to heat their homes during the winter as an example, I am not going to be interested in talking about CBO versus OMB.

I am for 7 years. That is fine. If we can do it quicker, that is fine as well. The fact is, we ought to do it the right way, and the right way is not to borrow money to give a tax cut which will reward the privileged in this country.

There was an article the other day that described in summary what we are facing here. The "how to balance the budget," represented by the priorities of the road map already given us by the majority party, is to do it this way. It says, you take a roomful of people and have that roomful of people represent the population of the United States. Then you divide them. You take the 20 percent of your room that have the lowest incomes and you put them on this side of the room in chairs. You say: You sit over there because you have the lowest income in the room, you 20 percent. Now we are going to cut spending in a way that says you 20 percent with the lowest incomes get 80 percent of the spending cuts. You bear the burden of 80 percent of all we are going to do on the spending cut side.

In the same room you say: By the way, we would like to take the 20 percent that have the highest incomes in this room and put them over here in chairs on this side of the room. Then you go over to them and say: By the way, we have good news for you. You 20 percent with the highest incomes in this little room of ours, we are going to give you 80 percent of the tax cut.

Now we have our room divided, a microcosm of our country. We have the 20 percent of the lowest income earners on this side of the room and we have 60 percent in the middle and then we have the 20 percent of the highest income earners on the other side of the room. And we have said: You folks that do not have much, we are going to make things a lot worse for you because you are going to take 80 percent of the spending cuts, that is what we are saddling you with. And you folks that have the most, we are going to reward you with 80 percent of the tax cuts. That is what we are facing. That is the road map.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DORGAN. I will be happy to yield when I have finished, if I have any time left, but I have just begun my statement——

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me just ask, about the tax cut——

Mr. DORGAN. We were generous with the Senator from New Mexico, who had the floor for some while——

Mr. COCHRAN. He yielded to you for a question.

Mr. DORGAN. All right. I will yield for a question of——

Mr. COCHRAN. I was just going to ask the Senator if there is any tax cut in this bill? This is a continuing resolution that provides, is it not true, for 3 weeks for a cooling-off period to fund Government and get everybody back in the agencies and departments? There is not anything in this resolution that would require any tax to be cut, is that not true?

Mr. DORGAN. I get your question. Let me ask you a question. Would you agree to balance this budget without a tax cut so you are not borrowing money to give a tax cut to the wealthy?

Mr. COCHRAN. We are not debating how we get to the balanced budget, is my response. That is what you are trying to convert this into, is a debate over tax cuts. This is a debate on getting the Government functioning, is it not true? That is what the continuing resolution is about.

Mr. DORGAN. Let me reclaim my time. We already know what your plan is. It has been on the floor twice, just as recently as a couple of weeks ago. It includes a tax cut. We know that.

My question to you, Senator COCHRAN, was would you agree to balance this budget without giving a tax cut? Because the fact is, every single dollar of tax cut you are going to borrow.

I simply ask that question of you.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will be happy to respond to my good friend. This is not a debate over how we balance the budget. It is a debate over whether or not we ought to commit ourselves to working together to achieve a balanced budget. That is the provision in this resolution.

Mr. DORGAN. I appreciate the Senator's response. The fact is, he did not answer my question. The reason he did not answer my question, he and I both know, is that you have no intention, the majority party has no intention and never has had an intention, of bringing a balanced budget resolution to the floor of the Senate that does not include a big tax cut that will, in most cases, reward the most privileged of people in our country and every single dollar of the tax cut you are going to borrow. The fact is, every dollar that is given as a tax cut to someone during the next 7 years will be a dollar that is borrowed and increases this country's debt. If you call that conservative economics, I do not know what school teaches it.

The fact is, we know what the plan is. So to come here and say this is about 7 years and CBO and put blinders on—here is the journey. Do not remember, by the way, where we have taken you in the past. We know exactly what that journey is about and we know all of the stops along the way.

Among those stops are a very significant tax cut, because that is the centerpole in the tent on the contract for America. The fact is, the American people are a lot smarter than a lot of the folks running around town. They understand that, when the job in front of you is to balance the Federal budget, you roll up your sleeves and you talk about how you do it. They also understand that those who roll up their sleeves and talk about a tax cut while you are up to your neck in debt do no service to the future of this country.

I know it is popular. I know why my colleagues, some of my colleagues on the House and Senate side, want to talk about tax cuts. Because it is enormously popular. I have a couple of kids who want to eat desert first every single meal. I know why they want to do that. And I know why you all want to talk about tax cuts. But you all know, if you are honest, that every single dollar of the tax cut will be borrowed.

Let me just suggest a couple of other points about the tax cut. We do not know what this tax cut is going to be, but let me give some examples of what it can be.

In the House of Representatives, they give a $2 million tax cut apiece for 2,000 corporations by eliminating something called the alternative minimum tax. That does not mean much to anybody. Eliminate the AMT. That is pretty foreign stuff. Nobody knows what that means.

What it means is this. In the old days we used to read stories about a corporation that would make $2 billion in income and guess what they paid in taxes? Zero. Nothing. Then we put together something called an alternative minimum tax, to say that is not fair. If you make $2 billion, and somebody goes out and works 8 or 10 hours a day and makes $8 or $10 an hour, guess what? They have to take a shower at night and fill out a tax return and they are going to pay a tax. It is not fair, if you make $2 billion and pay zero, so we are going to have an alternative minimum tax.

Our friends in the House said we do not want an alternative minimum tax. Why should we want those big interests to start paying taxes again? Let us eliminate that. Let us give 2,000 corporations $2 million each in tax breaks and then let us tell 55,000 kids we cannot afford Head Start for them. Tell them we cannot afford a Head Start Program for you.

In this bill—you know, it is interesting. We are told this is an innocent little piece of legislation. The only thing that matters on this piece of legislation is the last page, page 15, which talks about 7 years and CBO.

What about page 9? I wonder if somebody wants to talk about page 9. Page 9 says the Star Schools Program—which deals with math and education and science, in which we are going to try to boost America's schools—that program we ought to get rid of. What we do is we cut funding 40 percent on the Star Schools Program. And the Senator from New Mexico says, that is only for 19 days; what are you concerned about? Cut Star Schools by only 40 percent for 19 days.

Do you know something? The same people who bring us these priorities, cutting Star Schools, and call themselves conservatives and say they want to balance the budget, are off trying to build star wars for $48 billion, building an astrodome over America. The Soviet Union is gone, but now we want to build an astrodome over America for $48 billion because, when it comes to star wars, the sky is the limit. We have plenty of money. Let us spend it like it is Saturday night and we have unlimited credit cards. But when it comes to Star Schools, we are sorry, it is just not in the rank of priorities for us.

I somehow do not understand the priorities. We are here, not by accident. This is an engineered circumstance. All of us know that. I have read before, but I want to read again, statements by the Speaker last April. He vowed "to create a titanic legislative standoff with President Clinton by adding vetoed bills to must-pass legislation increasing the national debt ceiling."

This is not an accident. We are not here by some trick of fate. This is a deliberate, engineered shutdown. Why? I guess—I do not know. Maybe it is because somebody was not invited to get off the front of the airplane and he got piqued. It is human. Maybe it is petty. Maybe it is human. Or maybe because there is a genuine difference in priorities.

I guess they want the debate today to be a debate about 7 years CBO. Seven years does not matter to me. Six years will be fine, as far as I am concerned. If we get good economic growth, maybe get some moderation of health care prices, we can do it faster than 7 years. But the fact is, the differences between us are differences in priorities, very substantial differences in priorities.

Just a couple of other quick points. We have heard a lot already this morning, and we will hear all day, that they have a plan to balance the budget. Of course they do not have a plan to balance the budget. The Congressional Budget Office says their plan results in a $110 billion deficit in the year 2002. I hope the Senator from South Carolina, who is on the floor, will address this as well. What a fraud. It does not balance the budget and never has. The only way they address it is to take money from the Social Security trust funds, move it over, and then claim after they have taken the money they have balanced the budget.

Everybody in this room knows it is a sham. I said it in 1983 and offered an amendment in the Ways and Means Committee in the House in 1983, and said: This is what they are going to do with the Social Security surplus if it is not protected. And 12 years later, sure enough, every single year they have done it. So they say we have a balanced budget. Sure they do.

They got to a balanced budget by, in my judgment, dishonestly using Social Security trust funds in the operating budget, No. 1; No. 2, borrowing money to give a tax cut, 80 percent of which will go to the top 20 percent of the income earners in the country.

The fact is this is all about special interest, all about big money. I come from a rural area. I know about the sound of hogs in a corn crib and feeding. I tell you. This is all about feeding. It is about who gets helped and who gets hurt, who gets saddled with the cost and who gets the benefit.

And predictably when you look at winners and losers—not whether we balance the budget but who wins and who loses under this plan—it is pretty clear.

There is an old song by Bob Wills.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COATS). Does the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. I will not yield.

There is an old song by Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys that I have used on the floor before with lyrics that I think are appropriate to these priorities. "The little bee sucks the blossom, and the big bee gets the honey. The little guy picks the cotton, and the big guy gets the money." That is what this is about. This is about queen bees and big guys. Guess who ends up with all the money, and guess who winds up with all the hurt?

What we ought to do—all of us—is get in a room and talk about what works and what does not. Who needs help and who does not? How do we move our country ahead? What kind of incentives provide opportunity and growth? All of those things are important to everyone of us in this room. Our differences at this point are over priorities, and choices. And honestly I think there are some who do not want them solved. I understand that. There are some who are piqued. There are some who are upset about what end of a plane they got off of at some point. But there are others, myself included, who believe it is worthy to balance this budget. It is important to the country to do it, but to do it with the right choices and the right priorities so that all of the American people benefit from this exercise.

I am happy to yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding.

My question was simply to refer to the statement he made, and to ask him whether or not on the Star Schools issue he realized that in the Senate committee that has jurisdiction over education we recommend in the bill that we tried to call up the other day that Star Schools be funded at the same level that it was funded last year; that the House provided no funding in their bill. And the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota though this continuing resolution, if it passed, would zero out Star Schools. The program is forward funded anyway. But in the Senate bill, which the Democrats refused to let us bring up when they refused to permit us to agree to the motion to proceed to the bill, would fund that program at the same level that was funded at last year.

Mr. DORGAN. The Senator is correct. He is also correct that the House version of the appropriations bill zeroed it out. I guess I have little faith that rather than getting the best of each we will probably get the worst of both.

So I think that when you come to this floor saying that the Star Schools Program shall have a reduction in funding of 40 percent, which is what I said, the Star Schools Program be reduced by 40 percent in this continuing resolution at the same time that we have a bunch of folks who are genuflecting trying to build a star wars program that will cost $48 billion. I am scratching my head. Who sees the bigger picture for our country—those who want the best in schools and kids, or those who want to build a star wars project with money we do not need and do not have?

That is the only point I was trying to make. That is why I think this is truly about choices. This it about priorities. This is a very worthy debate. We ought not have it while the Government is shut down. There ought to be, in my judgment, more thoughtful programs keeping the Government open trying the prioritize as we balance the budget, and, yes, in 7 years. That is fine with me. Score keeping is not the issue here. It seems to me that it is choices and priorities.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES. Is the article to which the Senator was referring the one from the New York Daily News that starts out "House Speaker Newt Gingrich admitted yesterday that he provoked the government shutdown in a fit of pique over how President Clinton treated him on last week's trip to Israel"?

Later on it says, "And so, Gingrich's wounded pride fueled the shutdown that forced the furlough of 800,000 Federal workers and closed nonessential services—costing taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars."

Is that the article?

Mr. DORGAN. That is the article to which I was referring to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CRY BABY—NEWT'S TANTRUM: HE CLOSED DOWN THE GOVERNMENT BECAUSE CLINTON MADE HIM SIT AT BACK OF PLANE

(By Timothy Clifford and Dave Eisenstadt)

WASHINGTON.—House Speaker Newt Gingrich admitted yesterday that he provoked the government shutdown in a fit of pique over how President Clinton treated him on last week's trip to Israel.

Claiming that Clinton refused to open budget talks and snubbed him and Senate GOP Leader Bob Dole (Kan.) aboard Air Force One, Gingrich (R-Ga.) said, "That's part of why you ended up with us sending down a tougher [stopgap spending bill]."

On Monday night, Clinton vetoed the GOP bill that would have kept the government running through Dec. 1.

Clinton rejected the measure because Gingrich and Dole put in provisions that would have raised Medicare premiums and cut deeply into education and environmental programs.

And so, Gingrich's wounded pride fueled the shutdown that forced the furlough of 800,000 federal workers and closed nonessential services—costing taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars.

Even though Gingrich and Dole spent 25 hours flying to and from Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's funeral, the speaker groused that they never talked about the budget.

And Gingrich told reporters that White House staffers ushered him and Dole off the back of the aircraft on their return—far from the media cameras focused on Clinton and former Presidents George Bush and Jimmy Carter walking out the front.

"You just wonder, where is their sense of manners, where is their sense of courtesy?" Gingrich told reporters. "I don't know. Was it just a sign of utter incompetence or lack of consideration, or was it a deliberate strategy of insult?"

Despite conceding that his complaints sounded "petty," Gingrich argued, "We think they were sending us a deliberate signal that they're not going to negotiate; they don't care what we are doing, that they have, in fact, decided on their path and that is the path of confrontation."

Democrats immediately ridiculed Gingrich—saying that the President let the speaker bring his wife on the trip.

"I'm amazed that he would be the biggest whiner," Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle (S.D.) said. "We'll give him another flight over there, and the President can play cards with him. . . . It's crazy."

And Clinton spokesman Mike McCurry said, "You all know that they were going to mourn a death by assassination of the Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. And the speaker was treated with utmost courtesy."

Dole distanced himself from Gingrich's outrage, joking about the incident.

"We got in on the front exit, went out the rear exit," Dole told reporters. "Maybe that's just the normal rotation."

Slightly backing down last night, Gingrich and Dole proposed a new stopgap funding bill without the controversial Medicare provision.

But the measure also would force Clinton to accept balancing the budget in seven years and retains the cuts to environmental and educational programs.

The White House immediately announced that Clinton would veto that bill.

With polls showing public support for his stand, Clinton told CBS television that he would not cave to the Republicans. "I'm not going to do it, even if it's 90 days, 120 days or 180 days. If we take it right into the next election, let the American people decide," the President said.

Meanwhile, Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin took more than $60 billion from two Civil Service retirement funds to stave off the first default in U.S. history.

Clinton vetoed the GOP's debt limit extension Monday, forcing Rubin to take the extraordinary action that guarantees that the U.S. can pay its bills through the new year.

The financial markets showed approval of Rubin's actions, but the Federal Reserve failed to cut interest rates as many expected it would.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, is the Senator familiar with the articles which appeared in today's Post and today's Baltimore Sun, one headed "Underlying Gingrich's Stance Is His Pique About President," and the other one, "Gingrich links stalemate to perceived Clinton snub."

This is an absolute tragedy. You have 800,000 employees out of work, services cut down at great expense, and it is all because the Speaker has had a fit of pique about this matter.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that those articles be printed in the RECORD as well, along with a column by Lars-Erik Nelson, of the New York Daily News, headed "Crisis reveals Newt depths of pettiness."

This is incredible. The Speaker himself at a breakfast in effect conceded that this provoked him into taking this action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Maryland that the Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. That is right. I am finished.

I ask unanimous consent that the articles to which I referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNDERLYING GINGRICH'S STANCE IS HIS PIQUE ABOUT PRESIDENT

(By John E. Yang)

The budget battle between President Clinton and Congress turns on many things, but House Speaker Newt Gingrich keeps coming back to that long plane flight back from Israel when he says the president ignored and insulted him.

Gingrich (R-Ga.) yesterday said the tough terms of the interim spending bill Clinton vetoed Monday night, triggering a partial government shutdown, were partly the result of pique he and Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.) felt on Air Force One during the long round-trip flight to Jerusalem for the funeral of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"This is petty," he told reporters. "[But] you land at Andrews [Air Force Base] and you've been on the plane for 25 hours and nobody has talked to you and they ask you to get off the plane by the back ramp. . . . You just wonder, where is their sense of manners? Where is their sense of courtesy?"

At a breakfast with reporters, Gingrich delivered an almost stream-of-consciousness analysis of the current political crisis, a candid performance he said he knew his press secretary would not like. Gingrich alternately and astutely described how his party was positioned in the current debate over the budget, and angrily relived—at length—the disrespect he felt he suffered at the president's hands aboard Air Force One. He said that the fact that Clinton did not speak to him or Dole during the trip to and from Jerusalem is "part of why you ended up with us sending down a tougher" interim spending bill.

"It's petty . . . but I think it's human."

Gingrich's comments brought immediate disdain from Democrats. Senate Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.) who was also on the trip to attend Rabin's funeral, called on Gingrich to "quit the whinning—let's get on with the real business here."

And White House press secretary Michael McCurry reacted with mock disbelief when asked about Gingrich's allegations of disrespect on the part of the president.

"You all know that they were going to mourn the death by assassination of the Israeli prime minister, Yitzhak Rabin," McCurry told reporters at his daily briefing. "And the speaker was treated with utmost courtesy. In fact, so much courtesy that his wife was invited when other wives of this delegation were not invited. And until someone shows me these words in black and white. I will refuse to believe that the speaker said anything that as you described it as so petty. . . . I just fail to believe the speaker would somehow connect this to the current budget crisis.".

As the budget battle intensifies, the bickering between Clinton and congressional Republican leaders is becoming increasingly bitter and personal.

During Monday night's Oval Office meeting between Clinton and congressional leaders, for instance, House Majority Leader Richard K. Armey (R-Tex.) complained about having "to listen to these lies" from the White House, according to a participant.

Clinton responded by saying the congressional Republicans had been worse in their attacks, telling Armey who had criticized Hillary Rodham Clinton during last year's health care debate: "I never, ever have and never expect to criticize your wife or members of your family."

A phone call last Saturday produced complaints of rudeness on the president's part. Dole complained publicly that Clinton had all but hung up on him when he called to discuss a possible budget deal, and Gingrich was angry that Clinton promised to call them back and never did. The White House explained that Clinton was leaving for a Veterans Day event when the Republicans called and that Clinton said then he could talk for only five minutes.

The tension is not surprising. Gingrich is in the midst of the most crucial week yet of his speakership. Not only is he engaged in a high-stakes confrontation with Clinton, but he and his leadership team are struggling to complete work on the massive Republican balanced-budget bill—which leaders vowed would be done last Friday. Gingrich called the measure "central" to Republicans. "It will decide for a generation who we are," he said.

"This is not a game of political chicken . . . this is not a bunch of juveniles," the speaker said. "This is a serious, historic debate and a serious, historic power struggle. . . . That's why there will not be an immediate resolution to this crisis."

Gingrich told reporters that is why the lack of negotiations aboard Air Force One was so serious.

The speaker said the airborne silence was a signal "that they had made a decision because of their political calculation that they wanted a fight. . . . Our calculation was that they hadn't seen us deliberately. . . . Our feelings aren't hurt."

The speaker said the terms of the interim spending bill were toughened because it was clear it would have to pass without Democratic support.

Whether Gingrich took it as an affront or not, the incident became a rallying cry among House Republicans, who rarely failed to mention it when asked about the possibility of working with the administration.

Among the other things on which the budget battle is turning, Gingrich said, is instinct. That, he said, was the basis for the Republicans' demand that the federal budget deficit be eliminated in seven years. Clinton is refusing to accept that time frame and, earlier this year, proposed balancing the budget in 10 years.

"Seven [years] is the longest period in which you can maintain the discipline to insist on it happening," Gingrich said. "Ten [years] allows you to avoid all the decisions that get you to a balanced budget."

Asked on what that was based, the speaker gave a one-word answer: "Intuition."

Gingrich also dismissed polls indicating that more Americans blame congressional Republicans than Clinton for the budget impasse, saying that his party would win in the long run.

Gingrich said the average American "frankly hasn't thought about it, doesn't particularly care. . . . If the choice [of whom to blame] is a vacillating, extremely misleading president who refuses to make any serious decisions, who refuses to tell the truth and shows up on television trying to make you like him by telling you things that aren't true, and a Congress that says in a very firm, adult way: 'Yeah, we're going to balance the budget.' Now of those two, which one is more likely to get blamed?"

But, Gingrich said, the Republicans will prevail. "The public relations fight is easy," he said. "That's why we've ignored it. . . . We're on the right side of history, we're on the right side of this culture."

GINGRICH LINKS STALEMATE TO PERCEIVED CLINTON SNUB

(By Susan Baer)

WASHINGTON.—In remarks that reveal the personal tenor of the budget battle, House Speaker Newt Gingrich suggested yesterday that he and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole toughened the spending bill that has led to the partial government shutdown because they felt President Clinton snubbed them on a recent plane ride.

At a breakfast session with reporters, Mr. Gingrich said he was insulted and appalled that, on the long trip aboard Air Force One this month to and from the funeral of Israel Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, the president failed to invite the Republican leaders to the front of the plane to discuss the budget, and then made them exit at the rear of the plane.

"I think that's part of why you ended up with us sending down a tougher continuing resolution," Mr. Gingrich said.

"This is petty, and I'm going to say up front it's petty, and Tony will probably say that I shouldn't say it, but I think it's human," the speaker added, referring to Tony Blankley, his spokesman.

Mr. Gingrich's remarks suggest that the shabby treatment he perceived helped shape the "continuing resolution," the temporary spending bill that Mr. Clinton vetoed Monday. The bill is at the heart of the budget impasse that has closed parts of the government and furloughed 800,000 federal workers this week.

Mr. Gingrich said he thought "a couple of hours of dialogue" among the three leaders on the plane might have averted the stalemate that has led to the partial government shutdown.

As he has done repeatedly since returning from the Nov. 6 Rabin funeral, Mr. Gingrich railed against Mr. Clinton's treatment of him and Mr. Dole during their 25 hours in flight—specifically the president's decision not to discuss the federal budget with them.

Upon arriving back in Washington, he and Mr. Dole had to exit the plane by the rear door instead of by the front door with Mr. Clinton and former Presidents George Bush and Jimmy Carter.

"When you land at Andrews [Air Base] and you've been on the plane for 25 hours and nobody has talked to you and they ask you to get off by the back ramp so the media won't picture the Senate majority leader and the speaker of the House returning from Israel, you just wonder, where's their sense of manners, where's their sense of courtesy?" the speaker said.

"Had they just been asleep all night and it hadn't occurred to them that maybe Bob Dole deserved the dignity of walking down the front ramp? Forget me—I'm only speaker of the House. But you just have to say to yourself, was it deliberate calculated aloofness or just total incompetence?"

Mike McCurry, Mr. Clinton's spokesman, called Mr. Gingrich's remarks "incomprehensible" and said he could not believe the speaker would connect the trip to the Rabin funeral with the current budget crisis.

When pressed by reporters, Mr. Gingrich tried to dismiss the notion that his tougher negotiating stance on the spending measure was a result of a bruised ego.

Rather, he said, the Republican position was influenced by his sense—stemming from the neglect he and Mr. Dole perceived on the plane ride—that the White House was itching for a fight and was simply not interested in negotiating.

"It was clear to us getting off that airplane they had made a decision because of their political calculations that they wanted a fight," the House speaker said.

During the plane trip, he said, he and Mr. Dole tried to grasp the message of the administration's apparent snub.

"It's like Kremlinology," Mr. Gingrich said. "You have Clintonology. What are they doing? What are the signals? One of the signals was that in 25 hours it was not worthwhile to sit down and talk. One of the signals was, once we arrived back in America, we no longer mattered."

Asked at a news conference whether he, too, was offended by his treatment aboard Air Force One, Mr. Dole said, "I wondered why I went out the rear exit. We went in the front exit. Maybe that's just the normal rotation."

Mr. McCurry said that, during the flight, Mr. Clinton walked back to the Republican leaders to thank them for joining the delegation to Israel. Budget negotiating, Mr. McCurry said, was not the purpose of the trip.

"The president of the United States lost a friend," Mr. McCurry said. "And I don't think he much felt like talking about budget politics with speaker Gingrich, with all due respect."

Mr. McCurry said the speaker was treated with "so much courtesy" on the trip that he was permitted to bring his wife, Marianne, on Air Force One. The privilege was not extended to anyone else in the delegation, including Mr. Bush and Mr. Carter.

Other Democrats, in the heat of the budget stalemate yesterday, seized on the speaker's remarks. South Dakota Sen. Tom Daschle, the Senate minority leader who was also on the trip, said Mr. Gingrich "must have been sleepwalking that night" because the president had spoken with the congressional leaders several times.

Noting Mrs. Gingrich's presence on the plane, Mr. Daschle said: "For a person who was given extra privileges, extra opportunities to experience this extraordinary piece of history, I'm amazed that he would be the biggest whiner."

CRISIS REVEALS NEWT DEPTHS OF PETTINESS

(By Lars-Erik Nelson)

WASHINGTON.—Across the breakfast table, House Speaker Newt Gingrich was doing a good imitation of Capt. Queeg at the end of "The Caine Mutiny" court-martial, slowly unraveling into resentment and self-pity.

He was fighting liars, he said. And disrespect. "Forget me, I'm only the speaker of the House," he said. Here was Newt Gingrich, leader of the Republican Revolution and defender of civilization on this planet, forced to sit for 25 hours in the back of Air Force One, waiting for President Clinton to stop by and negotiate a budget deal.

But Clinton never came back. So Gingrich, in his rage, drafted two resolutions that forced Clinton to bring the federal government to a grinding halt.

The extraordinary behind-the-scenes tale Gingrich told yesterday morning at a Christian Science Monitor breakfast is either comedy or tragedy, or junior high school cafeteria intrigue, take your pick. It surely was not what you expect to hear from the stewards of your government.

Gingrich had been invited aboard Air Force One last week to fly to the funeral of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. With a budget crisis pending, he expected Clinton would take time out during the flight to talk about a possible solution.

But Clinton, who seemed to be genuinely grieving over Rabin's death, stayed up front in a cabin with former Presidents Jimmy Carter and George Bush on both the outward-bound and return trips.

Then, when the plane landed at Andrews Air Force base outside Washington, Gingrich and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole were asked to deplane by—gasp!—the rear door.

"This is petty," Gingrich confessed. "I'm going to say up front it's petty, but I think it's human. When you land at Andrews and you've been on the plane for 25 hours and nobody has talked to you and they ask you to get off by the back ramp . . . you just wonder, where is their sense of manners, where is their sense of courtesy?"

To Gingrich, the professor of history, this was one of the snubs of the century, ranking, he said, with the time Charles Evans Hughes stiffed Hiram Johnson of the California Progressive Party back in 1916, a slight that cost Hughes the California vote and the presidency. And it was this disrespect, Gingrich continued, that caused him to send the President two temporary financing and spending bills he knew that Clinton would have to veto—thus shutting down the federal government.

As Gingrich spoke, feeling sorrier and sorrier for himself and Dole over their treatment aboard Air Force One, he realized that what he was saying did indeed sound petty. So he changed his tack. "This was not petty," he insisted. "This was an effort on our part to read the White House strategy. . . . It was clear to us coming off that airplane that they had made a decision because of their political calculation that they wanted a fight."

But then again, he wasn't sure. "Was it just a sign of utter incompetence or lack of consideration, or was it a deliberate strategy of insult?" he asked himself. "I don't know which it was."

Either way, the federal government is shut down, 800,000 employes are laid off, the Treasury is scrambling to honor payments on its bonds, the once-in-a-lifetime Johannes Vermeer exhibit at the National Gallery of Art is padlocked, the Statue of Liberty is closed down for the duration and Gingrich, second in line for the presidency, walks around town seeing plots against his dignity.

Well, what about it, George Stephanopoulos? Did you intentionally snub the speaker of the House aboard Air Force One?

"I think the speaker needs a weekend off," Stephanopoulos said. "The President was in mourning for a friend. He had several briefings with the speaker, and the rules for Air Force One are that only the President goes out the front door."

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, before I yield the floor, I fervently hope that thoughtful people will sit down, and that we will reason together and compromise on these choices—not on the question of whether we should balance the budget. Of course, we should. Not on the question of 7 years or score keeping—compromise on the question of priorities and choices that allow us to get our fiscal house in order, and allow us to build a better future for this country.

I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 3055

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I know that there are a number of amendments to be offered. I think it is important that we get on with them.

So, in interest of doing so, I send an amendment to the desk

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. DASCHLE) proposes an amendment numbered 3055.

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

Section 106(C) of Public Law 104-31 is amended by striking "November 13, 1995" and inserting "December 22, 1995".

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, let me first explain the amendment. It very simply says let us get down to business here. Let us put aside all of the debate, all of politics, all of the charges, and let us do first things first. Let us pass a continuing resolution to the 22d of December, about a month, giving us time to work through what we know is going to be an extraordinarily difficult 4 weeks. We know we are going to have more of this debate. We know we are going to have many differences. We know that we are not going to resolve many of them. But we also know that we cannot let all of what is happening out there for the last 48 hours continue day after day after day.

I do not have today's report, Mr. President. But let me give you yesterday's. So far, in just 2 days, 56,000 people have been unable to apply for Social Security benefits—56,000; 3,226 veterans have been unable to file new claims for compensation and pension benefits; 1½ million visitors have been turned away in 2 days from our national parks; 46,000 people have been unable to apply for passports.

Mr. President, I could go on and on. But that is result of what is happening here. Until we resolve the issue of a continuing resolution, we are not going to see changes except for the fact that these are going to get worse and worse and worse. Those are the changes we can expect.

So my amendment simply says this. Let us agree to disagree on all of the other issues for now, and let us at least agree that this cannot go on; that the American people expecting services from the Federal Government ought to get them; that this looks worse and worse, and that we ought to resolve at least this part of it. I do not think that is too much to ask, Mr. President.

So I would hope every Senator could support at least this. That is all we are doing today—offering an amendment that says the Government must continue to function.

What is all the more troubling is what we have just heard in the dialog and in the colloquy on the floor between the distinguished Senators from North Dakota, from Maryland, and others who have laid out what may be the motivation behind this impasse.

It sounds to me more like this impasse is directly a function of the result of a hunch and a grudge on part of the Speaker—a hunch and a grudge, a grudge that somehow he was not given adequate consideration on the plane to Israel. Well, I must tell you—and I will tell my colleagues what I have said repeatedly now in the last week or 10 days on the floor and in public forums throughout the last week and a half. I was in that same room, and I do not know whether this is selected memory or sleepwalking on an airplane or what. The President came back on a number of occasions, talked to us a number of times about the extraordinary nature of the trip itself. We were going to one of the most difficult, one of the most emotional, certainly one of the most memorable occasions that I have had in public life, the burial of a head of State. He came back. We talked at some length about that with the Israeli Ambassador, who, by the way, was also in the room. We had those conversations. The Speaker was there. Why he chooses now not to remember that is something I do not understand.

He came back on other occasions talking about the need to find agreement, the need to breach our differences, the need to find a way with which to resolve the impasse. And when he was finished coming back, the Chief of Staff came back on several occasions and asked about whether or not we could resolve our differences.

I must remind my colleagues, I recall very well when I got the call from the White House that this was a development that had just occurred and could I come back to Washington. I was in South Dakota. Reference was made to spouses, and I was informed that spouses in this situation just were not welcome. And I said I understood. I knew the plane would be crowded. I knew how difficult the trip. I knew all the logistical problems. So I did not challenge whether spouses ought to be there or not. But I am told the Speaker did. The Speaker said: I have got to have my wife there, and she was there. I do not deny her the right. I am glad she was. She is a delightful woman, and I appreciated having the chance to have her on the airplane and for her to experience what we experienced. However, it makes all the more petty, all the more demeaning this whole affair. I do not understand it. And so, Mr. President, I must say that for him to be using this, given the facts, is absolutely incredible.

And then to go beyond just the grudge—the hunch. The hunch. Yesterday morning, the Speaker was asked, on what do you base your calculation that this has to be done in 7 years? What is it about 7 years that you think really drives the need to have a balanced budget in that timeframe? The question was, what do you base it on? His answer? Intuition. Intuition. That is my answer. That is how it is that we have concluded a 7-year balanced budget is the right number of years.

As my colleagues have said and as the Wall Street Journal says again this morning, maybe it is time to privatize these economic projections. I hear arguments on the other side that we ought to privatize everything. Well, there have been seven economic analyses. The CBO is the most conservative of the seven. In 1993, they were so conservative they were $100 billion off in 2 years—$100 billion. And now we are saying we have to use these conservative estimates as we project for the next 7 years in spite of the fact—and I hope everyone just thinks about this for a minute. It is one of the most inexplicable inconsistencies. Maybe our Republican colleagues can enlighten me here—our economic growth for the last 25 years has been 2.5 percent, 2.5 percent.

CBO is projecting economic growth for the next 7 years at 2.3 percent. But we are told—and I think there is a mutual agreement—that if we balance the budget, if we do all the things that we should be doing to spur economic growth, it should be more, not less, than what it has been historically. It ought to be more than 2.3 percent. So what the Republican majority is apparently telling us is that we are going to go through all the pain, all the difficult choices, all these circumstances so that we can enjoy a growth rate less than what we have enjoyed for the last 25 years.

Mr. President, somebody smarter than I has to explain why the American people should buy that. Everyone is entitled to buy their own projections but somebody ought to explain that to the American people. And again I go back to whether or not——

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the leader yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I will yield when I finish. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Alaska as soon as I finish my train of thought.

I will stand by whatever we may ultimately agree to here, but let us be real. Let us be honest. The Government does not have a monopoly on good numbers. If the private sector is telling us not once, not twice, but on five different analyses done about economic growth in the future, if they are all telling us, look, you are missing something here, we think it is a lot better because of what you have been doing, it is going to be a lot better than 2.3 percent, why not consider it? Why not think about it? Why not privatize economic growth? If we are privatizing everything else, let us privatize this, too. Because if we privatize it, we are going to be in a lot better position to better understand the implications of all this than we are right now.

So, Mr. President, that is what this is about. I am very, very disappointed that we have not been able to resolve our differences on the continuing resolution at least. We will have more to say about the balanced budget, but let me just emphasize we have all voted for a balanced budget. Many of us have voted for a balanced budget in 7 years. But to say under any condition you just have to accept the fact that it is going to be 7 years and we will fill in all the blanks later makes me very, very skeptical, frankly.

The Republicans have been very uneasy about the fine print in that 7 years, and now we want to get on to the large print. I think we have to go back to the fine print and look at exactly what we are talking about in 7 years. I hope we can agree to 7 years at some point. But if we do or if we do not, before we are called upon to vote on a 7-year budget, I hope everyone understands it is like buying a house from the curb. We look at it from a distance and it looks like a nice house. It looks like a great house. But what happens when you walk inside? Is it a money pit? Is it a house of horrors? What will that house include? Does it have a roof? Does it have a basement? What will be the definition of this house? What will be the design?

That is something we are going to start working on tomorrow. As early as tomorrow the reconciliation package will be before us. If we have some concern about what this house looks like, maybe it is for good reason, because we have already seen the Senate-passed and the House-passed reconciliation bills. We know what they look like. We know that they cut $270 billion out of Medicare for tax cuts totaling over $200 billion. We know that. We know they cut over $185 billion out of Medicaid. We know that. We know they have made deep cuts in education.

There is a room we ought to look at. Let us walk into the education room for a minute. There on one side of the room I see a lot of cuts directly affecting school programs. I see a loss of student loans to college students. I see a whole array of losses in the education room that I am not prepared to accept.

Then I walk into the working person's room, and I find dramatic cuts in the earned-income tax credit, almost a complete demolition of the EITC.

So the more I walk through this house, Mr. President, I have to tell you it is a house of horrors, and that is why we are very skeptical about whether or not signing on to this house from the curb makes a lot of sense to us regardless—regardless—of whether or not we agree on an amendment by a date certain.

I know a lot of people have asked to speak, and the distinguished Senator from Alaska sought recognition for purposes of yielding for a question. I will be happy to do that. Let me just again state my motive here.

Our motive is simply to say let us have that debate tomorrow. Let us have it on Friday when reconciliation comes. Let us get into next week if we have to, but let us at least agree that the thousands of people—the thousands of people—who are not getting the services that they expect from their Government, services they have paid for in their hard earned taxes, that at least that much we can agree on, that we are going to give those services back to the people who expect them. This amendment provides that. And I hope it will enjoy broad bipartisan support.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Democratic leader yield?

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Democratic leader yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Alaska since he sought recognition first.

Mr. STEVENS. I listened with interest to the leader on the other side of the aisle. There are two questions I have. There are two parts to the resolution that is before us: One deals with recognizing the economics through the CBO, and the other deals with the date, 7 years.

Could the leader tell me what has happened since the President of the United States stood before us in joint session, and said, "I'm going to rely on the CBO, and ask you to rely on the CBO. Let's get out of this business of having different numbers."

My memory is the Democratic side of the aisle cheered very wildly at that time. What has happened since that time, since the President asked us to rely on the CBO?

Second, my memory is that the President's group that was put together on Medicare said that Medicare would be bankrupt by 2002, that the 7 years came from the Medicare report. And it was the President himself in the first instance that said we should do it within 7 years.

What has happened to change the position of the people on the other side of the aisle from what the President asked us to do, rely on CBO, and what the President's people predicted, that unless we act that Medicare fund will itself be bankrupt by 2002? That is the reason for the 7 years. What has been the change, Mr. Leader?

Mr. DASCHLE. I will be happy to answer both questions of the distinguished Senator from Alaska. And they are good questions.

The first question: I think it is fair to say our confidence has been shaken a little bit when any Government agency happens to make, in a 2-year timeframe, a $100 billion mistake—$100 billion. We said, "We're going to listen to you, but I hope you're going to be right. And if you are not right, would it not make sense to go back and find whether or not there is a better way to calculate whether, as we make one of the most important decisions regarding our spending for the next 7 years, that we not use numbers that are more accurate?" If we are off $100 billion in 2 years, what is that calculated for 7? How much more off are we going to be in 7 years?

So that is the first question. He assumed they could calculate, that they could give us an accurate assumption of what we were going to be experiencing for 2 years. But to be off $100 billion, that sounds like another governmental agency that needs some work.

The answer to the second question is, yes, absolutely we have got to solve the Medicare bankruptcy problem, the problem involving the trust fund. But nothing we are talking about here does that. If we are going to solve the problem with regard to the trust fund, we have only got to deal with part A, and for that we need $89 billion. And, of course, the distinguished Senator from Alaska has read the same trustees' report that we have. The trustees say, "You're going to need $89 billion."

That begs the question, why in the Republican budget do we need $181 billion more than the $89 billion? Why the $270 billion? We know why the $270 billion, because $181 billion of that $270 billion is going for the tax cut, to pay for $200 billion-plus in handouts to those that do not need them. Those are the best answers I can give to the distinguished Senator from Alaska.

Mr. EXON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator from North Dakota was seeking to ask a question. I yield to him.

Mr. CONRAD. I would ask the Senator from South Dakota if he was aware that the Wall Street Journal this morning has endorsed the President's economic assumptions? Was the Senator from South Dakota aware that this morning the Wall Street Journal has said the estimates of both CBO and OMB are overly pessimistic, that both of them are wrong? Based on what? Based on what has actually happened the last 2 years.

I would just ask the ranking member of the Budget Committee, who has brought charts that show the actual results the last 2 years, that demonstrate CBO and OMB have both been wrong with respect to what has actually occurred with economic growth, have both been wrong with respect to deficit reduction.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, the ranking member of the Budget Committee, because it is directly relevant to the Senator from Alaska's question. Perhaps he can explain the chart.

Mr. EXON. The Senator from Alaska——

Mr. SPECTER. Parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. EXON. The Senator from—

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, who retains the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader retains the floor.

Mr. DASCHLE. I would yield for a question.

Mr. SPECTER. Parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader has the floor.

Mr. EXON. The Senator from Alaska's question was a very good one, and this chart answers it directly. I am confident that the Senator from Alaska did not know about this. He seems to think that the projections of both CBO and OMB are infallible. This chart indicates the opposite and indicates and answers the question of what has happened to projections.

You will note on this particular chart that President Clinton delivers on deficit reduction. When we passed——

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. EXON. Would you kindly direct the Senator from Pennsylvania to follow the rules?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader has the floor and may only yield for the purpose of a question.

Mr. DASCHLE. Which is what I did. I yielded to the Senator from Nebraska for a question. Part of the question involves an explanation of a chart for which I hope to give an answer as soon as the explanation is complete.

Mr. EXON. May I ask this question of the Democratic leader? Was the Democratic leader aware, as a response to the question asked by the Senator from Alaska, that the reason that we are questioning these projections are that this chart showed very clearly that after the President's deficit-reduction bill, which was projected by both CBO and OMB to be in the range of $275 billion, very close, actually the deficit reduced dramatically less than that, clear down to the $175 billion level? Was the Democratic leader aware of that?

Mr. DASCHLE. I was not aware of it. And I appreciate the Senator from Nebraska's explanation.

Mr. EXON. One more thought that maybe the Senator from Alaska or the Democratic leader indicated——

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska for another question.

Mr. EXON. Was the Democratic leader aware, on the projection idea, as to what economic growth has come about? Economic growth is what the article that has been referred to by many Senators this morning with regard to the Wall Street Journal—the economic growths that were predicted both by OMB and CBO, as a result of the President's actions, came at this level. Notice they are almost parallel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would remind the Senator from Nebraska that the Democratic leader has yielded for the purpose of a question.

Mr. EXON. I am asking a question. I am asking a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It did not appear to be.

Mr. EXON. I am asking if the majority leader knew that, in addition to the other chart, on this particular chart the numbers were far, far more than either CBO or OMB had estimated?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator from Nebraska makes the point in his question, and I think it goes to the very issue raised by the Senator from North Dakota. They have both been too conservative, not accurate; and as a result, they miss the mark by more than $100 billion.

Mr. SARBANES. Would the Senator yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I know the Senator from Mississippi has been seeking recognition for purposes of a question. I yield to him at this time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Democratic leader.

My question is this: The Democratic leader's amendment seeks to extend the time for the continuing resolution. My question is whether you support the continuing resolution with this change and would recommend that the President sign it.

Mr. DASCHLE. I would recommend—I am not sure I understand the question completely. But if the Senator is asking, would I recommend to the President to sign a clean resolution taking us through December 22, my answer is, of course, yes. I would hope he would sign it.

Mr. COCHRAN. My understanding is that the amendment the distinguished leader has offered has simply extended the date of the resolution, as offered, to well over into December rather than——

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. My question is, if this amendment is adopted, that we vote for it, would you recommend it to the President?

Mr. DASCHLE. Yes, he would. He would sign it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Without any change in the content of the resolution?

Mr. LEVIN. No.

Mr. DASCHLE. My amendment modifies their resolution to take out any other references, to take out balanced budgets, to any of the other intentions——

Mr. COCHRAN. I thought it was just changing the date.

Mr. DASCHLE. No. No. I apologize.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Senator is taking out all of the language in the resolution completely?

Mr. DASCHLE. As I said, I describe this as a clean resolution, a resolution that allows us to debate the question of a balanced budget on a time certain, beginning tomorrow during the reconciliation, when we should. This simply says, let us pass a resolution through December 22 at the level of funding we established in the previous continuing resolution.

Mr. COCHRAN. But not making any commitment to achieve a balanced budget?

Mr. DASCHLE. We can make a—absolutely. We would certainly make a commitment. The question is, does it have to be written in as a language specific to CBO as part of the CR, the continuing resolution?

Mr. COCHRAN. And if I could ask.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield again to the Senator.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does your amendment say there will be a balanced budget in 7 years, that that is the commitment that is being made by the Democrats to achieve a balanced budget in 7 years?

Mr. DASCHLE. I am sorry the distinguished Senator from Mississippi was not listening to my remarks, because I thought I made it very clear. I will be happy to clarify one more time.

We support a balanced budget by a date certain. Many of us could even support a 7-year balanced budget under the right set of circumstances, but we have to know what the house looks like from the inside, not just the outside. And while we are looking at the house, I think it is important that the services of Government continue to be provided.

That is what this does. It allows us to have a good debate about a balanced budget, with all of its ramifications, including Medicare and tax cuts, something you heard us talk about a lot, all of that beginning tomorrow, but it allows the Government to continue to run, as we expect it to run, through December 22.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand the leader's position, the examination of the rooms within this house—the education room, the Medicare room, Medicaid room, so forth—should take place in the course of considering the reconciliation.

Mr. DASCHLE. Exactly.

Mr. SARBANES. That is the package under which that examination takes place; is that correct?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator from Maryland is absolutely correct.

Mr. SARBANES. And that examination should take place in a circumstance in which a gun is not being held at the head of the people conducting the examination by virtue of closing down the Government and terminating all these services. This is a coercive measure which has no place——

Mr. SPECTER. I call the Senator on rule XIX.

Mr. SARBANES. In our consideration; is that not the leader's view?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. Let me ask the leader one other question on these estimate figures. Is the leader aware that the blue chip consensus, which is derived from a monthly survey of 50 private sector forecasters, disagrees with CBO and, in fact, agrees with OMB on the forecast? So the private sector forecasters, in effect, do not validate the CBO projections; they agree with the OMB projections. Is the leader aware of that?

Mr. DASCHLE. I was aware of that, and the Senator is right to point it out.

Mr. SARBANES. And furthermore, the CBO projections have been notably short in recent times——

Mr. SPECTER. I call the Senator under rule XIX.

Mr. SARBANES. In terms of hitting the mark with respect to the growth figures; is that not correct?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the leader yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I will be happy to yield for a question from the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. It had been represented a little earlier this morning that there are only two parts of the resolution before us that came over from the House. On one part, we are told that there is a commitment to a 7-year balanced budget, and the other part is that CBO figures would be used. Is it not true that those two parts are only part of title III, which represents less than one page of the CR that came over from the House, and that the other 14 pages contain other significant changes, including 40-percent reductions in low-income home energy assistance; 40-percent reductions during this CR period of 18 days of drug elimination grants; 40-percent reductions of housing for severely distressed folks; VA construction cuts of 40 percent; 40-percent cuts during this period of impact——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senator from Michigan that the leader has yielded only for the purpose of a question.

Mr. LEVIN. I am in the middle of a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not certain about that.

Mr. LEVIN. Is it not also true that this same document that came over from the House, in addition to the two parts of title III that have been referred to, contain 40-percent cuts in dozens of programs during this period of the continuing resolution?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator is accurate. That is the case. As the resolution has been presented, not only does it address the issue of whether or not we ought to be confined by numbers which have been demonstrated to be extraordinarily erroneous over the last 2 years, but we are also compelled to vote for dramatic, draconian, extreme cuts in current funding levels.

Mr. President, I do not want to abuse my floor privileges. I know others have sought recognition.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Can I ask the Senator a brief question?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield for a brief question from the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Which will require only a very brief answer. My question to the minority leader is as follows: Is the Senator aware that right now some of these programs, like the Low-Income Energy Assistance Program, which my colleague from Pennsylvania has been a very strong advocate for, the funding is not getting out to the cold weather States, and for those States this is an issue right now?

Is the Senator aware that on this continuing resolution, as my colleague from Michigan just stated, we are talking about only 60-percent funding of a very minimum amount nationwide?

And, finally, is the Senator aware—can I please put this in human terms—that as a matter of fact, if we keep this up here, there are people who could go cold and freeze to death? That could happen. Is the Senator aware of that? That is not melodramatic. Is the Senator aware that that could happen?

Mr. DASCHLE. My answer to the Senator from Minnesota is yes, I am aware of that, and that is the reason we are offering this amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Can we agree to vote on this amendment or on a motion to table this amendment, say, at 12:45?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I would be willing to enter into that agreement, as long as we have the understanding it is either a tabling motion or up or down; that it is not subject to second degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. And equally divide the time. I will say, we will not offer a second-degree amendment. That will give each side additional time to debate. I understand there is one additional amendment.

Mr. DASCHLE. As I understand it, the Senator from South Carolina has asked for the opportunity to offer an amendment, and he would be willing to commit to a relatively short timeframe. So I think it would be three amendments.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Let me indicate, I have been here since 9:30—we all have—and I am not complaining about it, but I do not want any agreement, I say to the distinguished leader, to forego the chance to offer an amendment sometime today and a fair chance to debate it as relative to the unified budget versus using Social Security funds.

We just voted on Monday not to use Social Security funds. Now today it appears by the resolution—and I want to be able to correct it with an amendment—we are going to use Social Security trust funds to balance the budget, and that is just a one-line amendment. I have it drawn, as the Parliamentarian has indicated, where I can present it again and again and again, second degreed or perfecting or otherwise. That is why I am stating this so the majority leader understands the intent of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DOLE. It was impressed on me, which is why I did not file cloture last night, that there would be two amendments offered today. More can be offered. If that is the case, I may get my cloture motion out. If we are going to shut the Government down by filibuster or offering amendments throughout the day, then do not blame this side of the aisle.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, let me respond to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. I understand the majority leader's concern. There is absolutely no interest in filibustering this bill. We would agree to time agreements on each of these amendments, as I have indicated. I will enter into those time agreements whenever it is appropriate. We already have a time agreement on the first amendment, and we will do so on the second and third as well.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the leader yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I will be glad to enter into a time agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time on the amendment?

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield just for a comment?

Mr. DASCHLE. You can take the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the minority leader yield time? The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. If I am recognized, I will be happy to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader can yield for a question.

Mr. DASCHLE. Because of the time agreement, I understand, I will yield such time as he may require to the Senator from North Dakota. As I indicated, it is not our desire to monopolize the floor. There have been people waiting on both sides. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota for a question.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand it, we do have an agreement there will be a vote on or in relation to the pending amendment at 12:45?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the agreement.

Mr. DOLE. And that time is equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the agreement.

Mr. SPECTER. Was that unanimous-consent agreement entered into?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, it was.

Mr. DOLE. I yield 10 minutes of that time to the Senator from Pennsylvania, Senator SPECTER, after the exchange between the minority leader and the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Republican leader. I was going to alert the leaders that I, too, have an amendment on which I would be happy to take a short-time agreement. But I think it is important that an additional amendment be offered. I would like the time to do that. I would be happy to take a short-time agreement to do so.

Mr. DASCHLE. Well, we will work that out.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the majority leader yield me 30 seconds to make a point?

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I want to put this in the RECORD. The Government private forecast, fourth quarter to fourth quarter, on GDP growth for 1995 was 2.5 percent. The CBO forecast was 1.3 percent, which fell way short of what the actual growth has been over that period of time.

Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have been on the floor for a considerable period of time and on my feet, and I had called Senators to order under rule XIX, where there had been a succession of questions, which I think, fairly stated, really went beyond a question. The rules of the Senate do not permit any Senator, even a leader, to yield to another Senator on the floor for anything other than a question. The proceedings went far beyond a question. I just wanted to make that explanatory statement as to why I was on my feet seeking recognition and seeking that the rules of the Senate be complied with, so that others might have an opportunity to seek recognition.

As I have listened to this debate, Mr. President, I am reminded of the statement by a very distinguished Senator from Maine, Senator Margaret Chase Smith, who made the distinction between the principle of compromise and the compromise of principle.

As I listen to this debate, we are not talking about first amendment issues. We are talking about dollars and cents and some sort of an accommodation. I heard the question raised by the Senator from Minnesota, Senator WELLSTONE, about low-income energy assistance and how it was not being provided to the poor people of America. And he made a reference to what this Senator had been trying to do. I think that characterizes the situation on the Senate floor, where we have a bill on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, the subcommittee which I chair, which has not been brought to the floor because there is a filibuster effort by the Democrats on a provision relating to striker replacement. I do not say that in the context of fixing blame on the Democrats, necessarily, because that provision is a substantive provision added on to an appropriation bill by Republicans and we really ought not to use the appropriations process for substantive provisions which are contested.

I think that is what has happened now when we have had the Government shut down for 2 days, and we have had many, many Americans inconvenienced. There has been a recitation of the people who have been inconvenienced—the Social Security beneficiaries cannot apply, and the veterans, and the situation with passports, and immigration issues, and visitors.

I received a call yesterday from my hometown of Philadelphia, where people cannot go to Independence Hall, and they are saying, "What is going on down there?"

Mr. President, I believe we are witnessing a real spectacle in the Congress for the last 2 days. What we have been seeing over the past several years has really been a demise of democracy. When I first ran for public office, not too long ago, 70 to 75 percent of the people of Philadelphia came out to vote in a mayoral election. Last week, we had an election in Philadelphia, and less than half of the people came out because of the disillusionment, disenchantment with what is happening in Washington, DC, inside this beltway, and really around America in the political process. What is happening here—and it is no surprise and it is understandable, in a sense—is this maneuvering for political advantage.

I suggest to my colleagues, both in the Congress and in the executive branch, that nobody is getting any political advantage now. This is not a win-win situation, this is a lose-lose situation for everybody. When Senators come to the floor and decry the issue of political advantage and go on and on about what the Speaker's wife did as a passenger on an airplane, that is hardly going to the issue of what we are trying to do to solve this crisis in Government and this crisis in confidence.

Mr. President, what is really involved here is a question of priorities. I think it is far beyond the issue of pique. I think people do not understand really how tired everybody is in Washington and how tired everybody is around the country about what is going on in Washington. But we have late-night sessions, and many of the people just went to Israel for the sad funeral of Prime Minister Rabin—16 hours over and 16 hours back. There is a certain sense of exhaustion which is working here. We certainly do not want the American people to think that the Government is being run out of a sense of pique or out of a sense of grudge. What we are boiling down to here, Mr. President, I think, is a crystallization of the issues which have to be decided at the next election.

The issue of a balanced budget is one where a lot of lip service is being given on both sides of the aisle. But I suggest that the record is reasonably clear—and it is hard to have a reasonably clear record on anything in Washington, DC—that it is pretty much a party issue, with every Republican, except one, voting for a balanced budget amendment. And on the Democrat side of the aisle, there was substantial disagreement with six Senators last year in favoring a balanced budget amendment, and now not favoring it.

The President of the United States—and not in a harsh rhetoric sense—opposes a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget. We may be clarifying an issue here about having the 7-year timeframe for a balanced budget amendment, as postulated on this continuing resolution. It is my hope that President Clinton will sign a continuing resolution that has two qualifications. One is a 7-year time limit, which, on occasion, he has endorsed, and a second on figures from the Congressional Budget Office, which, again, on occasion, he has endorsed.

Of course, you can raise arguments as to anything on any issue at any time, anyplace, especially around here. But those are not unreasonable conditions to move ahead with a continuing resolution, to get the Government back in operation. If the President decides not to sign that continuing resolution, then I think we have to come to terms, leave the issue for the 1996 election in fairly crystal form, and get this Government running again.

If we come back to basic principles, we all agree that the Congress passes legislation which has to be signed by the President, unless there are two-thirds of each body of the House and Senate that will override a Presidential veto. And if we have a gridlock, if the President is adamant, for whatever reason, and if the Congress is adamant, for whatever reason—and I think the American people see it as a lot of political posturing on both sides and are saying "a plague on both of your houses"—why cannot the Congress of the United States come to terms? This is not freedom of religion; this is not due process of law; these are dollars and cents which, customarily, have been split. If we cannot split them, let us crystallize the issue for the 1996 election. But let us not tie up the Government of the United States in the context where we all look so foolish.

Yesterday, I had my regular weekly radio news conference, and the only question asked was about the stalemate in Washington and the gridlock. I said, candidly, that it was an embarrassment. It was embarrassing to be a Senator when what is happening in Washington, DC, goes on without any resolution. So I hope, Mr. President, in the first instance, that President Clinton will accept this continuing resolution. It is not too onerous.

There is no commitment as to what is going to appear in all of the rooms discussed by my colleagues within the 7 years. I have been on the floor of this body objecting to the tax cuts at a time when we are seeking to balance the budget and to tighten our belts and we are asking people to take cuts in programs. I have the chairmanship of the appropriations subcommittee covering three big departments:

Education—where we have added $1.6 billion on a Republican bill which is being filibustered by the Democrats. Again, I do not question it, really, because a substantive measure was added on striker replacement.

Health and Human Services—both the House and the Senate have agreed to add substantial funds to the National Institutes of Health on their important research projects. That is being held up because of the bickering. Certainly the President would agree to sign that.

And we cover the Department of Labor. Our subcommittee came back in on a $70 billion discretionary budget and cut $8 billion with a scalpel instead of a meat ax in a way which satisfied the distinguished Senator from Iowa, Senator HARKIN, who has worked with me on that subcommittee.

So we really ought to come to terms here. If there is a limitation of 7 years, it does not say that is going to be done to any one of the departments. There is plenty of time to object at a later stage.

I hope the President will sign a continuing resolution with these two relatively modest limitations. If that does not happen, Mr. President, I hope we heed the words of Margaret Chase Smith and distinguish between what is the principle of compromise as opposed to the compromise of principle and recognize that our Constitution gives the President the veto power and a dominant role, or at least an equal partnership role, unless we have two-thirds to override—which we do not—so that we can end the charade, get the Government going, and crystallize that issue for the 1996 election.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I had talked to the distinguished ranking member on the other side of the aisle and asked for 10 minutes but he is not here so I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. President, my colleague from Pennsylvania talks about the resolution without smoke and without mirrors.

Let me point to the smoke and let me point to the mirrors. It says here on the last page about commitment to a 7-year balanced budget: "The President and the Congress shall enact legislation to achieve a unified balanced budget."

Now you have the smoke. Now you have the mirrors. This is exactly what the U.S. Senate on Monday—today is only Thursday—exactly what the U.S. Senate on Monday voted 97-2 against, this smoke, this mirror.

Let me quote, since the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania is here, our late colleague, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, Senator John Heinz.

> Since 1983, when we may have saved the Social Security goose, we have systematically proceeded to melt down and pawn the golden egg. It doesn't take a financial wizard to tell us that spending these reserves on today's bills does not bode well for tomorrow's retirees.

I quote another statement from Senator John Heinz:

> The truth is that Congress, by counting the old-age, survivors and disability income trust funds as part of general revenues, radically distorts the actual financial health of this Nation by pretending that the money paid in by workers to Social Security will never be paid out.

Stating further:

> Mr. President, in all the great jambalaya of frauds surrounding the budget, surely the most reprehensible is the systematic and total ransacking of the Social Security trust fund in order to mask the true size of the deficit.

Now, that is exactly, Mr. President, why I have an amendment at the desk which I will call later in its due time. We have the amendment on the date of December 22, which I favor, but I thank the distinguished leadership for yielding me this time because here on Monday, here on Monday, the distinguished leader stated, when we read in here that "on the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995, the U.S. Congress agrees to honor section 13301 of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 so as not to include in the conference any language that violates that section."

Now, what does that section that Senator Heinz had enacted back and signed into law on November 5, 1990, say? I ask unanimous consent that section 13301 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Subtitle C—Social Security

SEC. 13301. OFF-BUDGET STATUS OF OASDI TRUST FUNDS.

(a) EXCLUSION OF SOCIAL SECURITY FROM ALL BUDGETS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the receipts and disbursements of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund shall not be counted as new budget authority, outlays, receipts, or deficit or surplus for purposes of—

(1) the budget of the United States Government as submitted by the President,

(2) the congressional budget, or

(3) the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(b) EXCLUSION OF SOCIAL SECURITY FROM CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET.—Section 301(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end the following: "The concurrent resolution shall not include the outlays and revenue totals of the old age, survivors, and disability insurance program established under title II of the Social Security Act or the related provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 in the surplus or deficit totals required by this subsection or in any other surplus or deficit totals required by this title.".

Mr. HOLLINGS. In order to vote for the resolution you have to vote to violate the law. They know it. That is the smoke and that is the mirror.

On Monday, they agreed—in fact, the Senator from New Mexico, the chairman of the Budget Committee talking now about "unified" stated at the time we passed the Heinz-Hollings-Moynihan amendment, "I support taking Social Security out of the budget deficit calculation * * *." Again, on Monday, he voted that way.

It reminds me, Mr. President, of a contest that we had for an insurance company and they wanted a slogan for the new insurance company. The winning slogan we finally got was, "The Capital Life will surely pay if the small print on the back don't take it away."

Now, Mr. President, that is the gamesmanship you see here. That is $636 billion. This is a problem not of technicalities. It is real. For we, at the present moment, owe Social Security $481 billion. Pass this GOP budget and you will use again another $636 billion.

So, come the year 2002 we will say, "Oops, what a smart boy am I. I have made solvent Medicare but, oh, heavens above, I have forced Social Security into bankruptcy. I owe $1 trillion and there is nobody around ready to raise $1 trillion worth of taxes to make the IOU sound."

Let me look at the morning paper here and see exactly what it says. It says:

> Treasury Secretary Robert E. Rubin announced plans yesterday to pull $61.3 billion from two Federal retirement accounts, an unprecedented fiscal move he said was necessary to save the U.S. Government from the first default in its history.
> He authorized withdrawal of the entire $21.5 billion held in a Federal savings plan known as the G-fund, and as much as $39.8 billion of the $350 billion in the Civil Service retirement fund. In effect, both funds would be given a temporary IOU that would obligate Treasury to make complete repayment with interest after a permanent increase in the debt limit is finally approved.

Now, Mr. President, that is my point. We should reduce deficits. We should eliminate deficits. We should not move deficits. You move them from the general fund over to the Social Security trust fund. Or as the Secretary of the Treasury did yesterday, you move it from the general fund over into the Civil Service retirement fund. That moving around is absolute trickery and is putting us in such a position that we are no longer allowed the luxury of children and grandchildren arguments.

We will get it through the neck here in about 2 years.

We owe, this minute, trust funds $1.255 trillion—right this minute. If we continue to spend now under this so-called continuing resolution, a unified budget, then we really are going to be up a creek.

Let me tell you who loves this—Wall Street. The financial market. I talked to one of them just earlier this week. They love a unified budget.

Why? Theirs is to make money. And so if you can borrow around from the other Government funds there is less of a burden of borrowing on the New York stock exchange. When we come in for borrowing funds, with the sharp elbows of Government, we shove away other capital investment. They love that. But we have the responsibility of running the Government, not of making money.

This thing was, perhaps, a good idea at one time. But now we have come with the contract and the revolution that says we are not going to have business as usual. We are going to have change.

Do not tell me what Presidents have done, what this President will do. Tell us what we will do to not have business as usual. Namely, adhere to the law—adhere to the principle and policy of not using the trust funds.

That is why there is a lack of trust in Government, if the youngsters coming along see that you are frittering away their retirement funds. I lose trust myself. So there is no mystery to this thing. Let us have an honest budget, without smoke and without mirrors. Let us get right down to the idea, here, that we are not using the Social Security trust fund. It is against the law to do it.

On October 18, if you refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee stood on the Senate floor and he said here: I have the certificate, certified of this GOP budget, and we have a $10 billion surplus.

When we reminded her of the law—would you think you would have to remind a Congressional Budget Office Director of the law? Once reminded of the law, June O'Neill, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, came and said, "Oops, I am sorry. You have a $105 billion deficit." So they went from a $10 billion surplus, in 48 hours, to a $105 billion deficit.

And they talk about CBO figures. That is what destroys the trust in CBO. Because they have gamesmanship there. But let us not have gamesmanship here.

We all voted on Monday to stop the gamesmanship with the Social Security trust funds. Let us again vote for this amendment when it comes up that says: Notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, the 7-year balanced budget passed by the Congress to the President shall not include Social Security trust funds to reduce or apply to the deficit—to effect or obtain a balance.

Mr. President, I retain the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EXON. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield for just 30 seconds while the majority leader is on the floor so we can maybe move to some kind of tentative agreement?

Mr. FAIRCLOTH. Yes, I will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Charge it to my time.

I advise the Senate that as far as I am able to ascertain at this time on this side of the aisle, we have the amendment pending, offered by the minority leader. There will be a second amendment by the minority leader, and there will be an amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

I would simply say at this time, in order to give us some idea of where we are going, we want to move in an expeditious fashion. How much time, when we get to the amendment that will be offered by the Senator from South Carolina, how much time does he think he would need to further explain his amendment, in addition to the time he has just used?

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator indicates an hour, a half-hour to a side, just on this amendment.

Mr. EXON. I ask the majority leader, are there any amendments or second-degree amendments that he is aware of on his side of the aisle?

Mr. DOLE. I am not aware of any at this point.

Mr. EXON. I am simply saying, it seems to me—the majority leader requested a while ago, and the minority leader indicated, too, we want to move expeditiously. It would appear to me that right now we are in a position when we dispose of this at 12:45, we probably—maybe at that time we may be in a position to frame some time agreements, short time agreements, and finish and have final passage on this sometime early in the afternoon.

Mr. DOLE. I hope that is the case, because we would like to move to the Defense appropriations conference report. Then, tomorrow, of course, we will have the Balanced Budget Act of 1995.

I do not know what happens after the CR goes to the White House, if it is vetoed, where we are as far as the Government is concerned. But I will be happy to work with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I am working with the minority leader. I think we are making some real progress.

I thank my friend from North Carolina for yielding.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that time not come out of the time of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is charged to the minority.

Mr. FAIRCLOTH. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the continuing resolution for the very simple reason that all this resolution says is that the Federal Government can reopen if the President agrees to balance the budget in 7 years. It is that simple.

I want to read the precise language. It might have been read before this morning, but it bears repeating.

> The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002 as scored by the non partisan Congressional Budget Office.

This is all the Congress is asking for. We need a commitment from the President to this timetable.

I have to wonder when the President will begin worrying about the taxpayers of this country and the children yet unborn. We are $5 trillion in debt—$5 trillion. Twenty years ago our total debt was $595 billion, and in 20 years we spent $4.5 trillion that we do not have.

It took us 200 years from the founding of this country until 1982 to build a $1 trillion debt. We have spent almost five times that much in the last 12 years.

In the President's 1996 budget, 16 cents of every dollar will be spent to pay interest on the debt. What that equates to is 41 percent of all individual income taxes sent to the Government will be used to pay interest—41 percent. Can we really keep taxing America's hard-earned money to pay interest and run a viable economy? No, we cannot. This has to stop. If we do not do it now, it will never be done. Now is the opportune time.

When he ran for President, President Clinton said he wanted to balance the budget in 5 years. This does it in 7 years. But he made the promise 3 years ago. This is 10 years from the original promise, and he still refuses to sign—says he is going to refuse to sign a 7-year commitment to balance it.

When he ran for President, he said he wanted to cut taxes for the middle class. This budget does that.

When he ran for President, he said he wanted welfare reform and Republicans in Congress are going to give him that. It should be clear the Republicans in Congress are keeping their commitment to the American people. Bill Clinton is not. But this should come as a surprise to no one.

When he ran for Governor of Arkansas in 1990, he said he would not run for President. If only he had kept that promise. If the President was so concerned about having the Government closed, why has he chosen not to negotiate? For 26 hours last week he was on the same plane with Speaker GINGRICH and Majority Leader DOLE: No negotiation.

Finally, in a typical Washington political move, he offered to meet at 10 p.m., 2 hours before the Government shutdown. Not only a typical Washington, but a more typical Clinton maneuver.

I said 2 days ago this President is playing politics at its worst. Instead of doing something good for his country and the future of this country, he is concerned with the poll numbers. His political adviser, Dick Morris, calls it triangulation. This means Clinton is supposed to appear moderate. Really, it is not triangulation; it is strangulation of the Federal Government by no leadership, no principles, and no negotiation. The President is not serious. He is not accepting responsibility. This Congress is.

We have to stop spending money we do not have. We have been doing it for far too long now.

Mr. President, I strongly urge the President of the United States to come to the table and work with the leadership of this Congress. He needs to negotiate in good faith. He needs to negotiate for the good of this country and its future.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I thank the ranking member.

Republicans say they want to balance the budget in 7 years using CBO numbers. The fact is the Republican plan does not balance the budget, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

Mr. President, this is a letter that I received on October 20, 1995, from the head of the Congressional Budget Office pointing out that, if we obey the law—that is, we do not count Social Security trust funds in the calculation—the Republican plan has a $105 billion deficit in 2002. Why is that? It is because the only way the Republican plan achieves balance is to take every penny of Social Security trust fund money over the next 7 years.

The law—this is a copy of the law—specifically precludes that. Ninety-eight Senators voted for this law.

This chart shows the looting of the Social Security trust funds that is going to occur, if we adopt what the Republicans call a balanced budget by 2002. We are going to be taking $636 billion of the Social Security trust fund surplus in order to call it a balanced budget.

Mr. President, that is not a balanced budget by law. It is not a balanced budget by any serious economic standard.

Some say, "Where is your alternative? Why don't the Democrats have an alternative?" Very simply, Mr. President, we do. During the budget resolution, I offered what I called the fair share balanced budget plan. Thirty-nine Senate Democrats voted for it. It achieved more deficit reduction by 2002 than the GOP plan. In fact, it achieved $100 billion more of deficit reduction in that period than the GOP plan, and it achieved true balance in 9 years without counting the Social Security surpluses.

At the same time, it had different priorities. It did not slash Medicare, Medicaid, or education. In fact, we restored more than $100 billion of the $270 billion Republican cut to Medicare. We restored full funding for student loans, and provided additional discretionary funding for education at all levels. We had nutrition and agriculture restored by $24 billion, and veterans restored $5 billion so that we could have a better set of priorities.

But we did have savings out of the spending entitlements. We had $156 billion of savings out of Medicare instead of the Republican plan of $270 billion. We also had savings out of Medicaid.

So we had savings out of the spending entitlements. But we also recognized that the biggest entitlement of all is the tax entitlements. The tax entitlements, as this chart shows, amount to $4 trillion over the next 7 years. It is interesting to compare the tax entitlements—$4 trillion over the next 7 years. The Republicans never want to talk about the tax entitlements. They want to talk about the spending entitlements of Social Security. That is about $3 trillion over the next 7 years. Medicare, that is about $2 trillion over the next 7 years; Medicaid, $1 trillion. But the granddaddy of them all are the tax entitlements, $4 trillion.

In the Democratic plan we said, yes. Slow the growth of the spending entitlements, absolutely—Medicaid and Medicare. But also slow the growth of the tax entitlements to inflation plus 1 percent. That is fair. That asks everybody in our society to contribute to deficit reduction. We don't just put middle class and working families into the front lines in the battle to balance the budget—we also ask the wealthiest among us to contribute to deficit reduction. That means no tax cut until we balance the budget.

Mr. President, we are going to be adding under the Republican plan $1.8 trillion to the national debt over the next 7 years. Why would we be increasing that debt by borrowing money to give a tax reduction that disproportionately goes to wealthiest among us?

Mr. President, we not only have the fair share plan that a group of Democrats offered. We also have the common sense budget plan. On the question again of no tax cut, there is no tax cut because it makes no sense to be adding to the debt, to be digging the hole deeper before we start filling it in.

On the question of the Congressional Budget Office versus OMB, I think it is critically important to understand that the Wall Street Journal this morning made reference to that in their editorial. They said, "The Congressional Budget Office predicts over the next 7 years 2.3 percent economic growth. OMB projects 2.5 percent." Listen to what the Wall Street Journal says. "In our view, both growth assumptions are overly pessimistic. Corporate profits look cheerful. There is no reason this economy should not grow at three percent in good years as it has through much of the past. Government policies, whether monetary or fiscal, should not be designed to foreclose this result."

Why did the Wall Street Journal come to this conclusion? Because they have looked at what actually happened over the last 2 years. And look at what has happened. This shows economic growth. The President's plan projects on the blue line what economic growth would look like. The Congressional Budget Office is the red line. The orange line shows what has actually happened. And what has really happened in the real world is both the Congressional Budget Office and OMB have been too conservative. They have been wrong.

What are the results? Look at the deficit reduction. The President's plan shows the blue line. That is what he was predicting. The red line shows what the Congressional Budget Office was predicting. The yellow line shows what has actually happened. Again, both the Congressional Budget Office and OMB have been wrong.

Let us break the gridlock. Let us agree to a plan to balance the budget, but let us base it on the best estimates of private forecasters. Let us use the blue chip forecasters, and break the gridlock.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I join my colleagues from both sides of the aisle in condemning the situation that has brought us to the point where the Federal Government has shut down.

The American public should understand one thing about the shutdown: this budget crisis is completely avoidable. It was manufactured by the House Speaker as a tactic to impose his extreme budget priorities on America.

The Speaker's own words illustrate this point. Last April 3, he told reporters that he intended to "create a titanic legislative standoff with President Clinton by adding vetoed bills to must-pass legislation." With the Speaker at the helm, Republicans have put the Federal budget on a collision course with the iceberg.

Congressional Republicans are in the majority in the House and Senate, which gives them the power and votes to keep the Government operating.

Instead, they have shut down the Government and are gambling with our economy and credit rating, in a political game to force a heartless budget on the American people.

Today we have an opportunity to end the budget impasse. Our Democratic leader, Senator DASCHLE, proposed a temporary funding resolution in an effort to get the Federal Government back to work. This would have extended spending authority through December 22.

Unfortunately for the American public, the funding resolution that the Democrats proposed was rejected, and the Government shutdown orchestrated by the Speaker continues.

Senator DASCHLE's amendment provided the best opportunity to end the Government shutdown. This is an amendment that the President can sign. We should pass the Daschle amendment, put an end to this crisis, and begin the important work of negotiating a budget agreement.

How many thousands of veterans will be unable to submit new benefit claims because VA offices remain closed?

How many Americans will be turned away from Social Security offices around the country because no Government workers are available to process their applications? How many millions of visitors must be turned away from our national parks, museums, and monuments before Republicans in Congress will vote to end this stalemate and approve a clean funding resolution?

How many corporations will be unable to conduct business overseas because their executives cannot get their passports renewed?

The Republicans, led by the Speaker, have forced a political showdown at the expense of our needy, elderly, and veterans of our country. What's good about telling senior citizens who want to apply for Social Security or veterans trying to get their benefits processed that they'll have to wait until the Government reopens?

I think it is important that we review the record of the Republican Congress on spending bills.

None of the 13 appropriation bills were passed by the September deadline. All 13 of these bills should have been passed by September 30. Because of this failure, a temporary spending bill is necessary to keep the Government running.

Republicans are trying to use this manufactured funding crisis, which they could easily have avoided, to force an increase in seniors' Medicare premiums and to provide tax breaks for wealthy Americans.

We should say no to political blackmail and yes to a clean CR.

And most importantly, let us get our people back to work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. COCHRAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the majority leader has asked me to control the time on this side of the aisle.

I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, Senator GREGG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Mississippi for this time, and I want to respond just briefly to the comments that were just made and make a couple of additional points.

This debate is about whether or not the President wishes to participate in balancing the budget—nothing else. Everything has been taken off of this continuing resolution that the President originally objected to. The only thing that is on this continuing resolution that does not involve day-to-day operation of the Government—remember, this resolution only runs for 19 days—the only thing that is on this resolution is a statement that the President will join with the 104th Congress in a commitment to balancing the budget by the year 2002 using the Congressional Budget Office numbers. It does not say he has to agree to our approach to balancing the budget. If he wants to use the two proposals outlined by the Senator from North Dakota, he can do that.

He can use either of those proposals if he wants to use them. And some of the ideas put forward by the Senator from North Dakota may be ideas upon which we could reach an agreement.

The point is that he has to agree initially. He has to make this initial minor step, small, incremental progress of saying, hey, I wish to balance the budget, too.

That is all we are saying to the President. Just come forward and say I wish to balance the budget, too, in 7 years. Is that an outrageous request? I should not think so since he has already on a number of occasions said he wanted to balance it in 5 years, 6 years, 7 years, 8 years, 9 years. He has been at this position once or twice before during his term of office. We are just asking him that he sort of settle out, settle out, on the idea of 7 years. I think it is a reasonable request.

I do not think most Americans feel 7 years is an unreasonable period of time to get this financial house in order. I think most Americans look at 7 years as maybe an excessive amount of time for us to get our financial house in order. They wonder why we cannot do it a little sooner, but we do not appear to be able to. So we said 7 years.

On the issue of whether or not we use CBO numbers, of course, the opposition to that really is a red herring because the President came to this Congress and he, in rather definitive terms, said he was willing to use CBO numbers in his first statement to this body. And so the opposition to that language is, I think, a bit of a sidetracking exercise because he has already agreed to that.

If the President wants—and the Senator from North Dakota mentioned the tax issues in our budget—he can come up here with a balanced budget which raises taxes. He can do it all with tax increases, and he will be consistent with the language we have asked him to sign on to. We have not said he had to do it by reducing the rate of growth of Government as we have proposed. We suggested that the rate of growth of Government not be cut. We have not done anything that draconian. We have just suggested it grow at 3.3 percent annually, which is more than the rate of growth of the economy.

We have suggested that Medicare be allowed to grow at 6.5 percent; that Medicaid be allowed to grow at 4 percent; that senior citizens be given more choices for their health care options; that the States be given control over welfare, that people who are on welfare be allowed to only stay on it for 5 years during their lifetime, not be on there for an entire experience of their working lifetime; that they be asked to go to work after a couple of years.

These were our suggestions for how you get to a balanced budget. But we are not saying we have all the answers. If the President wants to come up here with a new tax package as he did a year, 2 years ago, when he proposed the largest tax package in history, as a way to get this budget under control, if he wants to duplicate that event, so be it. That is his option. Under this language, it would be consistent with the proposal that we are asking for. All we are saying to the President is, sign on to a balanced budget. Agree that the budget must be balanced.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield for a question on that point?

Mr. GREGG. Yes, I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COVERDELL). The Senator yields.

Mr. CONRAD. I would just ask my colleague from New Hampshire, who I have respect for on this issue, I think the Senator has made serious attempts to make serious proposals to reduce the deficit, and I would ask him, if the President agreed to a 7-year timeframe for balancing the budget but said to us, "I would want to use the blue-chip private forecasters rather than CBO, because it turns out that they have been more accurate over the last 2 years than has CBO or OMB," would the Senator from New Hampshire say that is an unacceptable position?

Mr. GREGG. Well, what the Senator from New Hampshire——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GREGG. The Senator may not be able to say what his position is.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I yield the distinguished Senator an additional minute to respond to the question of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. I would say that the President was off on a tangent, and a tangent which is really not necessary to be on because the President already came up here once and said CBO is OK. In fact, he not only said it was OK, he demanded that we follow CBO.

I believe that his initial decision in that area was correct. I just want to hold him to what his initial commitment was, that CBO should be the scorer. I see no reason why we should not use CBO. They are going to be right sometimes, wrong sometimes. Blue chips are going to be right sometimes, wrong sometimes. But at least we are using one acceptable group. The CBO being the group both the President and ourselves have used over the years, it seems reasonable we accept them. Then that standard is one we should all be comfortable with. But the core issue, of course, is he has to agree to balancing the budget in 7 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, my office, like most of the offices in this complex, has been besieged with calls from constituents wanting to know why we cannot pass the necessary legislation to keep the Government operating. These calls are not simply coming from people who work for the Federal Government. Most are from people who do not work for the Federal Government. They are not just from people who rely on Government services and programs.

It is interesting that most of the people who call do not identify themselves as Democrats or Republicans. They are just average Americans whose greatest expectation of Government is that it operate to serve the interests of the people, to operate in the interest of serving the taxpayer. They are the kinds of people who pay their taxes. They play by the rules and vote for the person, not for the party. They want to know why this standoff is occurring.

The answer is very simple. The Congress, which is controlled in the House and in the Senate by the Republican Party, has not allowed appropriations bills to go through this body. There are 13 appropriations bills, and they simply have not passed. Everyone knows that the morning news said the transportation appropriations bill was signed and 29,000 Federal workers reported for work today.

The reason Federal workers are not working today is because the appropriations bills have not been completed. I have been here going on 14 years. There has never been anything like this.

When was the House supposed to pass their bills? By June 10. They simply did not do it. They did not pass their bills on time, and, of course, if they do not pass their bills on time, there is no way the Senate can pass its bills on time. The House missed the deadline on every appropriations bill.

We hear all this talk about personal responsibility. Well, what about responsibility of the majority party that rules the House and Senate? Do they not have a responsibility to get us these bills so the Government does not shut down?

The deadlines missed by the House have caused the Senate Appropriations Committee to push back the dates on which they could and should have considered these measures.

While the Senate is not bound by a similar deadline, it is required to complete action on these bills by the end of September. The Senate has had more success than the House in meeting the deadlines, but it still was doing the things at the 11th hour, and after we pass them, of course, there has to be a conference.

It has been a total lack of responsibility by the majority, that is, the Republican Party controlling both bodies.

As of today, only four of these bills, maybe five, have been signed. I do not know what the latest report is. And why were these annual appropriations bills not passed on time? Let me tell you why they were not passed on time. It is because they were stuffed with some of the most controversial, radical proposals in the history of this body, in the history of the other body.

Why do I say that? Rather than going through the ordinary legislative process, they wanted things like any charitable organization, a charity would not be able to lobby Congress even if they paid for it with private funds. That held up two appropriations bills.

How is that for democracy? You cannot even come back here and talk to your Representative even if you pay for it yourself. EPA, the Environmental Protection Agency, 17 different regulations they wanted passed. They put them in appropriations bills. They could not pass these laws changing environmental laws, food safety laws, safe drinking water laws, and clean air laws through the normal course of business. Instead, they engaged in a high stakes gamble.

In one of these bills, they completely rewrote the Housing Act in an appropriations bill. The crime bill, the Commerce-State-Justice bill—they rewrote the crime bill. And abortions held up three bills. Now, Mr. President, I am not an advocate of abortion, but this is not the way to do appropriations bills. Grazing, timber, drilling for oil, all issues that they could not get done in an ordinary legislative process, they stuck on appropriations bills. They would force the President to sign legislation that the majority of Americans oppose for the sake of keeping the Government operating.

This was apparent as far back as April. If you do not believe me, here is what the Speaker of the House of Representatives said in April. He vowed to "create a titanic legislative standoff with President Clinton by adding vetoed bills to must pass legislation increasing the national debt ceiling." This is reported in the Washington Times newspaper, April 3.

He also said, the President "will veto a number of things, and we'll then put them all on debt ceiling. And then he'll decide how big a crisis he wants."

This has been a planned crisis. It is a war, Mr. President, but it is a war that is not being won by the Republicans. Kevin Phillips, a Republican political analyst, said yesterday on public radio:

> If the United States budget deficit problem does represent the fiscal equivalent of war—and maybe it does—then what we are really looking at is one of the most flagrant examples of war profiteering this century has ever seen.

That is what Kevin Phillips said. He said that the only people benefiting are the people with money with this debt crisis. And that is too bad.

We continued to learn today why the Speaker is allowing this standoff to continue. It is not even any longer for scoring political points. It is about ruffled feathers and perceived slights. Remember, he did not get to sit in the front of the airplane when they went to Israel to the funeral of Prime Minister Rabin. He indicated, it is part of why they ended up sending down a tougher interim spending bill. And he is quoted as saying, "it's petty * * * but I think it's human." He has made the CR tougher because he did not get to ride where he wanted to in the airplane going to Israel. Mr. President, I respectfully submit this is just plain petty.

I return to my point that all this could have been avoided if we had done our job and the majority allowed us to vote on appropriations bills. We failed to do that. Now we are at a crisis point. If all this was part of some master plan, it is truly sad, it is truly sad. And even if it was due to simply a lack of diligence or negligence, it is also not excusable. Thousands and thousands of Federal workers are now sitting idle at home because the Speaker feels he was slighted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Nevada that his time has expired.

Mr. REID. I ask that I be yielded 1 additional minute.

Mr. EXON. I yield 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. This not only affects Federal workers, Mr. President, it affects other people, because they, the Federal workers, buy groceries and clothes and cars, and they use the services of small businesspeople. It also, in the short term and especially the long term, is going to hurt the American business community.

This Senator suggests that the Speaker begin to consider the feelings of thousands of public servants and the people that depend on those public servants' paychecks. I think it is important that he consider their feelings, Federal workers who simply want to be able to come to work and get a paycheck on a regular basis and take care of their families. That is what this is all about. It is too bad they are not being recognized because they are really important to the American people.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, how much time is remaining on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Nebraska has 2 minutes remaining on his side. The Senator from Mississippi has 9½ minutes.

Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. I reserve the remainder of our time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I understood that I yielded 6 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire and that that would leave us 10 minutes of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You have about 9½ minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield 4½ minutes to the distinguished Senator from Utah, [Mr. BENNETT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I listened to the debate here this morning with some interest. I do not have a prepared statement, but I have a few observations I want to make.

First, with respect to this forecasting issue and what should be and should not be in it, I would like to point out one fact that many have ignored with respect to forecasting. This is not a forecast; this is a historical report. Martin Feldstein, writing in the Wall Street Journal, has pointed out the difference between the forecast made 2 years ago for the President's tax increase and the amount of tax actually received is this: The Federal Government has received one-third as much tax revenue as was forecast. Nobody is talking about that. They say the President raised the taxes because he had so much courage and that solved the deficit problem. In fact, the forecasters were off by two-thirds. We got one-third as much money as was forecast.

Now we are being told, "Yeah, the blue chip forecasters are now saying that we will get more money than CBO or OMB say we will get. So why don't we take that forecast?" I will be happy to take that forecast, Mr. President. I will do it in a heartbeat on this condition—that we use the same blue chip forecasters to score the legislation that we pass.

But we are stuck with the CBO whether we like it or not. The CBO scores the Senator from New Mexico on every budget action that he takes. Why do we have one set of numbers for our legislative action and then say we will have another set of numbers for the balanced budget circumstance?

Let us put it out very clearly, Mr. President. If the CBO is wrong and too low, that means that the bill that we pass will bring us to a balanced budget faster than 7 years. That means if the CBO is wrong, we will make the terrible mistake of balancing the budget in 5. But, if the CBO is right and OMB is wrong and we pass the President's program, that means we will balance the budget never.

I have learned since I have come to Washington the true definition of the phrase "the outyears." I never knew what the outyears meant. In Washington, the outyears mean those years that are far out there. Well, in fact, in this debate, Mr. President, the outyears mean never. We have to recognize that if we are going to balance the budget, we have to start now and not depend on a rosy scenario for the outyears, no matter who makes it, whether it is CBO or OMB or the blue chip forecasters or whoever. If we wait for the outyears to make the decision, we will never ever get there. So we must take the first step. We must take it this year. And we must not flinch.

One other thing, Mr. President. The President pounded the pulpit the other day and said some 16 times he believes in a balanced budget. Well, Mr. President, we are going to find out, because some of the political handlers at the White House did not bother to inform the President that the election is next year, not this year. And between now and then he is required by law to send us a budget. And we will see when he sends us his budget in 1997 just how serious he is. And we will see how effective it is because the budget he sent us in 1996—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BENNETT. Ten more seconds.

The budget he sent us in 1996 received the resounding vote of 99–0 against it. We will see what he does next year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I have 2 minutes left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute 44 seconds.

Mr. EXON. Let me first respond to the remarks just made. Why it is necessary that we use realistic assumptions? That is because we are overpenalizing Medicare, we are overpenalizing students, we are overpenalizing people who receive Medicaid. If we are realistic in our assumptions, we do not have to hurt people as much. Also being overlooked by those who talk the argument we have to stay with CBO is the obvious fact that they talk about paying for this in later years. If you look at the Republican budget, you see that they delay all of the hard choices to the fifth, sixth and seventh years.

Mr. President, the amendment before us is simple and direct. It will put the Government back to work. It would allow time for negotiations on the larger budget bill which is going to definitely be tough going, but we need to reduce the deficit. That is the responsible thing for us to do: Adopt the Daschle amendment.

The underlying bill will be vetoed. The underlying bill tries to stack the deck against the President in negotiations to come. The underlying bill is an attempt to force the President to accept the extreme cuts in Medicare and Medicaid and education in the Republican budget bill. It is blackmail, very pure and very simple. The President will use his veto, and properly so, to prevent that from happening.

The President would sign this bill as amended by the pending amendment. So the choice is clear. If Senators want to pass a bill that the President can sign to keep the Government running, then Senators should vote for this amendment. A vote against this amendment is simply a vote to continue the shutdown.

If we are to act responsibly, we must adopt the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator his time has expired.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will move to table the pending amendment at the conclusion of my remarks. Somebody sent me—in fact someone from Georgia sent me a fax. I have already written a note to thank him. He included in the comments a quote from Mark Twain. I thought—at least I have not heard it before—maybe some of my colleagues have. Let me quote it:

> In the beginning of a change, the patriot is a scarce man, brave and hated and scorned. When his cause succeeds, however, the timid join him, for then it costs nothing to be a patriot.

I must say, as I get into this debate again about a balanced budget, I think that quotation applies today. This is about change, it is about fundamental change. I am not an advocate of shutting down the Government. I have never been an advocate for shutting down the Government.

But this is an unusual circumstance. We have a President in the White House who said he would balance the budget in 5 years, in 7 years, in 8 years, in 9 years, in 10 years. So we picked 7. Nothing in our balanced budget statement, if you read the language carefully, which is on the last page—in fact, I watched the debate last night on the House side, and I heard Congressman HOYER—I have great respect for him—from Maryland say:

> There is nothing wrong with the first 14 pages of this amendment; it is the last page.

Everything else was OK, all except title III, which is very brief, and let me read it, because we have talked about it, but I am not certain it has been read. All it says is:

> The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002 as scored by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office.
> (b) The unified balance budget in subsection (a) shall be based on the most current economic and technical assumptions of the Congressional Budget Office.

I believe later today the Senator from New Mexico will quote colleagues on the other side who say we ought to use CBO to balance the budget, including the distinguished manager on the other side and the distinguished minority leader. That is all we have said.

Mr. President, there is nothing in here about Medicare, nothing about Social Security, nothing about Medicaid. It is about balancing the budget in 7 years, which 83 percent of the American people support. There is nothing in this that should prevent the President from signing this bill. It says:

> The President and Congress shall enact legislation. * * *

That means we are going to have a lot of discussion, a lot of negotiation or we cannot enact it, he can veto it.

So I hope when final passage comes, we will have some bipartisan support. I watched last night on C-SPAN the House action. I watched as 48 Democrats voted with Republicans, a tremendous victory, a bipartisan victory. And I listened to one Democrat from Virginia, Congressman MORAN, who said it is time we stop this foolishness, the American people want to balance the budget, the Federal employees want to go back to work.

That is all we are asking. It is nothing unreasonable. There is no Medicare. Oh, they beat us up on Medicare, but I must say, I never thought I would be around to read an editorial like this in the Washington Post called "The Real Default." In the Washington Post, believe me of all papers—well, the New York Times might startle me more—but the Washington Post, known by some of us as sort of The Daily Democrat Journal, talking about the real default, demagoguery, lack of leadership on the Democratic side, in effect setting back the cause of balancing the budget for years by trying to make Medicare a scare word with senior citizens.

Somewhere we have lost sight of what we are here to do. Somewhere we have lost sight of what the American people expect of us, and somewhere we have lost sight of what is going to happen next week, next month, next year, and the next century.

We have stepped up to make some tough decisions, and it is not easy. We are doing the heavy lifting, as my colleague from New Mexico said a few days ago. When you are not lifting anything, it is easy.

I just suggest to my colleagues, I am one who would like to resolve this issue. I met with the President the other night. I thought he was one who wanted to resolve the issue. He told us in his first State of the Union Message that CBO numbers are the ones they are using in their budget. I remember Republicans laughed. He looked at us and said, "All those Republicans laughing, remember, they have been more conservative most of the time," the CBO numbers, the Congressional Budget Office numbers.

So I do not think we have done anything here that is so bad. We were told last night on the House floor in debate, "If you just tear off the last page, the President will sign it in a minute." What is wrong with this last page? It does not say he has to sign a balanced budget today, or next week or next month. It says "in the 104th Congress."

And if you watched TV last night and you saw the President saying, "I'm for a 5-year balanced budget," and then, "I'm for a 7-year," "I'm for a 10-year," "I'm for a 9-year," "I'm for an 8-year"—the American people are confused.

So let us send this to the President. Let us not take all day in doing it. Let us get it down to the President of the United States. I believe after reflection, he will sign it. It is a commitment to a 7-year balanced budget. That is all it is. That is what it says in the title, "commitment." It is not a law, it is a commitment.

So I urge my colleagues to table this amendment and to table the other two amendments to be offered and, hopefully, have some bipartisan support on final passage.

I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMPBELL). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 46, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 3055) was agreed to.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOLE. I move to table the motion.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand that Senator HOLLINGS wishes to proceed.

AMENDMENT NO. 3056

(Purpose: To reaffirm the commitment of the Congress not to use the surpluses in the Social Security trust fund to mask the true size of the deficit in any plan for a balanced budget)

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and I ask the clerk to report my amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] proposes an amendment numbered 3056.
> Add at the end of the Joint Resolution, the following last section:
> SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision of this Joint Resolution, the seven year balanced budget passed by the Congress to the President shall not include the use of Social Security Trust Funds to reflect a balanced budget.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, it was Mark Twain who said the truth is such a precious thing that it should be used very sparingly. As a result, Mr. President, what we have been doing is calling budgets "balanced" when in reality there have been raids, or, as the former Senator from Pennsylvania, John Heinz, called it, "embezzlement" of the Social Security trust fund.

At the present moment we owe Social Security, due to this lack of truth in budgeting. We owe Social Security $481 billion, and if you duck the proposed reconciliation tomorrow or the GOP budget, you will expend another $636 billion of Social Security trust fund.

Now, what may have been in the original instance an instrument of good, turned into a usurpation and a bankruptcy of Social Security if you have to borrow a few billion dollars. In the morning paper, you see the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to keep from defaulting, the Secretary of the Treasury has borrowed $61.3 billion from the civil service retirement. And they say later on, of course, he has to pay it back with interest—and that is the point. You have to pay Social Security back with interest and at the end of the 7-year budget you will owe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold a moment? The Senate is not in order.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, there are nine conversations going on on the floor right now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is aware of it and is trying to get order.

The Senator from South Carolina may proceed.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished Chair.

At the end of the 7-year period, we will all have to pay back, supposedly, over $1 trillion into the Social Security trust fund, and no one has any idea—not any Senator or House Member—who is going to introduce the increase in taxes to refund the Social Security trust fund.

The remedy for this particular evil is to obey the law. We saw this in the Budget Committee. We tortured over it. We realized this back in 1983 when we passed the Greenspan Commission report making the Social Security trust funds solvent into the middle of the next century, we said, so the children and the grandchildren could count on it.

We raised the taxes and assured everyone—in fact, we could not have done it for defense or for foreign aid or for welfare or for any of the other endeavors of Government. We said we were raising these Social Security taxes to make certain that there was trust in the trust fund through the year 2050.

Having done that, 5 years ago we met in the Budget Committee and realized, look, on an emergency basis, yes, we borrowed from Social Security, maybe $100 billion here, $200 billion there. As Senator Dirksen says, it could easily run into money.

So we voted, on a vote of 20 to 1 in the Budget Committee, that we would stop this nonsense by writing into the law section 13301 of the statutory laws of the United States of America that "thou shalt not use Social Security trust funds to in any way be computed in outlays or revenues of the United States Government or in any way to obscure the size of the deficit." That particular measure passed this body by a vote of 98 to 2. It was signed into law by President George Herbert Walker Bush on November 5, 1990, and no less than reaffirmed in a solemn vote here on the floor of the U.S. Senate on Monday, 3 days ago. We said in the reconciliation—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will withhold a moment. We have several other conversations going on on the floor. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HOLLINGS. We said in the reconciliation instructions that they adhere to the law 13301.

At that particular time, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee looked at it. It was Senator GRAHAM of Florida and the Senator from South Carolina who introduced the particular language. We said about the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995, and I read, ". . . that the conferees be instructed to honor section 13301 of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990, and, 2, not to include in the conference report any language that violates this section." And, to that, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, the Senator from New Mexico, said, and I quote: "Mr. President, the first portion of this instruction, we have never violated, so we can be instructed on it. The second section, we have never violated it, so we can be instructed not to."

Absolutely false. That is categorical. We have regularly violated it. And that is the plea, later on, of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, that all the Presidents have done it. All the Congresses have done it. So, the heck with the law. He gets up and says solemnly: We have never violated it. We continue to do so.

The fact that President Reagan reported a budget that way, and President Bush reported a budget that way, President Clinton reported a budget that way, makes no impression on this particular Senator. It is our responsibility to have truth in budgeting. It is our responsibility to adhere to the statutory laws of the United States of America. It is not a technicality of law; it is a fundamental here involved.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a budget table showing the U.S. budget outlays beginning in 1945, the use of trust funds under President Truman at that particular time, the real deficit, and then, of course, the gross Federal deficit.

When you put together the borrowing from the trust funds that must be replenished, you get the real deficit, the gross Federal debt, and the gross interest costs.

These are all on one page so all the Members cannot dance around and talk about CBO and OMB. These are the figures of the U.S. Government.

I ask unanimous consent they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

*Historical tables, Budget of the U.S. Government Fiscal Year 1996; beginning in 1962 CBO's 1995 Economic and Budget Outlook.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, as you go down, you will see we have been borrowing sumptuously from trust funds. At the present time—not just owing Social Security the $481 billion—at this very minute, we owe the trust funds of the United States, we owe to the veterans, we owe to the civil service retirees, we owe to the military retirees, we owe, yes, to Medicare. We have been using everybody else's moneys: $1,255,000,000,000.

So, the thrust of using the word "unified" is to obscure just that; that we are already in hock, before we begin the year, $1,255,000,000,000. We are already in hock on a national debt of just about $5 trillion. And, since this is all Presidential campaign politics, whoever the next President is, when he comes to town January a year from now, he will find at least $500 billion spent for absolutely nothing, just for the past profligacy and waste, Congresses for 15 years now are spending over $200 billion more than we have taken in.

Congress has continued to campaign on balanced budgets, and they all tell you on the political stump how they are going to balance the budget. When they come to town, they get into the smoke and the mirrors. There is no question that the smoke and the mirror are just in that one word "unified." Just say "the balanced budget."

I have heard Senators say it is not complicated. You take the revenues that the Government receives, you take the expenditures, or outlays the Government spends, and there is the balance. That is not the way.

Then they want to move deficits. They say, "Wait a minute, when you take the revenues in, the outlays out, and you look at that figure, that is too high for me to run on in the next election. So we will take an amount of money out of the right pocket and put it into the left pocket. We will take $636 billion from Social Security in this budget that we have under consideration and put it in the general fund to make it appear we are balancing the budget."

That is what my particular amendment is. As soon as I caught this word "unified," the attempt has been made to abolish this section 13301. They do not like it. But the Senator from South Carolina watches.

So the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution which I was prepared for, ready for, and have voted for numerous times—and am ready, willing, and able to vote for at this minute—included in section 7 the repeal of section 13301. I caught that earlier in this session this year. I told the distinguished majority leader and our distinguished colleague from Illinois, Senator SIMON, who was sponsoring this, I said, "You got my vote. I understand you got five other Democratic votes in a minute. Just take out the repeal of what John Heinz called embezzlement provisions that protects the Social Security Trust Fund from embezzlement." They will not do it. They were adamant.

Then they figured, "Wait a minute. It is good politics if we try to blame it on one vote—if we fail to pass a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget by one vote—and then take it down and offer it next year during the election year.

I have the same amendment right in my pocket. Everybody has been walking around with the contract in their pocket. My distinguished former majority leader from West Virginia carries the Constitution in his pocket. I carry around in my pocket the Social Security provision—namely, a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution that does not repeal section 13301 of the United States Code.

Mr. President, there are those who love this unified budget that has brought a modicum of dignity and financial expertise to the politician Senator. Because you go up on the financial market, and I am astounded. But still the best of economists, the best of financial officers, the biggest and the best of the banks, are reporting what? A unified budget. They are the ones who want it because they are in the business of making money. And the less pressures of the Federal Government's borrowing in the financial market, the more the interest rates, momentarily, will drop and the ease with which to finance momentarily will grow. And, if they can have the Government itself back in Washington borrowing from each other even though, of course, the debt is up, up, and away to $5 trillion, who cares? This crowd operates on quarterly reports, computers, tenths of a second, moving money around, all around the world. They have no responsibility. The Government, Mr. President, you and I, do.

So, it is fine, momentarily, for the financial markets in reducing the pressure. But we, who have the responsibility of serving here in public office as a public trust, have to cut out the nonsense and playing around with the smoke and mirrors. We have to cut out trying to fool the American people that under, for example, this resolution, you would have a balanced budget when it is unified. Not at all. When it is unified alone from Social Security and $636 billion and over the 7-year period from civil service retirement and military retirees and others, we will borrow another $200 billion. So it will be over $836 billion needed to get to a so-called "paper balance."

Let me tell you about the paper balance because I have to listen to the talk on the other side of the aisle about this historic effort and that we finally are doing the heavy lifting. They have not lifted anything. When we lifted year before last, when we cut $500 billion in spending, when we taxed cigarettes, when we taxed liquor, when we taxed gasoline and Social Security, when we cut Medicare $57 billion, they wanted lifting? They were out at recess. There was not a single vote on the other side of the aisle in this body, or in the other body.

And they have the unmitigated gall to come and say, "President Clinton does not want a balanced budget." Well, he is the only one that cannot be blamed for it. The distinguished Presiding Officer, this distinguished Senator from South Carolina, may have voted for expenditures that unbalanced the budget, but not President William Jefferson Clinton. He was down in Little Rock doing what? Balancing the budgets. He balanced them for 10 years. That was part of the good record that helped in his election in 1992.

But we instead were engaged in this shabby exercise of growth, growth—that we will just cut out all the revenue and buy the vote with Reaganomics and with President Bush.

It was President Clinton who came to town, yes, to give us a change in direction. I was here under President Lyndon Johnson. He was conscientious about this political charge of guns and butter and runaway government. So with George Mahon and others working in a committee, we called at the very end, in December 1968, the fiscal year running from the 1st of July back to the next year, June 30, and we told the President, "We can cut another $5 billion." He said, "Don't do it." And the budget for the war in Vietnam, for Social Security, for Medicare and all these particular programs was $178 billion.

To show how far we have gotten out of hand, the interest costs for absolutely nothing—no government is obtained there—the interest cost on the national debt this fiscal year is $348 billion, $1 billion a day. But President Johnson not only balanced, but he gave us a $3.2 billion surplus.

President Nixon came to town. We were working with him again on the idea of block grants, incidentally. But in 1973, the OPEC cartel hit. We began to run some $21 billion deficits. President FORD took over, and our friend, President FORD, knew well what the problem was. And he called us all together in a summit. He said, "Let's get our hands on this thing. It is runaway." We held it down to $66 billion. Thereafter, President Carter came to town. He said, "I have to at least reduce this."

Now, you are looking at the author of the first reconciliation bill. I was chairman of the Budget Committee, and I went over on the Friday after President Jimmy Carter was defeated on a Tuesday in November 1980, and I said, "Mr. President, a Democrat is never going to get elected again with this deficit going up, up, and away."

He said, "How much?"

I said, "Mr. President, the Congressional Budget Office has just estimated the deficit is going up to $75 billion."

He said, "Heavens. What are we going to do?"

I said, "There is a fancy word called reconciliation. It means cut—just cut across the board already-approved spending."

He said, "We can do that?"

I said, "If you can just take Harris and McIntyre"—who were working at OMB and the assistant at OMB trying to give away the money to reelect their President—"if you tell them to stay out of the Capitol, I will go to my good liberal friends"—I say that with reverence—"and I will get the votes, and we will cut it back."

And President Carter said, "Go to it."

I came to Warren Magnuson of Washington and Frank Church of Idaho and John Culver of Iowa and George McGovern of South Dakota and Birch Bayh of Indiana and Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin. I said, "Before you all leave, you have to give me one vote because we have got to prove that we are fiscally responsible." They did, and we reduced the deficit down to $57 billion, just about $58 billion.

Then came to town the leader of them all against waste, fraud, and abuse, President Ronald Wilson Reagan, and he was beginning to put up budgets that we were going to work with. But he got behind the poll, behind the curve. Do not ever fool with polls. That is why I have this particular article on the desk. But getting behind it, he adopted what he had earlier rejected, namely Kemp-Roth. Reaganomics. They termed the name, and we were going to cut out all the revenues.

I stood at this desk—and I saw the distinguished Republican Senator last night—and the Senator from Maryland, Senator Mathias agreed with me, and some 10 other Democrats. We tried to hold the line. We said: Wait a minute; this thing is going to get way out of hand. What is going to grow is these deficits and debts with the very intent that you have in mind and by talking this political nonsense that we will have more sales, we will have more purchases, we will have more sales taxes, more income, more income tax revenues.

"Give the money to the people. They know how to spend it best." That was the political cry. "Get out of the wagon and help us pull" and that kind of nonsense. We are the ones up in the wagon. Who is in the wagon? The Congress has been in this wagon for 15 years. The people outside have been pulling. I am trying to get the Congress out of the wagon—$200 billion a year more than we have taken in for 15 years.

President Reagan said he was going to balance the budget in 1 year. If necessary, I will go get the speech for you. He came to Washington after his inauguration and he said: Whoops, this is way worse than I ever thought. So I will put in a budget that we will balance in 3 years. And just like this paper document that we are going to consider tomorrow—the so-called reconciliation that nothing but a paper document—it reported formally that it would be balanced by the year 1984.

I will include that page that we have for the fiscal year 1984. It says, "Fiscal year, zero," Calendar No. 63, the 97th Congress, first session. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIRST CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET—FISCAL YEAR 1982

* * * * *

(4) the amount of the deficit in the budget which is appropriate in the light of economic conditions and all other relevant factors is as follows:

Fiscal year 1982: $48,800,000,000;
Fiscal year 1983: $21,400,000,000;
Fiscal year 1984: $0;

* * * * *

Mr. HOLLINGS. Then, Mr. President, we came to one of the wonderful chapters in history, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I had worked earlier—and we got to wish him a happy birthday—Senator Howard Baker. Senator Howard Baker was the majority leader, and he tried to help me on the freeze. We could not get the freeze. And so I then got with Senator PHIL GRAMM of Texas and said, "Look, I understand you have an idea of cutting spending across the board."

I remember well as Governor I got a triple A credit rating doing just that. We had truth in budgeting back in South Carolina in 1959. We said that whatever your budget said was going to happen and would have to occur within the expenditures and revenues. If the expenditures ever exceeded the revenues, automatically by law—no discretion—the spending amounts across the board would be cut. And from Standard & Poor's and Moody's, I got a triple A rating ahead of Texas and up to Maryland and before any of the Southern States. I used it as my calling card as a young Governor to carpetbag the North, trying to get industry down. So I feel it keenly.

It is lost now. Why is it lost now? We have Republican administrations that are giving that same nonsense. That is why I would not join them. It is all rhetoric. It is all applesauce. We have lost the triple A credit rating in South Carolina on account of growth.

But be that as it may, Senator GRAMM, Senator RUDMAN and I put in Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I have the tape from President Reagan giving me The Good Government Award and litany and congratulations and everything else, and, yes, the budgets were going to be balanced because we had truth in budgeting.

And then what happened? We found out that it was too severe, these $37 billion cuts annually, and they went out in the year 1990 to Andrews Air Force Base and repealed Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I raised a point of order on October the 19th, 1990, at 12:41 a.m., and they voted me down. I said when you get away from the automatic cuts across the board, the sequesters, what you have is so-called spending caps that are pure rhetoric, and you can see what has happened. The spending has gone up, up and away.

So they repealed it at that time. And let us go to the 1990 budget at the time of the repeal. Mr. President, that is the most interesting document for our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to ever look upon for the simple reason that it has an astounding figure to it. It says here for the 101st Congress, Second Session, report 101-820—I ask unanimous consent that this be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET—FISCAL YEAR 1991

* * * * *

(4)(A) The amounts of the deficits are as follows:

Fiscal year 1991: $143,700,000,000.
Fiscal year 1992: $100,900,000,000.
Fiscal year 1993: $62,000,000,000.
Fiscal year 1994: $14,700,000,000.

(B) The amount of the surplus is as follows:
Fiscal year 1995: $20,500,000,000.

* * * * *

Mr. HOLLINGS. "The appropriate levels of total budget outlays are as follows * * *" And going right down the list, the amount of surplus is as follows: "Fiscal year 1995, $20.5 billion."

So to their crowd saying: "We are carrying the load; we are lifting things," I say you all are doing nothing. They have not voted for anything since Clinton has been in town. They have not passed the appropriations bills. They have not passed the reconciliation. I want to see that lifting.

Be that as it may, this 1990 document is another paper document—a surplus we are supposed to have, this minute, of $20 billion. What is the actual deficit? I put the tables in. The actual real deficit at this particular minute is $283.3 billion instead of a $20 billion surplus.

So every 5 years, in 1981 reflecting one, in 1984 and 1985 reflecting one, in 1990 reflecting a surplus, and here we go again, in with another paper document for another 7 years.

Another day older and deeper in debt. But who will be around 7 years from now? We will have two Presidential elections under this scheme. We will have unrealistic cuts. We have had already cuts in Social Security. You are not going to get $270 billion in Medicare. I do not care what you say or how you vote, we have been cutting.

I have been on this Budget Committee 20-some years, and every year President Reagan, President Bush, and other Presidents, they would come and they would want to cut $5 billion to show they were headed in the right direction. We would have to restore $2 billion or $3 billion. So momentarily, or annually, I should say, we have been cutting billions out of Medicare. So it is under President Clinton who came to town, he cut $57 billion in the year 1993 out of Medicare.

Last year—last year—Mr. President, he proposed a $120 billion cut. Now, let me just as an aside and say a word about Social Security. "For by their fruits shall ye know them." In 1994, last year, I read the so-called report of the board of trustees of the Federal Hospital Insurance Fund. And from page 2:

> The trust fund ratio defined as the ratio of assets at the beginning of the year to disbursements during the year was 131 percent in 1993, and then under the immediate assumptions is projected to decline steadily until the fund is completely exhausted in the year 2001.

Now, mind you me, Mr. President, that this is the same report they are talking about 2002. Last year when they said it was going broke in 2001, they did not even care about it. They went around whining, "What's the matter with health care? We have got the best in the world." There was no proposal to confront that so-called dreadful disaster 7 years from now.

But with President Clinton, not with their votes, President Clinton and the Democratic votes—and the Vice President had to vote—we at least picked up a year with the $57 billion cut. And it was completely rejected, repudiated. The First Lady was ridiculed all last year about health care.

An interesting thing because the distinguished Senator from Texas was saying that with Social Security taxes, they were going to be hunting us down like dogs in the street and shooting us. Like dogs in the street. Oh, they said the whole country was going into inflation. Unemployment was going to soar. Plants were going to close. The economy was going to be in a depression. And they were going to grab us politicians who voted for this and hunt us down like dogs in the street and shoot us.

Well, it was not easy to vote to tax Social Security. But, mind you me, Mr. President, when we taxed it, we said, wait a minute, the revenues from this tax, $25 billion, shall go to—what? Shall go to help making Medicare solvent. We allocated $25 billion to Medicare. Here we had already cut $57 billion.

Here then we had allocated some $25 billion. And you know what the contract crowd did in November? They came in there and said, "Do away with this $25 billion, Medicare," that they now are worried about 7 years from now. Pure theater. An absolute sham.

They, in their contract, increase the deficit of Medicare some $25 billion. They did not help strengthen the Medicare fund. Why is it that we pick out these straw men out here 7 years from now in Medicare, 30 years from now in Social Security, and are not worried about going broke this minute?

We have fiscal cancer. The interest costs—the automatic spending to pay the interest costs on a $5 trillion debt—is going $1 billion a day up, up and away. There is no plan, Democratic or Republican, that says let us cut spending $1 billion a day.

So let us get down to the real facts. The real facts are, in the GOP budget, that for every year they increase spending, the fact is, the present budget—the reconciliation we will vote on tomorrow—will increase spending $53 billion. $53 billion over the present year. A $53 billion increase in spending. You look over at the increase in revenues, and you say, well, maybe we had to spend more. But we took in more. We did have some of that growth. Not so. Not so.

You add up the 7 years, Mr. President. The expenditures, the outlays by CBO. Incidentally, I do not mind CBO figures. I do not mind the 7-year budget. I am prepared to vote for a 7-year budget and CBO figures—so long as it is a true balanced budget and not an embezzlement of Social Security. None of this unified. Do not give old HOLLINGS that. I heard it before. I hear it again. I hear the whine that other Presidents have done it.

We came to town in November, my dear Republican colleagues, for change, not for business as usual, not how Presidents have done it, not how Congress has done it before, but the truth in budgeting. But, Mr. President, the outlays exceed the revenues some $1,052,000,000,000 during that first 7 years. How do you start with a $283.3 billion deficit, increase spending over revenues each year for 7 years, and get a balanced budget?

You cannot. There is no mystery to it. You use smoke and mirrors. In fact, the very authorities they use, they misquote. You look at page 3 of the conference report of Chairman Kasich over in the House side.

I ask unanimous consent that a portion of that report be printed in the RECORD at this particular point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996

* * * * *

(4) DEFICITS.—For purposes of the enforcement of this resolution, the amounts of the deficits are as follows:

Fiscal year 1996: $245,600,000,000.

Fiscal year 1997: $234,100,000,000.
Fiscal year 1998: $204,000,000,000.
Fiscal year 1999: $192,900,000,000.
Fiscal year 2000: $181,100,000,000.
Fiscal year 2001: $140,200,000,000.
Fiscal year 2002: $108,400,000,000.

* * * * *

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. KASICH there for the 104th Congress, the first session, concurrent resolution for the fiscal budget for the fiscal year 1996. It says fiscal year 2002.

Mr. President, everybody ought to listen. They do not want to hear it: It shows a $108,400,000,000 deficit. Aha. They keep on these weekend shows, morning interviews, the TV, 20-second scripts. Truth in budgeting. But they themselves say in the year 2002, it is a $108,400,000,000 deficit.

And then, of course, June O'Neill, on October 20, 1995. This, incidentally, Mr. President, was subsequent to the October 18 good Government award that the chairman of the Budget Committee came to the floor and gave his budget.

He said, now we have got it certified. Now we have got it certified. And I do not want to just repeat the record of those particular amounts, but he had them all detailed out there on October 18. And he said, the Congressional Budget Office has reviewed our budget that I have just quoted from, and they have found that we have a $10 billion surplus in the year 2002.

I said, wait a minute, I can read. KASICH himself said a $108.4 billion deficit. Where in the world did this $10 billion surplus come from? Two days later, when we admonished the Madam Director to obey the law—to cut out the embezzlement of the Social Security trust—she wrote back meekly.

I ask unanimous consent that that letter be printed in the RECORD, the letter of October 20.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, October 20, 1995.

Hon. KENT CONRAD,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to Section 205(a) of the budget resolution for fiscal year 1996 (H. Con. Res. 67), the Congressional Budget Office provided the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee on October 18 with a projection of the budget deficits or surpluses that would result from enactment of the reconciliation legislation submitted to the Budget Committee. As specified in section 205(a), CBO provided projections (using the economic and technical assumptions underlying the budget resolution and assuming the level of discretionary spending specified in that resolution) of the deficit or surplus of the total budget—that is, the deficit or surplus resulting from all budgetary transactions of the federal government, including Social Security and Postal Service spending and receipts that are designated as off-budget transactions. As stated in the letter to Chairman Domenici, CBO projected that there will be a total-budget surplus of $10 billion in 2002. Excluding an estimated off-budget surplus of $115 billion in 2002 from the calculation, CBO would project an on-budget deficit of $105 billion in 2002. (The letter you received yesterday incorrectly stated these two figures.)

If you wish further details on this projection, we will be pleased to provide them. The staff contact is Jim Horney, who can be reached at 226-2880.

Sincerely,

JUNE E. O'NEILL,
Director.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, it shows there, and I read, "CBO would project an on-budget deficit of $105 billion in 2002."

"Peace, peace, everywhere a man cried peace," said Patrick Henry, "But there was no peace." Balance, balance, balance, balance, everywhere men cry balance. There is no balance. There is a deficit.

Let us level with the American people. To quote Mark Twain, "The truth is such a precious thing, it should be used very sparingly."

And that is the credo of this Congress that is up in the wagon trying to get by again and is using the pressures of the Government closedown on itself to get what they cannot get by a majority vote. They could not get a majority vote because—I joined with one on legal services. They do not want, like the gang of 73 over on the House side, to abolish legal services. So we joined in reinstating legal services in the appropriations bill.

Mr. President, they do not want to abolish the Department of Commerce. That is why we had a voice vote to strike the provision that would have abolished the Department of Commerce.

What is happening is they are trying to force feed the White House on measures that they cannot even get a majority vote for.

And they're nagging and crying like children about where they sat on the plane going to a funeral. I do not believe anybody felt much like talking. But our distinguished minority leader, Senator DASCHLE, was there and I believe him, and he recounted the several times that the President came back. That is one thing you cannot accuse President Clinton of is not talking, for God's sake. Heavens above. Where have we come to in this town of ours putting on this show?

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the document "Here we go again," which has the budget tables.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Real Problem—

Not Medicare—In Surplus $147 Billion—Paid For

Not Social Security—In Surplus $481 Billion—Paid For

But interest costs on the National debt—are now at almost $1 billion a day and are growing faster than any possible spending cuts

—And Both the Republican Congress and Democratic White House as well as the media are afraid to tell the American people the truth: "A tax increase is necessary."

—Solution: Spending Cuts, Spending Freezes, Tax loophole closings, withholding new programs (AmeriCorps) and a 5% Value Added Tax allocated to the deficit and the debt.

(Mr. STEVENS assumed the chair.)

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President—reading from that document, which use CBO figures—during the 7-year period, the debt actually goes up $1.8 trillion. I have listed down in that document what is owed to the trust fund, what is owed to the Government accounts, and what is owed to additional borrowing. And, of course, interest costs go up from $348 billion to at least $448 billion, but over the 7 years, every expert on Wall Street says interest cost is going up and will exceed $500 billion.

So how do you do it? You do not. Mr. KASICH, the chairman, says you cannot. He records a deficit; the CBO records a deficit. How do you do it? You fabricate a paper balance with smoke and mirrors.

One of the big smokes that has recently surfaced and in 20 years I have not heard this tricky one, is that the CPI, the Consumer Price Index, has been overstated. So we will have less of a CPI and spend the money. You cannot. When you give less to Social Security, you do two things: You cut the benefits, of course, because you are giving less, but more than anything else—and I welcome that—you increase the Social Security surplus. You do not have ready moneys to spend in violation of 13301. You do not have ready moneys for Medicare when you use a different CPI to spend for the deficit. It goes to Medicare, and we are trying to save Medicare. So let us talk sense.

That CPI is a gimmick. Use it if you will, but the result is not to lower the deficit. It is to increase the surplus. On that basis, we need to do that and the Senator from South Carolina would support it. But come down to the reality of Medicare, Medicaid, and welfare. I could go through each one of them. Let us just take welfare.

We say some $83 billion saved in the welfare reform. The House side says $100 billion or so. I can tell you it will cause spending more money.

I have been a Governor. You give me welfare and say, "Governor, now you have to set up a job-of-last-resort system in the government," because they have to work, and I can tell you it is going to be difficult now to get people to work because they have closed down 17 textile plants in South Carolina since NAFTA. There have been at least—and this is last week's figure—92,000 jobs lost. So we are moving our manufacturing overseas like gangbusters and here come welfare recipients.

If you cannot get them a regular job, you have to give them a government job. But to give them a government job, of course, they have to be skilled. So you not only set up a jobs program. You have to set up a skill program. That costs money.

And, oh my gracious, two-thirds of children—the other third are minority mothers, single mothers—are part of the program and you look around and say, "They can't leave the children," so you set up a child care program.

All of this costs money. The intent is splendid. Let us put everybody to work, but let us not kid the taxpayers that we are saving money. What we are doing, and I welcome it, is saving lives. Yes, let us train them, skill them, try to find jobs for them, and that is a worthwhile, necessary Government program. The market is not going to do it. That is the kind of thing we need Government for that they are trying to abolish.

But they abolish their own responsibility, the Gang of 73, by giving it back to the Governors under the chant that "government closest to the people is the best government."

So we will get rid of that responsibility and start cutting the moneys. That is not going to happen.

The worst thing, of course, Mr. President, you see in this document is backloading. When I talk about backloading, if we were to adopt ipso facto the reconciliation bill that they bring out tomorrow, we will have cut or saved, however you look at it, $45 billion, and that is assuming the truth of everything that happened under that particular budget.

We will have cut $45 billion. That has not been easy. We are already at Thanksgiving, and we have not gotten the bill. It is so difficult. Do you know what they say to do in the year 2002? Cut $347 billion. This thing is just to get their attention and get out of town to get the President's election over with next November. They say, "Do not pay attention to it; oh, we'll come back, we'll change it later; it doesn't have any impact on the Presidential election."

They do not have anything there much cut as compared to the enormous task of saving billions of dollars. They put it all in the last 2 years after two Presidential elections. Gamesmanship, smoke and mirrors and, yes, Social Security embezzlement.

Now they embezzled $636 billion. That word embezzlement is from none other than the former Senator of Pennsylvania, Senator John Heinz, when we debated and passed the law.

Now they have another little thing that has come along. They give themselves credit and say we are going to cut taxes. That, if anything, ought to expose the charade, the fraud that we are being asked to adopt. When you come around and you are looking for money and you cut well-conceived programs—education, Head Start, technology, health care, research—they then have the audacity to say we have to buy the vote for next year with this middle-class tax cut. Under the tax cut, we are going to get—like Reaganomics—increased revenues, they say. That is what they say.

Mr. President, we were faced with this 8 years ago in the Budget Committee. We had tried with the freeze during the early eighties. We tried with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings the cuts across the board. We had tried with the tax reform, with Senator Bentsen. In the Tax Reform Act of 1986, we closed the loopholes and then, yes, 8 years ago in 1987, eight of us Senators cold-sober voted what? To increase taxes. We voted for that in the Budget Committee.

I abhor taxes just like everybody else in this land. But we looked and saw what was occurring, and I conferred at that particular time with Dick Darman, the head of OMB for President Bush. I said, "Look, what we need to do is get"—actually, President Reagan was still in, but we were talking to Darman who was coming in—"we need not only freezes, we need not only spending cuts, we need not only loophole closings, but we need all of those and a tax increase." We voted that, allocating it to the deficit and the debt.

I want you to know we did not give up with President Clinton. In February 1993, shortly after his inauguration, I asked for a personal interview with the President of the United States.

And I said, Mr. President, I have been in this thing almost 20 years, and there is no way out. What we really need to do is get what cuts you can get, what savings you can get. But to get on top of this hemorrhage of interest cost spending on the national debt, you are going to need a revenue measure. And on careful consideration, we would suggest a value-added tax.

In fact, I said, "Mr. President, if you take it, I will take the lead." I had just been beat up upon, being reelected in 1992 as "high-tax HOLLINGS." But I said I would take the lead, and we could get the votes, as long as the President is leading. Nobody, for example, on the House side running for reelection is going to throw himself on the tax sword if it is going to be vetoed. One-third of those in the U.S. Senate, running for reelection, are not going to throw themselves on a tax sword if it is going to be vetoed.

So, Mr. President, you are going to have to get it. And he said, "You know, that is interesting, Senator." He said, "Last night I got a call from Lane Kirkland of the AFL-CIO. He was down in Bar Harbor at the annual conference. He said he would favor a 5-percent VAT to get rid of the deficit and the debt."

I said, "Mr. President, happy day. When I testified before the Finance Committee, that was the opposition, and organized labor was talking about the regressivity." They do not talk about the regressivity of spending for nothing. Nothing is more regressive than the present course Government is on and insisting upon raiding trust funds, just to look politically smart. "Come on," I said, "If we have the AFL-CIO, we can really get it done."

The next morning, Mr. President, the President of the United States was out doing his jog, and one of the reporters asked him about some of his thoughts. He said, "I am thinking about a VAT." Well, before he got back to the White House, they were stepping all over us and all the rest of that crowd said, "You're lying, the President overspoke; he did not say it," and everything else. I will show it to you in the newspaper. That ended any effort.

At least the President came back with $500 billion in cuts, increased taxes on gasoline, Social Security, and the least cuts in Medicare and acted very responsibly, which has gotten us into a pretty good economic situation—for the moment. But we have fiscal cancer.

The automatic spending and interest costs on the national debt are eating us alive—are growing each day and cannot be stopped, unless we get rid of this debt and this deficit. Ironically, the only way to get rid of the increased taxes—because that is what the interests costs are. They cannot be avoided, like death and taxes; you have to pay the interest costs. The only way to get rid of the automatic increase in taxes is to increase taxes.

Now, if you understand that, you will understand the predicament the land is in. All of this other thing of force-feeding, whether it is education, whether it is the environment, whether it is Medicare and all, is beyond repair. Why argue here in November 1995 about something that is solvent and paid for like Medicare? Why argue about something that is solvent and paid for like Social Security?

Let us look at the real problem that we are trying to finesse. Let us understand that we are in the same act, same scene. And, as President Reagan said, "Here we go again." We proposed and supported a balanced budget in 1987 we proposed and supported a balanced budget in 1991, and we were supposed to, under Bush in 1990, report a surplus in 1995.

Mr. DORGAN. I wonder if the Senator will yield for a question.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes.

Mr. DORGAN. I know Senator HOLLINGS was serving in the Senate in 1983. I was serving in the House of Representatives and was on the Ways and Means Committee when the Social Security reform package was enacted.

I offered an amendment in 1983 in the Ways and Means Committee that failed, but the amendment that I offered—I ask a question about this—said if we are going to incur surpluses in Social Security year by year in order to save for the future, as a deliberate strategy, then we are going to have to put those surpluses aside so they are not used for other purposes, because if they are part of the unified budget, they will get used. So I offered the amendment and the amendment failed. That was 12 years ago. Now, 12 years later, we are back debating this.

Is it not the case that 12 years later we are debating that because what I feared would happen in 1983, and offered an amendment to try to prevent from happening, is happening. The Senator from Pennsylvania said it has happened under Democrats and Republicans. He is absolutely correct. But it is business as usual, and it is wrong. It has been wrong, and it is wrong now. Is that not correct?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is exactly correct. If anybody heard anything during this week's debate, listen to the Senator from North Dakota. He was there and made the motion. I remember it well.

At that particular time, we were raising taxes on the absolute promise that it would only go for Social Security. If we said at the time we are going to raise taxes for defense and raise taxes for foreign aid and raise taxes for education—in fact at that particular time they were trying to abolish the Department of Education—and raise taxes for any of these other endeavors of Government, you could not have gotten a tax increase. You got it on a solid promise that we were keeping faith under the Social Security fund.

Mr. DORGAN. If the Senator will yield for an additional question, the Senator then, subsequently, in future years, offered an amendment on the floor of the Senate that actually succeeded. It was an amendment similar to what I offered in 1983 and failed in the Ways and Means Committee. Senator HOLLINGS then offered an amendment that subsequently had become law that says you cannot use the Social Security trust fund as part of the unified budget, which meant that when the balanced budget agreement was brought to the floor by the majority party, on page 3 of the agreement, they had the years of the deficits and, in 2002, this document they said was their balanced budget document set deficits in 2002 of, I believe, it was $108 billion.

Now, why would something they called a balanced budget propose a $108 billion deficit in 2002? Is it not because, in fact, the law prevents them from bringing something to the floor that says "zero," especially inasmuch as the law says you cannot use the Social Security trust funds. But by calling it a balanced budget, they know what they are doing; they are using the Social Security trust funds as an offset against other revenue, thereby saying, yes, we balance the budget, but, in fact, they have taken the trust funds to do it, and, in fact, the budget is not in balance at all; is that not the case?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is the case. Our only chance at getting out of this particular fix is the free press, the media.

I have dutifully called all around the clock. I think at that time President Jefferson said, "As between a free Government and a free press, I would choose the latter." Yes, you can have a free Government, but it will not remain free long unless you have a free media. Right to the point, I have gotten the Washington Post economic writer, I have gotten all the particular people—for example, on "Meet the Press." I have talked to editors and written articles. I keep talking about it, and they keep reporting just like Greenspan, like he is some authority. He represents Wall Street.

Wall Street loves a unified budget. When you say a unified budget, the Government in Washington borrows from itself and not from Wall Street. There is less of a burden on the financial market. So they have a selfish interest involved here, and they do not want to see us, as public servants, start putting this Government on a pay-as-you-go basis. Greenspan has been a lawyer here for 15 years.

I can tell you, in football, I would have had another coach long ago. I got some remarks of his somewhere here. He was talking, just the other day, to some group and he said, "We don't want to be lulled asleep." If there is one person who has lulled us asleep, it has been Alan Greenspan. He talks of unified budgets. He never says, categorically, what the truth is, and that is that you have to get tax revenues in here to do this job. When you are at $1 billion a day, and $348 billion a year, and use $271 billion in defense, you can eliminate defense and you would still have a deficit.

Domestic discretionary spending is the President, Congress, courts, Department of the Interior, Justice, go right around, Commerce, general government. That is $273 billion. You could eliminate it, not just cut it, and you still have a deficit.

We are in a position like the character in "Alice in Wonderland." In order to stay where you are, you have to run as fast as you can; in order to get ahead, you have to run even faster.

No one wants to talk about it. We have fiscal cancer. Once again, we are prepared to lie to the American people. Therein, the Hollings amendment. It is very clear-cut. Do not give us any of this Social Security embezzlement budget. It is not the balanced budget. Read the language. Section 301 of the continuing resolution says the President, the Congress, must enact legislation to achieve a unified balanced budget. That is the trick.

We voted on Monday just exactly not to do that by a vote of 97 to 2. At that particular time, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee said the first portion of this instruction "we have never violated, so we can be instructed on it." False. We continually—as he argues, every President, every Congress has given budgets that way and it has been in violation. He knows it.

The second section "we have never violated, so we can be instructed not to." False. We continue to violate it. You come around and you raise a point when he is on the floor, he will say, "Senator, that is what President Clinton does." Do not give me that. I am serious. I expect to be here after President Clinton. Come on. I have been here after all of these Presidents that are running up these deficits.

We are conscientious about it. We do not want to see this charade continue. The only way to make sure that everybody knows when they vote—I will vote for your resolution, Senator, on 7 years; I will vote for CBO figures. Nothing wrong with that. But do not give me the trick, the smoke, the mirror, of unified. That is raiding the trust funds—$636 billion, specifically, of Social Security, $200 billion from the airport and airways trust fund, the highway trust fund, the Medicare trust fund, the Civil Service retirement, your military retirees.

The distinguished Senator from Alaska has that responsibility. You can see the trickery as they do.

Treasury Secretary Robert E. Rubin announced plans yesterday to pull $61.3 billion from two retirement accounts.

He authorized withdrawal of the entire $21.5 billion—in the G-fund, and as much as $39.8 billion of the $350 billion held in the Civil Services retirement fund. In effect, both funds would be given—IOU that would obligate Treasury to make complete repayment with interest after a permanent increase in the debt limit is finally approved.

(Mr. BURNS assumed the chair.)

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. I must say that I am saddened here when the Senator from South Carolina made that statement, because as he knows I am the author of that bill that created those funds just mentioned. It is a defect in the legislation.

We intended that to be available to the administration in the event of a national emergency. We meant a true national emergency.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Not a political war.

Mr. STEVENS. I think this is a political war and an aberration. No administration has done that before.

It is very sad because we saved the taxpayers billions of dollars by creating a separate fund in which employees contribute and the employer matches a portion of that. And, a portion of that is invested in Government securities.

What they have now done is they have reached into funds that employees have put into Government securities, pulled it out, and said, "We can run the Government on it."

This is the worst thing I have seen in the history of the Government's relationship to its employees—to invade the trust funds, and at a loss now, the employees will lose interest.

They will give the employees a chit to pay interest. What will be the interest? The interest paid on the national debt?

That is why we took it out of there, because the national debt is so fluctuating—it, too, is political in a sense.

I think it is unfortunate we have reached a point where that action was taken by the President.

I am enjoying the Senator's comments and my question is this: I heard the Senator from South Carolina say he could support this amendment—this continuing resolution—but did he say with an amendment?

Mr. HOLLINGS. The amendment that is now under the consideration of the body. Namely, it says that the 7-year balanced budget passed by the Congress to the President shall not include Social Security trust fund to reflect a balance.

Very simple. I have copies of it. I will be glad to try to change it around and make it clearer, but I do not know—I wanted to make you an offer you could not refuse. You just voted for it on Monday. Here it is Thursday. That was my intent.

If I do it now, then we will correct this situation and we will all be pulling forward together and finally getting out of Senator GRAMM's wagon of spending $200 billion a year and raiding trust funds, and talking about how intent we are in doing heavy lifting and how Mark Twain, and whether we are patriots and whether we are popular—that is children's talk.

We should do the job. In order to do the job, quit moving deficits. Do not move the deficit from the general fund over to the Social Security. Our idea is to lessen or eliminate deficits, not move them around.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I think the Senator has a germ of an idea. I am not sure I concur entirely in what he is saying. I do not believe we should have a situation where the balancing of the budget comes about because of a failure to use the Social Security trust fund the way it was intended. Is that the position of the Senator?

Mr. HOLLINGS. My position is it not be used. The budget—so far we had in the Budget Committee, the document by Chairman KASICH of the conference itself on the budget reflects a usage of Social Security trust fund—$636 billion over the 7 years.

Mr. STEVENS. Is that not a restriction? It leaves the money in the trust fund. It does not put it in the Treasury. But we are not transferring to the Treasury.

Mr. HOLLINGS. You are. The law itself says that it cannot be used in that fashion, if I could put my finger on it. That is exactly the law you voted for and I voted for in 1990, that it not be employed in that fashion, to obscure the size of the twist.

We are spending more than we are taking in. That is what we are doing. It is not a technicality about being in the Treasury. Certainly it is in the Treasury, and it should, under our intent of increasing the taxes back in 1983, be embellishing a surplus. Nothing wrong with that.

The fact is with the surplus there, your children and my children can count on their retirement. As it is now, Senator THURMOND and I are holding free on that score but the kids are not. They are caught up because we are using all the money.

We owe $481 billion. If we spend another $636 billion under this budget, thereupon, at 2002 we will all be owing Social Security over $1 trillion, and then they will be coming around on the floor of the Congress saying, "Social Security is busted and we have to save it."

How will you find $1 trillion to save it?

Mr. STEVENS. I have another question. Would the Senator yield for a moment to make a unanimous-consent request on behalf of the leader?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2126

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent when the Senate considers the Department of Defense appropriations conference report, it be considered under the following time agreement: One hour under the control of the Senator from Hawaii, Mr. INOUYE, with 10 minutes of that time under the control of Senator BINGAMAN, and 20 minutes of that time under control of Senator DORGAN, 1 hour under my control, and 30 minutes under the control of Senator MCCAIN; following a conclusion or yielding back of the time, the Senate proceed to vote on adoption of the conference report.

This has been cleared on both sides, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1996

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have the question, if I might ask my friend?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENS. Because he is a good friend, as a matter of fact.

If we were to vote for your amendment, do you have any indication the President would support it as amended?

Mr. HOLLINGS. It makes no difference to me. I would hate to see a President want to veto that and say I want to raid the Social Security trust fund. He does know politics. I do not think he would hesitate signing that part of it, I can tell you that.

Mr. STEVENS. My question, respectfully, to my friend, is, has he discussed this amendment with the White House.

Mr. HOLLINGS. No. This gentleman is working on his own. This is no White House amendment. I can tell you here and now, if I wait on that crowd over there, we would not get it done.

Mr. President, there is one more thing to be recognized and that is the exception that makes the rule. That is, as I am critical of the media for just going fast asleep on this one, and battling the Greenspan unified nonsense, the one exception is USA Today just about a week ago—10 days ago, November 6, Monday.

I ask unanimous consent this editorial and an October 20 column by Lars-Erik Nelson be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From USA Today, Nov. 6, 1995]

THE BALANCED-BUDGET MYTH

OUR VIEW: BOTH PARTIES USE SOCIAL SECURITY TO HIDE THE TRUTH ABOUT THE BUDGET; AND IN TIME, THE PUBLIC WILL PAY.

Each day, the debate over balancing the budget produces another dire warning. The cuts are too deep! say the Democrats. Taxes must fall! say the Republicans.

But after they compromise and begin arguing over who won a few weeks from now, one truth will remain: Both sides will be lying, because neither is talking about a truly balanced budget at all.

The non-partisan Congressional Budget Office underscored that point recently. It pointed out that come 2002, when the budget will be "balanced" under Republican plans, the government will still be borrowing more than $100 billion a year. This is done by writing IOUs from the Treasury to Social Security and other trust funds that Congress declares "off-budget."

The bill for this little game won't come due in the political life of President Clinton or much of today's Congress. But the public will pay it soon enough.

To understand, look ahead to 2005. That's just 10 years away, about the time it takes for an 11-year-old child to go from grade school through college.

That year a critical balance tips. Increased costs for Social Security will begin to deplete Congress' cushion. Because the Social Security trust fund is a fiction filled with nothing but government promises to pay, Congress will gradually lose its fudge factor.

By 2013, when the trust fund peaks, taxpayers will feel a hard hit. They'll have to start doing what the trust fund was supposed to do—pay for the retirement of 75 million baby boomers. The budget will plummet into a sea of red ink, with $760 billion a year deficits by 2030. By then the government will have had to double the current 12.4% employer-employee payroll tax to cover Social Security obligations.

That's unaffordable. Yet, neither President Clinton nor leaders of either party in Congress acknowledge reform is needed to avert economic catastrophe. To do so would require Republicans to get off their tax-cut bandwagon and Democrats to accept deeper spending cuts. Both prefer the myths that a budget borrowing from Social Security is balanced and a trust fund filled with IOUs to be paid by today's 11-year-olds has value.

Those are frauds only fundamental reform can fix.

The leaders of Clinton's commission on entitlements—Sen. Robert Kerrey, D-Neb., and former Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo.—last year recommended raising the retirement age to 70 and converting a portion of the current payroll tax into a mandated personal retirement account. The Concord Coalition, a deficit watchdog, has called for cutting benefits to upper-income retirees. Other proposals include taxing all income for Social Security and subjecting all benefits to normal income taxation.

Which measures are best? Only a thorough debate of the various measures can decide. But first political leaders must give up their convenient budget myths and face the fact—a Social Security train wreck is coming, and sooner than they think.

BORROWING FROM SOC SEC TO AID THE RICH

(By Lars-Erik Nelson)

Washington—See that Social Security deduction on your paycheck? It's the key to the Republican plan to "balance" the federal budget while giving tax cuts to the wealthy.

In 2002, the year Republicans have been promising a balanced budget, they will in fact come up $108 billion short, according to the House Budget Committee's report. The Republican plan makes up the difference by "borrowing"—the late Sen. John Heinz (R-Pa.) called it "embezzling"—from the Social Security trust fund.

By law, Social Security deductions are supposed to be earmarked to pay benefits for future retirees. But for the past dozen years the Social Security surplus has been used to mask the real size of the federal deficit.

The Republican plan continues the embezzlement. In pure accounting terms, the Republicans are right: If the amount of money the government collects in a given year equals the amount that it pays out, the budget is in balance. But borrowing from the trust fund to cover current operating costs means raising taxes on the next generation—our children—to pay back the debt to the trust fund.

In addition, using Social Security deductions to balance the budget means that working people, who cannot escape that FICA deduction on their paychecks, make up the shortfall caused by tax breaks for the wealthy and for business.

"It's the largest transfer of wealth from labor to capital in our history," Sen. Daniel Moynihan (D-N.Y.) said yesterday. "We are using a 15% payroll tax [the combined burden on employer and employee] to pay the interest on Treasury bonds, which are generally not owned by blue-collar workers."

"These guys [the Republicans] don't have any intention of balancing the budget," agreed Sen. Ernest Hollings (D-S.C.). "All they want to do is to get credit for it, make room for a big tax cut and destroy the government."

Republican budget plans are still something of a moving target, with many details being worked out behind closed doors, often in consultation with business lobbyists. "You're really not supposed to understand this until it's too late," one of the lobbyists confessed with a grin yesterday.

But the general outline is clear. The budget plans call for increasing taxes on the lowest-income Americans—those earning under $30,000 a year—primarily by curtailing the Earned Income Tax Credit for working people.

The way the tax cuts are skewed, the wealthiest 12% of Americans share $53 billion in tax breaks; the remaining 88% of taxpayers share $49 billion. Federal spending cuts also hit the low-earners harder than they do upper-income families.

More bad news: En route to their supposedly "balanced budget," the Republicans run annual deficits that will add another $1 trillion to the national debt. That means that in 2002, interest costs—now running at nearly $1 billion a day—will eat up even more of the federal budget, leaving less money for spending on everything else.

Moynihan tried yesterday to strike $245 billion in GOP tax cuts and use the money to reduce the deficit, preserve the EITC and spare some of the proposed cuts in Medicare. He was defeated.

"This is simply the wrong time to cut taxes," Moynihan argued. Republicans did not listen.

As Ronald Reagan's conscience-stricken budget director, David Stockman, observed in identical circumstances just over a dozen years ago, "Now the hogs are really feeding."

Mr. HOLLINGS. Talking about the budget, the editorial says:

> The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office underscored that point recently. It pointed out that come 2002, when the budget will be "balanced" under the Republican plans, the Government will still be borrowing more than $100 billion a year.

The truth is, it is over $348. But then:

> But after they compromise and begin arguing over who won a few weeks from now, one truth will remain: Both sides will be lying, because neither is talking about a truly balanced budget at all.

That is what I want to do, is repair the lying with this particular amendment. So both sides can be telling the truth and we are not any longer embezzling Social Security.

The title of this one is "A Balanced Budget Myth." There is one particular entity, now, that has the truth and they are after us. I hope all the media will wake up and get after us. Let us start talking sense, rather than who is on top and who is lost and who is popular and what the polls show.

I absolutely, since I have the time here, have learned one thing in 40 years of public service. That is, this political polling is a cancer. Yes, you have to get it. The opposition gets it when you run for office. But if you try to administer, if you try to govern with a poll—I think of the Marshall plan. Mr. President, 14 percent favored the Marshall plan at the time it was adopted. It was overwhelmingly opposed.

I go back as a young House member in my own State legislature, when I offered the sales tax bill and education finance reform to start building up public education in my own home State. Sales tax, at that time, was totally unpopular. As of this minute, if you took a poll in South Carolina on the sales tax, I am convinced the majority, by far, would say they oppose the sales tax.

But, in the 45 years, from 1950 to 1995, not a single bill has been introduced in the legislature to repeal it. The polls would show overwhelmingly it is a popular thing, but the people know if they did repeal it the government would go broke. We would not have any BMW's coming from South Carolina. We would not be correcting the illiteracy. We would not be giving the youngsters an opportunity in public education.

So, let us get away from this cancer, in addition to the interest costs on the national debt, of how well the President or the Congress is up or down in the polls.

We have a job to do. Under this job, let us have truth in budgeting.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I will just repeat what I said a couple of times here on the floor. We talk about who is at fault in these various things, in the impasse we have that has furloughed so many hard-working people. I could not help but think the other day, when I heard the Speaker of the House talking about the kind of discipline they now have in the House and how they are able to move, "We told the American people we would do certain things and by golly we are doing them right on time"—et cetera.

One of the things they did was take over control of both bodies. And one of the things you are supposed to do, and get paid to do, is to pass appropriations bills on time—for example, all 13 by the end of the fiscal year in September. What they have not told the American people is that you have hired us to run the Congress, pay us over $130,000 a year to do that, but we failed to get our work done on time in September. We passed and had signed into law only two of the 13 appropriations bills. Today there are only about 4 of the 13 that have been signed into law. That is why we are debating what kind of continuing resolution we might have.

I cannot remember a time in my 21 years here—and I have been in the Senate, first under Democratic leadership and then under Republican leadership then under Democratic leadership and then under Republican leadership—I cannot remember a time that the Congress has been so derelict in passing and getting signed into law our appropriations bills. That is what has happened. That is why we are in the problem we are in.

Every appropriations bill begins in the other body. It is the other body that has a Speaker who talks of the tremendous control he has over the House and tells us how, now that we have this Contract With America, there is a new majority ruling and they will run things. They ought to at least run the trains on time.

The fact of the matter is, they were a dismal failure in just passing the legislation that Members of Congress are supposed to pass every year. There are certain things we have to do. You raise the flag up on the roof when you go into session. You turn the lights on. You show up for work. And you pass the appropriations bills.

Nobody has been over here filibustering the appropriations bills. Yet, probably it is the most dismal record of passing bills in anybody's memory in Congress. I think they virtually guaranteed we would have this shutdown. I can remember some years we might have gotten 10 of the 13 passed and we had to have a continuing resolution for a week or two, into October, to get the other 2 or 3 passed. But to have nine of them not passed by now? To have nine when you are 6 weeks past the date? If anybody was running a business and had employees who were that tardy, they would fire them all. They would fire them all.

Then we hear on some of the things when he finally does take an interest, when the Speaker has taken an interest—he has taken an interest in one thing, in the farm programs. He has announced to the Senate, which passed a dairy compact 2-to-1, he is just going to take that out. It does not affect his little district in Georgia so, even though it affects all the Northeast, he is just going to take it out. All New England—he is just going to take it out, regardless of the fact the Senate passed it 2 to 1 with Republican and Democratic majorities on it. He will just take it out. He says next time around he will take out anything else that affects us.

Frankly, I would be happy to have the Speaker of the House come up to Vermont and see how hard dairy farmers work. In fact, I guarantee, so he will be in a good mood, he can ride in the front of the airplane and he can come out the front door of the airplane. We will have somebody greet him there. While he will not have the chauffeurs and bodyguards he might have here, I will personally drive him. He can ride right up front. We will give him an ice cream cone and give him anything else he wants. We will make sure we give great attention and deference to him, talk to him whenever he wants. I will shine his shoes, do whatever he feels is his due. He should come up and see just how hard farmers work in Vermont.

He should come up and see how hard farmers work in Vermont. He should come up and see how hard a lot of other people work in Vermont. He should see how hard the Immigration and Naturalization Service works in Vermont for all of us, Republicans and Democrats, and independents alike. He should see how hard the people who run our Forest Service work in Vermont, the people who have been furloughed because of temper tantrums over where he may sit on the airplane. He should see how hard the people work who have to pay the mortgage, have to pay the tuition, and have to pay the children's dental bills. He should see how hard they work, those people now without a job because under his control and his leadership, the majority control, we have one of the most dismal records of passing appropriations bills that I can remember in my 21 years here.

During that whole time I have never, during Democratic Presidents, Republican Presidents, seen the Congress so lax in doing what we are paid $133,000 a year to pass the bills that keep this Government running.

You could vote to change this way or that way. They have the majority. They can pass them in any form they want. But at least pass them. Do it. Get it passed. There has never been a situation like this.

So, in case you start wondering who is at fault, are we at fault? Is the Government closing down because the Speaker did not get the seat he wanted on Air Force One? Most of this country would feel pretty privileged to ride on Air Force One, if they just wanted to go to a funeral or something. Are we closing the Government down for that? Apparently, that is one reason. But the biggest reason even predates that. The biggest reason is people are supposed to keep these things running, and they did not get things done on time. They did not get their work done in time. They have not completed their work, and there we stand.

So I have heard those who are speaking here. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina, former Governor of his State, a good friend, Senator HOLLINGS, made a very good point here.

I simply close with this, Mr. President. Let us not talk about gamesmanship. Let us stop trying to say who is up in the polls this day, who is up in the polls tomorrow, who is going to be running in this Presidential primary, who is going to be running in that, and who is going to have their face on Time, or Newsweek, or U.S. News this week, or who is going to be on there next week. Let us at least do the Government's business. We will vote different ways on different issues. Republicans will vote differently than Democrats on some, and different Democrats will vote differently than each other. Some Republicans will vote differently than each other. But at least get the bills up and get them passed.

Let us do the things we are hired to do. Let us at least pass the basic bills that run the Government as we are hired to do. The new majority may well change what they think the priorities are with the Government. They have the right to do that. But at least get it done.

This is sort of like having somebody who is going to repair the roof on your house before the thunderstorm comes, and they keep coming to you every day and saying, "We will be there. We will be there. Keep paying us. You paid us to fix the roof. We will get there someday. We will get there someday." In the meantime, thunderstorms come.

I ask my friend from North Dakota, is that not so?

Mr. DORGAN. If the Senator will yield for one brief question, I will make it a brief question.

He raises the point about the continuing resolution and where we are at the moment. I made a point on the floor earlier today about two little issues, actually two issues—one little, and one big—that sort of described the dilemma of this continuing resolution. One is a program called star schools, and the other is a program called star wars. I have some additional information.

I was wondering if the Senator from Vermont knows the information. I was unaware of it until I looked into it. Star schools is a tiny little program designed to improve math, science scores, to help schools advance, to help kids, and it is an investment in education to create star schools. It was funded at only $25 million for the whole country. Under this continuing resolution, this program is going to go from $25 million down to $15 million. So it is going to lose 40 percent of its funding because the House wants to kill the whole program.

So this continuing resolution says on star schools you kick 40 percent of the funding out. But another program, star wars—the star wars program for which the administration requested $371 million for R&D. That is all they requested. They requested no money for deployment. The Congress said in their bill let us stick in an extra $300 million for deployment. We invest. You spend that.

So what happened in this continuing resolution? The continuing resolution means that the star wars gets $300 million extra money, and Star Schools gets 40 percent less. If there ever is a vivid description of warped priorities, it is the juxtaposition of star wars and Star Schools. That is what this is about.

I ask the Senator. When people come to the floor and say, "This is a tiny little decision, it is 7 years, and the Congressional Budget Office," is it not true that it is much more than that? Because this continuing resolution, which is 15 pages long, also says to Star Schools, guess what? You are unworthy. We cut you 40 percent, and then allows generously $300 million more for star wars. This is about big guys and little guys, about big interests and little interests. That is what this is all about. Guess what? Is it not true that the big interests get rewarded and the little get penalized?

Mr. LEAHY. It is. I say to my friend that, if we wanted to simply pass a continuing resolution to have the Government continue, we could do that in a one sentence—in one sentence say we will continue the expenditures at whatever percentage until such a time as the appropriations bills are passed. But instead we have not done what the public is led to believe with a simple continuing resolution. But every single piece of special interest legislation that can be packed on in the back room somewhere with no debate. That is what this continuing resolution is. It is a continuing resolution that rewrites the farm bill. It rewrites our education bill. It rewrites health, and does all these things with no hearings, no votes—done in a back room.

Why not do what the American people pay us to do? Bring up each of the appropriations bills, and in those if they want to cut out the money for education and star schools or anything else, then have a vote so that people can look and say, "This Senator voted for the education bill. This Senator voted against the education bill. Here is their reason." Be accountable. But no. We do not do it.

If we are going to have star wars to defend against the Soviet Union, for those who have not been reading the newspapers and do not understand where the Soviet Union is today, then at least have a vote on it. Vote to spend hundreds of millions of dollars of our tax dollars, or vote against it. But stand up and be accountable.

What we are doing is saying we will take care of all these special interests. We will get rid of all these things people might want. But there will not be any fingerprints on them.

It makes me think of the days when I was a prosecuting attorney, and we would come in and realize the burglar had worn gloves. That is what happened here. The burglar is wearing gloves.

I have cast a lot of votes that I knew would be unpopular in this body in the last 20 years. But I am willing to stand up and do them. This is something being done by people who do not even have to vote. Let us vote on it. If we are going to fund a B-2 bomber, vote on it.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEAHY. In just a moment, because of my great respect for the Senator from Alaska. He and I serve on the Appropriations Committee. We usually get at least most of the bills passed by the end of September. That is my point.

I, of course, yield to the Senator from Alaska for a question.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the continuing resolution is even more fair than in the past. In the past we took the lower of the House or the Senate figure. This time there is a 60 percent, in the event that defunded items are in the budget this year. That is much more fair than in the past during the time the Senator's party was controlling the Congress, and we had Republican Presidents. What is more unfair than in the past?

Mr. LEAHY. If I might respond to my friend, the point I make is this. I do not remember a time in this body—and he has been here longer than I—a time under either the Republican leadership in the Senate or the Democratic leadership, under Republican Presidents or Democratic Presidents, that we were so derelict in the number of appropriations bills that have passed—certainly by the middle of November—passed and signed into law. I can remember sometimes we had continuing resolutions for a few. But I can think of sometimes, certainly in the last 3 or 4 years, when we had all thirteen passed.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield again, I can remember distinctly the times back in the days when we had the Republican majority in the 1980's when we had the problems with regard to the House, and we had continuing resolutions that had all 13 bills in it.

As a matter of fact——

Mr. LEAHY. For how long? A week?

Mr. STEVENS. It was the Armed Services bill——

Mr. LEAHY. For a week or maybe 2 weeks in October but never mid-November. Never mid-November.

Mr. STEVENS. That is my question to the Senator again. We gave the President a continuing resolution from October 1 until November 13. We are under the second continuing resolution now. As a matter of fact, the resolution before us is again short term. The Senator is making it look like—does the Senator wish the public to understand we have cut those programs in this bill? This does not cut them. It preserves their funding for 2 weeks.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yielded for the question. I would say this: Before the Senator from Alaska came in, it was pointed out that we cut Star Schools very substantially in this continuing resolution and increased very substantially star wars beyond what the President——

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? It is just not true.

Mr. LEAHY. If I could, just for a moment. It is, if you read the continuing resolution. My point is this—and I think the Senator from Alaska would have to agree—never have we been down to mid-November—to mid-November—with so few—in fact, before Monday I think we had only 2 of the 13 appropriations bills signed into law, and on Monday we had signed 3 of the 13. I guess now we sent down another one. But does the Senator from Alaska remember any time under either Republican or Democratic leadership that we were down to mid-November with only two of the appropriations bills signed into law?

Mr. STEVENS. I would be happy to answer that if I may. In 1988, we had a continuing resolution that had all 13 appropriations bills. Three of them had not even been considered by the Senate.

Mr. LEAHY. Was that November 15?

Mr. STEVENS. This was November, yes. Yes. As a matter of fact, it was a time of the Nicaragua contra aid problem, if the Senator will remember. But we had all of them in the bill at one time. And at that time the Senator's party was in the majority.

Mr. LEAHY. But not down this late. Not down this late, I would say to the Senator from Alaska. Not this late into the session.

Mr. STEVENS. As a matter of fact, if the Senator will yield again, the Senator will recall there was a sequestration ordered that year. It was late. We finally had to pass a continuing resolution to suspend the sequestration under the Budget Act.

Mr. President, my question to the Senator is, he implies that we have raised star wars by this bill. We are going to bring to the floor—we just got the agreement now—the Defense Department appropriations bill for this coming year. It deals with the star wars issue. Because of the fact that bill is almost ready to go, it appears that it is higher than the other funding, but the other funding is in another bill. We are continuing the funding for the Star Schools for a 2-week period rather than leave them out altogether.

Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. LEAHY. We have also seen, I would say, Mr. President, in these continuing resolutions, we have even arranged a way to do the LIHEAP program. I will give you some idea of what happens when you do not pass your appropriations bills on time.

The LIHEAP program is to provide heating assistance for those of us in States with severe weather, none more severe than the Senator from Alaska, obviously. But in my own State we have 25- and 35-below-zero days. This is to give heating assistance to the people, aid in heating to the poorest people in our States, to help them weatherize their homes, or whatever else. Not only is the program cut substantially, but it is set up so you can pay out only $1/365$ per day. So, in other words, if you are in Montana or Alaska or Vermont and it is 25 or 30 below zero in January, you are told: Sorry, we do not have enough, but come back in June and we will probably be able to take care of you.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. LEAHY. Of course.

Mr. STEVENS. I remember the time when because of the controversy over the SST we carried through the continuing resolution to the following March. Does the Senator remember that?

Mr. LEAHY. On one bill.

Mr. STEVENS. As a matter of fact, in 1988——

Mr. LEAHY. On one bill.

Mr. STEVENS. When we had that, it was December when we had this.

Mr. LEAHY. I do not remember. I must admit that was before —

Mr. STEVENS. Does the Senator know Star Schools are forward funded? It is not affected by this bill at all.

Mr. LEAHY. The SST, I would say, was before I was old enough to be in the Senate so I will have to take the remembrance of the Senator from Alaska on that.

Mr. STEVENS. Senator THURMOND and I remember that very well. We stepped off the Mayflower and voted at that time.

Mr. LEAHY. The SST was before I had reached the constitutional age of 30 to be here.

Mr. STEVENS. Again, will the Senator answer my question? Does he know that Star Schools are forward funded; they are not affected by this bill at all?

Mr. LEAHY. I will tell the Senator to go back to the comments made earlier by the Senator from North Dakota who read the specific chapter and verse.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish I would get a chance to talk to the Senator from North Dakota about that.

Mr. LEAHY. I am sure the Senator will.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the Senator will not mislead the public here as to the Appropriations Committee, on which we both serve so well. I think we try to do our best. And this bill is a better bill than previous continuing resolutions. It leaves out less programs as a result of its total breadth than have been covered by prior continuing resolutions. Under that circumstance, it should be readily approved by the President.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I say to my friend from Alaska, I have always enjoyed, and I think enjoyed more, serving on appropriations than any other committee. One of the reasons for that is my relationship with the Senator from Alaska. I know of nobody who works harder. I have no higher respect for anybody than he. And he and I have served on several subcommittees together. I probably now ruined his electoral chances in Alaska by saying nice things about him here.

The fact of the matter is there was no Nicaragua Contra debate, there was no sequestration debate, there were none of these things that stopped us from getting the appropriations bills through, bills that begin in the other body, at the time we are required to, expected to and paid to. That is the end of September.

But when I hear the Speaker of the House tell about how they are able to do all the things they are supposed to do, and they are running things on time and all, the fact of the matter is these bills begin over there and have not gone through at the speed they should, and were all the appropriations bills done, we would not have a Government shutdown. In those areas where we have passed appropriations bills, there are no shutdowns.

All I am saying is let us stop worrying about who sat where on the way to a funeral or who got off which door. Let us get on with the business.

I think the Senator from Alaska may recall this. I started saying in August, in July, that Democrats and Republicans have got to sit down and start figuring out how to get these budgets through; that there will not be a Clinton budget exactly, there will not be a Gingrich budget exactly, there will not be a Stevens or a Leahy budget exactly. But all of us working together could get a budget that might make sense for the country.

I see my friend from New York is here, and he has been waiting at a time when others were waiting, such as my friend from Washington, so I yield the floor.

Mr. D'AMATO addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise this afternoon to strongly support and endorse the underlying resolution, House Joint Resolution 122, called the continuing resolution.

I doubt if the American people really know what a continuing resolution is, but let me say one thing. I have no doubt that the American people are absolutely fed up with what they see going on. I have no doubt that the American people do not want us to continue doing business as usual. Some want us to just continue our merry way—spend and spend, tax and tax for programs that they have decided are good for the American people whether they like them or not. We have colleagues here who have said we are going to give the American people health care whether they like it or not. That is the kind of attitude. That is why the people are angry.

People voted for change. They voted for change in 1992. They did. And in 1994, when they saw that it did not happen, they said, by gosh, we want you to change things. We want you to really keep your commitment.

Now, President Clinton, for all his noble politicking—and he is good at it—has a happy facility of forgetting what he says. He will say just about anything to get your vote or to go up in the popularity polls, and then when it becomes a little tough, he goes the other way or conveniently forgets when the pressures from his party come up. When he ran in 1992, he was the new Democrat. He was going to change things. He was going to cut taxes for working middle-class families. That was his promise. Not only was he going to cut taxes, he was going to balance the budget in 5 years—not 7 years, not 10 years—5 years.

Promises made; promises broken. And that is why in 1994 you saw a revolution. People said, we are sick and tired of it. And we want people who are going to go down and do the job. All over the country they sent a message. Wherever there was an open seat, they elected Republicans who said, yes, we are going to cut taxes, cut spending, we are going to let middle-class working families keep their money, and we are going to have less Government—that was the message—and balance the budget over 7 years.

Here you have a President that said, "I'm willing to balance the budget in 5 years." And yet he is having trouble saying, "Yes, I'll do it in 7." Here is a President who said we are going to use the real legitimate figures to ascertain what economic growth is, how much money we owe, how much money we do not. That is called the Congressional Budget Office, CBO. Most Americans do not understand, but here is the President, and he says, "I'm going to balance the budget in 5 years. And I'm going to give tax cuts to working middle-class families. We're going to use the Congressional Budget Office to be the official accounter for whether or not a budget is in balance," and now, 1995, he has forgotten that.

I am proud that those men and women who were elected for change are down here fighting for change. I do not think we are doing a good job in getting the message out. I think we are doing a terrible job. I think the President is beating our pants off. And the media loves him and they play his score. What do we hear? We hear the President sanctimoniously saying, "I have to tell you I'm not going to allow them to cut programs for the senior citizens, Medicare, Medicaid, and give tax breaks to the wealthy." That is hokum, Mr. President. That is just simply an overstatement and an exaggeration that comes down to being untruthful. It is disingenuous.

As a matter of fact, the cuts he has proposed in Medicare, or reducing the rate of growth, in many cases, parallel those that we have put forth, in many cases. Now, let us take a look at the so-called tax cuts for the wealthy.

We have proposed, and the President will not even come to the table to discuss it, a package of $245 billion worth of tax cuts. Here is a famous Governor from my State, a Democrat, who said something many years ago that we should refer to. He said, "Let's look at the record." So we look at the record to see exactly where the so-called tax cuts go. We will find they do not go to the wealthy people. Indeed, 70 percent, $171.46 billion, 70 percent, goes to family relief. I hear all of this jargon and all this talking and all the crocodile tears about "we care about families." Well, we do. We really do. And that is what this tax package puts forth, $171.46 billion in tax relief for the working middle-class families of America.

And indeed, the child tax credit, if you are talking about one person, it is phased out at $70,000; a couple it is phased out at $110,000. So we are talking about giving relief for families under $100,000. Most of them, the bulk of them, fall in this $50,000 to $70,000, $45,000 to $70,000 area. They are not wealthy people. So 70 percent—and let me give you a breakdown.

When we talk about the child tax credit, that means if you have a child you will get back $500 in taxes that you would otherwise pay. A family of three, $1,500. That is pretty good. Families earning $45,000 a year, that means they can keep $1,500 that they can invest, that they can spend, that they can save. They will make a determination, not some bureaucrat down in Washington. I like that. That is $147 billion of the total of $245 billion that just goes to families who have children.

Mr. President, I heard a lot of talk about the marriage penalty. I daresay, many people will say, what are you talking about, a marriage penalty? Under the Tax Code, if a couple gets married, they can have the same incomes, they join, and they wind up paying more than if they lived separate and apart or lived together and were not married. It is called a marriage penalty.

We are talking about trying to bring American families together, helping families. Government cannot do it by way of stepping in itself. But it can relieve some of the inequities, some of the burdens. They can say, if you have children, you are to get $500; if you are going to get married, we are not going to penalize you for getting married. We begin to phase it out. That is a small step. That is $8 billion worth of relief.

Let me ask you, Mr. President, is a child tax credit for the wealthy or is it really going to most working middle-class families? Is phasing out the marriage penalty for the wealthy or is it going to working middle-class families who are being penalized for doing, I guess, that which we want to encourage—people getting married—as opposed to people living together who do not get married paying less taxes? We penalize people for getting married? There was this—ever since I was a kid I heard politicians talking about doing away with this, phasing it out. Here we start to do it. That is $8 billion.

We talk about the homeless and we talk about abandoned children and we talk about those who need help. And almost $2 billion, $1.9 billion, in this family package—you know, you hear "family friendly"—this is a tax-friendly package. It is a tax-friendly package for families. And $2 billion is to be provided for those families who want to adopt children. It seems to me we have had so much in the way of discourse and disagreement as it relates to children, those who are unwanted. And here we provide an opportunity for those families who are willing to take in children, to make it possible for them to pay the cost that otherwise, in many cases, would keep poor families and working middle-class families from adopting a youngster who would have no home, who would be in foster care, who would be a charge of the State. That is $2 billion.

I do not hear anybody—Mr. President, why do you not tell the American people? Do you support giving credits for families who are going to adopt children or are you opposed to it? Are you opposed to a $500 tax credit for children for working families? Are you for it or against it? Do you want to keep the marriage penalty in place? Are you for it or against it? Is that for the wealthy families or is that for middle-class Americans?

Student loans: We provide $1 billion to help. I would like to see it more. And maybe if we got to compromise and sat down with the President, began the work, we would find some more money for students. Mr. President, $1 billion.

Tax deductions for elderly parents living with their children: Do we want to see elderly parents placed as charges of the State who are poor or do we want to provide some incentive for youngsters to keep their elderly parents in their homes? That is almost $1 billion.

We add that up, it is almost $160 billion, Mr. President. Now, let me tell you, I said $171 billion. And 70 percent of all the taxes go to families. I am a little bit short, $11.8 billion short.

IRA's, individual retirement account: One of the things we do is we say, for those spouses who are taking care of children, who are taking care of the home, should they not be entitled to an IRA and not be able to put $2,000 aside for their retirement for the days when they become elderly? Is that something that is used by the wealthy or is it something that will be used by working middle-class families? The vast bulk of that will be working-class families. So $11.8 billion in individual retirement accounts is made available.

So, Mr. President, we come up to $171.46 billion, and 70 percent of the so-called tax cut for the wealthy goes to families. If you make more than $110,000, you do not qualify for most of that or any of that. Where does the balance go? Let me talk to you about some of the balance.

Long-term care insurance: a deduction. All right. Should people be permitted to go out and buy insurance for their long-term care if they have a catastrophe or do you want them to be Government charges? We provide $5.7 billion. A 50 percent deduction for small business insurance, $1 billion. That is $6.7 billion. Small business being able to deduct expenses for purchases of equipment, $3 billion.

Mr. President, I submit to you that when President Clinton says that we are cutting programs to advantage the wealthy, that is just not true. It is disingenuous. And I would debate with the President any time on the business of whether or not we should have a tax cut that is going to help create jobs, because let me tell you something, I—think we do need that.

I think we need a capital gains tax cut. And we do provide for that, and it does and will help creativity, job expansion, capital formation. It will bring about more in the way of jobs and more in the way of revenue. And, indeed, as Al Smith said, "Let's look at the record." It was John F. Kennedy who brought in a capital gains tax cut that produced revenue. Somehow our colleagues like to forget that. If you give business the opportunity to expand, reward people for investment, they will do exactly that, you will get more economic activity, you will get more jobs, you will get more growth.

So, Mr. President, with any reasonable calculations, more than 80 percent of tax cuts that we have provided will go to individuals earning less than $100,000, and those tax breaks that go for capital gains tax cuts, I submit to you, in the fullness of time, will advantage more working people, more middle-class people, more poor people than bigger spending, than larger deficits

I think that President Clinton has an obligation to sign the balanced budget act into law and stop playing political games with the economic well-being of our country, and that is exactly what he is doing. He will be taking a poll in about 2 hours, and his pollster will come in and tell him whether or not he is gaining on extending this politically. If they say he continues to gain, he is going to draw this out. At some point in time the people are going to really make it known they are holding him responsible, too, and maybe then he will begin to bargain in good faith.

I think that is a heck of a way to run Government or make policy. I submit to you that is exactly what is taking place. The American people want us to balance the budget, and what this continuing resolution says is we will give you until December 5 to do exactly that.

Listen to the great commitment it has. It is a commitment that anybody should be willing to sign off on. It continues Government basically at the same spending levels. Oh, you can make an argument that there is a little percent here or there that is out of whack, but it continues the essential programs that people want and need. Then it says in section 301(a):

> The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget no later than the fiscal year 2002 as scored by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office.

Putting aside the legalese, that means the President would be committed, he will be making a commitment that he is going to work for a balanced budget over the next 7 years. That is the basis on which we go forward. We do not say it is our numbers, our programs, he has to agree with all our tax cuts and tax programs. But we do say we have to have an honest method of accounting, not pie in the sky.

By the way, I have been here when I have seen pie in the sky. I have been here when Dave Stockman cooked the books and projected economic growth that was unrealistic and interest rates that could absolutely not be achieved. If you want to balance the budget, predict a 4-percent economic growth when, indeed, it is 2.3. That will bring you in tens and tens of billions of dollars of extra revenue. Therefore you say, "I balanced the budget."

You predict the interest rates are going to be lower and you predict billions of dollars. That is why we insist we use an honest scorekeeper, not your scorekeeper or mine—an honest one. If, when the President took office, he said he was going to use the Congressional Budget Office to be that official scorekeeper, what is wrong today? What has changed? Promises made, promises broken. The President says, "When I'm elected, I'm going to cut middle-class taxes." He raised them. Then he had to say, "I made a mistake."

Did he make a mistake when he said we will use the Congressional Budget Office as the official scorekeeper to determine whether or not we are really going to have a balanced budget? What did he mean and when did he mean it? Was he just kidding us when he made that promise to the American people, when he came before and addressed the Congress and said, "We are going to use the CBO"? Was he kidding then and is he serious now, or is he kidding now and was he serious then? Is he jockeying for partisan political advantage, and I fear he is? I think the American people know that.

The American people are not exactly throwing bouquets at us, because I think we have done a poor job in explaining what we are trying to do here. I really do. Whether or not I got off the back of the plane, the beginning of the plane, the side of the plane, they would not even let me on the plane. So what? And let me tell you, I went on a different plane and they did not even want me to go on that plane. They did everything they could to keep me from going. And that is a fact. That is a fact.

You want to talk about partisanship, well, let us put the partisanship away. Let us do the business of the people. I want to tell you something, if this goes on much longer—the American people are fed up. They want a balanced budget, they want us to cut taxes, they want us to give future generations the economic opportunity that they are entitled to. They expect us to make the tough decisions, and if we continue this nonsense, they are going to say "a plague on both your houses," and they will be right. That means we have to stand tall and call them the way we see them, and we also have to be open and ready to deal with the President, but to deal with him honestly, and he has to deal with us honestly and not the political sloganeering.

So, Mr. President, I support the commitment to go forward, to extend, yes, and to continue spending for a limited period of time basically at the same rate for the next 2 weeks provided that the President says he agrees he is committed to balancing the budget using real numbers, using the Congressional Budget Office as the real referees, not my favorite guy or his favorite guy, not someone who is going to cook the books to disadvantage one side as opposed to the other, but an honest scorekeeper. The American people are entitled to that.

I ask the President of the United States, "You tell us why you have changed your mind now, why you want a new referee, your referee to call the game your way? Are you really serious about doing the business of the people and bringing in that impartial referee and getting down to doing the business of the people?" That is what they expect.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON). The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I want to commend the Senator from New York for his comments. They are right on. I think he hits the nail right on the head. This is about the future of our children. This is about balancing the budget.

I am glad as a member of the Finance Committee he took on all these assertions to talk about tax cuts for the rich. The Senator from New York is right. These are tax cuts for middle-income families.

The only thing that would not be targeted for tax cuts for middle-income families would be capital gains. The Senator from New York correctly said capital gains reductions are job-creating engines that employ middle-income families. So whether you are giving them a tax break or you are giving them an opportunity to get a job, it is targeted toward families of middle income.

We, obviously, do not do a very good job getting our message out. I keep hearing over and over again—I talk to folks from Pennsylvania who are in the Capitol, I talk to them as they call into my office, whatever the case may be. I explain to them what we do, what we are trying to accomplish here, and they say, "Why doesn't anybody report that?" Well, talk to the national media why they do not report what is in this bill.

The reason we are so passionate about sticking up for a balanced budget over the next 7 years and the reason we care so much about what we are doing here and why we invested all this time in putting this bill together is because we honestly believe that when we pass this into law, the American public will approve in overwhelming numbers what we do. If we thought this was bad policy, I can guarantee no one would be standing here taking on every sacred cow in Washington, DC.

It is amazing to me some suggest this is being done on our side for partisan political advantage. Let me assure you—and if you do not believe me, look at the poll—let me assure you, there is little partisan political advantage in trying to reform Medicare, in trying to reform Medicaid, in trying to make decisions on education. There is no partisan advantage here.

The advantage is it is the right thing for America, for our children, and for our future. This has nothing to do with politics. It has everything to do about the future of this country. It has everything to do about deeply held, passionate policy beliefs about what direction this country should take.

That is what we are debating here. I know this is all sort of seen from the outside as sort of a squabble between the President and Congress and Republicans and Democrats. I assure you that this is not partisan politics. This is a fundamental difference of opinion about what is right for America. We believe what is right for America, which is in the continuing resolution, is a balanced budget—not talking about it, not saying we like it, not saying that, gee, we would like to get there some day, but doing it. Doing it for our children.

I look up in the galleries and walk around here, and there are students around all the time. Sometimes I have to look down. I do not know how Members around here who keep voting for more and more spending, more deficits, more and more passing the buck to future generations, can stare at a kid today and say, "You pay the bill. I get the votes, you pay the bill." That is what is going on. It has been going on here on both sides of the aisle for 25 years. We are trying to say today: Enough. Enough. Let us do the right thing.

This is not hard, Mr. President. Balance the budget using real economic assumptions. How hard is this? You said you wanted to do it. Everything in this resolution, you have made public statements saying you want to do. You want to balance the budget in 7 years. You said that.

Now, I know promises do not mean as much down at the White House as they do up here. See, we believe our promises should be kept. Those of us who ran—and Senator ABRAHAM was here and the Presiding Officer, Senator THOMPSON, ran in 1994—made a promise. We said we were going to come to Washington and change this town, and we were going to, first, balance the budget. We happen to believe promises are made to be kept, not just to get elected. There is a difference here. My dad always told me you do not make promises to get what you want and then go do what you want. You make promises and you give your word. Remember when a handshake used to mean a contract in this country? You gave your word and that meant everything. We did not need all these lawyers filling out all these forms. You gave your word.

There was a day when people listened to a politician who gave them their word, and they actually believed them. Think about that. You watched him give a speech, and you actually believed what they were saying was actually what they were going to do. Nobody believes that anymore. No wonder we have politicians here and politicians down at the White House who just say whatever the polls tell them to say today. No wonder people are sick and tired of this place. No wonder they have no faith in our institutions. Promises do not mean anything.

I think promises do mean something. You ask me why we are stuck in cement over here or standing firm. Because promises mean something. We are going to stand firm. We are going to get a balanced budget. We will get a balanced budget over the next 7 years. We will. I do not know how long it will take, but we will because it is the right thing to do. It is the right thing to do.

The plan we put together, while I agree with it and I think it is an excellent plan, is not everything I want to do. We have a few things on the agriculture side we are not particularly crazy about. Would I do it differently? Absolutely, I would. But we did the best we could. Now, is all that stuff negotiable with the President? Of course, it is.

Mr. GREGG. If the Senator will yield for a question on that point, I was just listening to the President speak.

Mr. SANTORUM. I am sorry I missed it.

Mr. GREGG. He said—and maybe he does not understand this. He said that in order to sign this continuing resolution, "I would have to sign on to the Republican budget."

Now, as I understand this continuing, all it says is that he must agree, or should agree, to join with the Congress in promoting a proposal that reaches balance by 2002, the practical effect of that being he can put forward his proposal and we can put ours forward, and we can reach an agreement.

Is he right, or is my understanding of this right?

Mr. SANTORUM. Some might find this hard to believe, but the President is not being forthcoming in this issue. I know you find it incredible that he is not owning up to the facts.

I asked the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, that question earlier. By voting for or signing on to the Republican balanced budget plan, the specifics—the tax cuts, the reductions in the growth of Medicare, the changes in Medicare—does all that then come with signing this? He said, "No, it does not." It says two things. I will read you this. And remember, those of you listening, the President of the United States just said—would you repeat exactly what he said, or paraphrase it?

Mr. GREGG. Without your yielding to the floor——

Mr. SANTORUM. I yield for a question.

Mr. GREGG. He said that to sign this continuing resolution would mean that he would have to commit to the Republican budget proposal.

Mr. SANTORUM. Let me read what this continuing resolution says. Do you want to know who is telling the truth, what promises mean?

> Section 301: The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002 as scored by the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.
> The unified budget in subsection (a), shall be based on the most current economic and technical assumptions made by the Congressional Budget Office.

That is all it says.

Mr. GREGG. If the Senator will yield for another question.

Mr. SANTORUM. Yes.

Mr. GREGG. Therefore, when the President cited that to sign this continuing resolution, he would have to sign on to the Republican budget, he was wrong. What he should have said was, to sign this continuing resolution means I have to commit to a balanced budget by the year 2002, under any terms I want. That would have been his reason for rejecting this.

Mr. SANTORUM. That would be the only reason you would reject this.

Mr. GREGG. I will ask another question. Earlier today, I heard the Chief of Staff, who used to be the head of the OMB and the Budget Committee in the House, state that the reason they oppose this continuing resolution was because it meant massive cuts in the Medicare Program.

Now, it is my understanding—and I wish the Senator would clarify this for me—first, that this budget resolution deals with discretionary spending, am I not correct? And it deals with Medicare entitlement spending, and this continuing resolution has no impact of any nature on any Medicare spending that is presently occurring, because Medicare spending is an entitlement program, is that correct?

Mr. SANTORUM. The Senator from New Hampshire is exactly correct. To explain, a continuing resolution needs to be passed because we have not gotten it enacted here in the Congress or signed by the President. Discretionary spending—that means spending that is not mandatory, which we have to spend. These are programs that we have to appropriate money for every year. If we do not appropriate that money by October 1, we then have to pass a resolution to continue spending, because if we do not, no spending is permitted. That is on discretionary programs.

Medicare is not a discretionary program. Medicare is a mandatory program. That means the money is spent, whether we have a budget or not. And so when someone says that they will be signing off on reductions in Medicare by signing a continuing resolution, a spending bill, they either fundamentally misunderstand how Government works in this town—and I know the former chairman of the Budget Committee understands how the budget works—or there was a deliberate attempt to mislead and, I would go further, to scare seniors.

There is nothing here—I will read the operative part one more time:

> The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the year 2002, as scored by the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.

Enact legislation. It does not say enact Senate bill such and such, or enact the Republican reconciliation or budget bill. It has enact legislation. Very broad. It does not nail anybody down to anything.

Mr. GREGG. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. SANTORUM. I am happy to yield for a question.

Mr. GREGG. If I am to understand this correctly, when the Chief of Staff of the President comes out on the portico of the White House and says to the national press, "The reason we oppose this continuing is because it means cuts in Medicare," he either, one, does not understand how the continuing resolution works—which would be difficult to believe in light of his history as head of OMB and head of the Budget Committee—or alternatively, he is continuing this rather jingoistic theme of trying to scare seniors without substance, which appears to be the policy of this White House relative to this budget process, is that correct?

Mr. SANTORUM. I think the Senator from New Hampshire is correct. I finished last night reading Harry Truman's biography written by David McCullough. Every time I look at the current occupants of the White House and see them get up there and say these kinds of things and deliberately mislead to scare people—this is not enlightening. This is fear. This is just misleading people for fear.

This is from the White House. There are people all over the world who look on the White House as a center of freedom, as sort of this ground that democracy first took hold.

Here we are—have we reached that, have we really reached that low in this country that we cannot sit and have an honest discussion? Do you know what this continuing resolution asks for? An honest discussion. An honest discussion. That is all this is.

A balanced budget in 7 years, sit down and negotiate, using real numbers—not trumped-up numbers, not numbers that wish away problems, but real numbers. An honest discussion.

We have a President who will not even agree to an honest discussion on things he says he wants. We have a President who says he wants to balance the budget. We balance the budget. We want it balanced. We have a President that says he wants to end welfare as we know it. In the budget bill that we have, we end welfare as we know it—frankly, pretty close to what the President had suggested.

We have a lot of things in there that the President actually proposed himself. We really did reach out. I think we—as we did in the Senate bill—got 87 votes on the Senate floor for the welfare reform bill. I think we can get that many for this. We save the Medicare system, which, according to his trustees, his office, is going to go bankrupt in 6 years, 7 years.

He even suggested change. Sure, we can negotiate how much, what to do, but we both agree it has to be brought up. He wanted a middle-income tax cut for families. We provide it. You heard the Senator from New York, a middle-income tax cut for families.

If we were talking massive buildup in defense, huge tax cuts on the wealthy, slashing a bunch of programs, if we were miles apart on this thing, then I think we could have sort of the logjam we are in now. We would be miles apart. Folks, we are not miles apart.

For those who see this as sort of the reason we tried to get elected here, to try to bring this fiscal sanity to Washington and to see that the sides on this issue are so close, yet if you listen to the national media you would think that he is in California and we are in Maine and we are not even talking the same language.

But we are not that far apart. That is the frustrating thing. Not only are we not that far apart, but we are willing to negotiate to come closer.

I know the polls are bad. As I said before, we took on sacred cows. When you take on sacred cows, you have someone standing up at the House—at the White House—out there using that position to scare people, using the Presidency of the United States to scare 81-year-old people. Boy, the power of the White House, the bully pulpit. The moral compass for the world. We are now out to scare people who rely on Social Security and Medicare to make ends meet.

Mr. President, I want to turn now briefly to the Hollings amendment.

I know he has offered this amendment, and I know he sincerely feels very strongly about this.

I find it absolutely incredible for the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from North Dakota, who was just on the floor every day talking about how the Social Security are being used to "balance the budget."

No. 1, I do not know how you can stand here and talk about, through an accounting measure, the Social Security trust funds are being used when in fact nobody is taking the money out and using it. In fact, that money that is in the Social Security surplus, the trust fund, is being invested in Government bonds and earning interest, right now. And at the same time, right now, the President of the United States is raiding—raiding—the pension funds of Federal employees—raiding them. Not using them for accounting purposes to balance the budget, but literally reaching in there, taking the money out to pay for debt service—raiding the money. Not paying interest, taking the money, physically taking the money.

Now, I have heard a lot of demagoguery around here, but when you say we are in the right because we are not going to use the Social Security trust fund for accounting purposes to determine whether we have a balanced budget or not, that is one thing; but when you have your President at the same time you are making that argument literally raiding trust funds, raiding pension funds—it is like a CEO who is running a corporation and the bank will not lend him any more money. What does he do? He raids the pension fund. Do you know what happens to CEO's where banks will not lend them any more money and that CEO goes into the pension fund and raids the pension fund? They go to jail. They go to jail. We do not raid pension funds in this country. We have a Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation set up so they do not raid pension funds. Now we have all this whining and gnashing of teeth about using accounting measures to determine whether we balanced the budget on Social Security. And the President is raiding pension funds.

Where are the protestations? Where are the people grieving for the Federal employees who are having their pension funds raided? Where is the other side saying, "Oh, the President should not be doing this."

Mr. HOLLINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. Wait until I am done.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I protested.

Mr. SANTORUM. You had a chance to vote on that. Senator MOYNIHAN offered an amendment to the debt limit, and in the debt limit we had a provision in there saying we could not do that. We had a provision in there saying you could not raid pension funds to keep the debt going.

Guess what? No protestations over there. They voted to strip it out. And the President vetoed it.

Oh, yes, you can protest. Put the votes down. Put the votes down. Where are the protestations? Raiding pension funds, that is what we are doing.

Let me just summarize it. We have a President, a Chief of Staff of the White House, at the White House today, at the United States of America's White House, out there scaring seniors; at the same time, raiding seniors' pension funds, who are Federal employees. Do you know what they are telling them? Do you know what they are trying to do? "Please trust us, we know what we are doing. Please trust us, we know how to balance this budget. We are protecting you."

Give me a break. Come to the table. Let us work this out. This is an embarrassment. The more this goes on the more embarrassing it is going to get. You are not solving problems, Mr. President. It is time to be President, not to run for President. It is time to be President. It is time to solve problems.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. I am happy to yield for a question.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if we could get a unanimous consent and have a vote on this particular amendment. I do not know how much longer you would like to speak, but Senator MURRAY would like to speak for 6 minutes. Then we will vote on the Hollings amendment on a motion to table.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator MURRAY be granted 6 minutes and Senator SANTORUM 6 minutes, after which we proceed to a rollcall vote on a table. I ask it be in order at this point to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUMPERS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Mr. DOMENICI. Senator, I thought I had gone over and talked to the leader and I thought when I came to the floor, it had been agreed.

Senator MURRAY was the only one on your side that would speak before we voted on this, or I would not have imposed that. We have been on this for a long time. Your side has a lot of time.

How much time would you want? We have another amendment from your side, too, shortly, right now, on this issue. How much time would you need?

Mr. BUMPERS. Senator, I know you want to get this amendment disposed of. I do not want to be an impediment to it. I will take 8 minutes and remove my objection.

Mr. DOMENICI. Can we add 8 minutes for Senator BUMPERS and then proceed with the rest of my request?

Mr. SANTORUM. Give me 3 more minutes to respond.

Mr. DOMENICI. To be equal, we will add 3 minutes to Senator SANTORUM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask it be in order that I seek the yeas and nays on a motion to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. And do we have a motion to table, that the yeas and nays have been ordered on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays will be ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could I have it in order now, even though there is time, that I ask for the—I move to table.

I move to table and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, the Federal Government is now in its third day of shutdown, and just like 3 days ago, there certainly is no end in sight and it seems like we in Congress are destined to flounder for a couple of more days because the majority is insisting on debating a continuing resolution that the President has vowed he will veto.

Listening to the rhetoric of the last hour it seems to me this is more about putting somebody into somebody's face than it is about solving problems. It seems like it is more about drawing lines in the sand and calling names than it is in making sure that this country gets moving again.

I have to ask the question, why are we doing this? Why are we not putting together a proposal that we can all agree on, that will get the Government running again, restore public services, and put people back to work?

I heard my colleague from Vermont a short time ago say it does not take 15 pages of paper with a lot of additions. It only takes one sentence to get us back to work again.

I have to remind my colleagues the American people are tired and impatient. They want solutions, not politics and rhetoric. They want to know that Government works for them. They want to feel secure and have faith in their elected officials.

Unfortunately today they are probably watching us in disbelief. They cannot believe we are unable to solve the country's problems.

That concerns me. I want to move forward. I want Congress to get its act together and balance this budget. And the longer we take to do so, the more disaffected our constituents become. We just reinforce in their minds the belief that Congress is unaware of their real needs and concerns. They look at us and they say, "How can those people really understand how difficult it is for me to pay the rent, put food on the table for my kids, or take care of my elderly parents? All they can do in DC is whine and squabble about where they sat on an airplane."

As we muse about Presidential politics and other hi-jinks, we better not forget what this Government shutdown really means. We have all heard the numbers. We know that 30,000 people a day are unable to apply for Medicare. And we know this Government shutdown is costing us $200 million a day in lost productivity.

But the shutdown comes a little closer to home when we put human faces on those numbers. One woman, an attorney from Seattle, called my office yesterday. She is trying to adopt a child in China. For months she has been filling out paperwork and dealing with bureaucratic redtape.

She finally got her plane ticket but because the United States Consulate in China is closed, she cannot get her baby's visa. So she was forced to postpone her trip.

She has no idea when she will finally be united with her new baby daughter. She is a real person. And she is hurting because of what we are doing on this floor.

Last weekend I was in central Washington for the opening of the Yakima Valley Veterans Center. Many of the people I talked to wanted to celebrate the opening of the new center, but because of the pending Government shutdown they were too worried about whether or not they were going to receive their veterans benefits. Today's Spokesman-Review paper ran an article about a young man in Spokane, WA, who quit a stable computer-based job to take his dream job. He was going to become a physical fitness director aboard a cruise ship. The young man was offered the job unexpectedly on November 4. He scrambled to get his paperwork taken care of and a passport in time to sail by November 25.

Unfortunately, this Government is shut down. He cannot get his passport and time is growing short.

I want to read that young man's words into the RECORD. They could not be more to the point. He said:

> This is a dream in my heart that finally manifested. The Government is getting in the way of people's dreams. I've got airplane tickets. Everything is settled. Everything but this last hurdle.

These few people provide just a few examples of what a Government shutdown really means. They are angry and concerned. They have bills to pay, families to care for, business to conduct, and dreams to fulfill. Instead, we are telling them, "not now."

So, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to act wisely. Let us move on. Let us put together an honest and reasonable continuing resolution that will get this country back on track.

My view is pretty straightforward. As a Member of the Budget Committee and the Appropriations Committee I know I have a job to do. The job is to pass a budget plan and 13 appropriations bills. So far, this Congress has done neither. In fact, just yesterday the House failed to pass the Interior bill for the third time. There are five other bills that have not even made it to this floor yet.

Instead of getting our work done, we are debating a bill we know will be vetoed. It will be vetoed because it stacks the deck against working families and senior citizens in favor of unneeded tax breaks. We are not moving the process forward one bit; we are ensuring that it will go nowhere.

I say it is time to get our work done. We can balance the budget. We can stay true to our priorities. And we can do it without interrupting the lives of regular, everyday people in our States.

All we need to do is pass a clean interim spending bill and then get on with our business of finishing the overall budget.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I saw an article this morning where the Speaker of the House was asked, "What is sacred about 7 years?"

I thought that was a good question. I have been curious about that myself.

And the Speaker said, "Well, it was just intuition. All major decisions are based on intuition."

I do not like the idea of one man's intuition determining the fate of the country. His intuition may not match mine. It may not match anybody's. Frankly, I think intuition is always a fine thing, if a man is getting ready to make an investment. I think his intuition is important in a lot of ways. But when it comes to putting in concrete the time in which the Congress will have to balance the budget, I do not want anybody's intuition. I would like to see some hard figures.

In this particular case, this amendment deals with Social Security. Everybody says we are going to balance the budget by the year 2002. If everything went swimmingly, according to every projection, we would still, in the year 2002, have used $650 billion in Social Security trust funds.

I am not quarreling with that. The Republicans can come back and say, "You did it. This President has done it."

That is all well and true. But it still means there is $650 billion that was used that has to be paid back, just as certainly as the national debt has to be paid back.

I think I have to say the tax cut in this bill is the most repugnant part of it. What in the name of all that is good and holy are we doing cutting taxes $245 billion in the name of deficit reduction? We tried that in 1981.

The Washington Post editorial this morning, which has been cited a number of times here today as though it came right out of the Holy Bible, talks about how the Democrats have been demagoging the Medicare issue, and that Medicare really is in trouble, and that the cost of Medicare continues to go up. That is true. I do not quarrel with the idea that the Medicare system is in considerable trouble and needs to be fixed. I think $270 billion in cuts out of Medicare over the next 7 years is unacceptable.

The thing I find most unacceptable about it is that it is being used to provide a $245 billion tax cut. And for whom? The wealthiest people in America who have not asked for it. But the people who really need it do not get it.

A Post editorial this morning obliquely suggested that the addition of $3 trillion worth of debt during Ronald Reagan and George Bush Presidencies was somehow or other Congress' fault, with no mention of the fact that neither one of them could ever find their veto pen when they were in the President's office. President Reagan never vetoed one single spending bill, Mr. President—not one. All he did was send out millions of letters saying, you know, "I cannot spend a dime that Congress does not appropriate." Congress cannot appropriate anything unless they have 67 votes to overcome his veto. But he looked through his desk drawer time and again and could never find his veto pen.

The U.S. Government now owes four times as much money as it did when he took office. It took 200 years to get to $1 trillion. It took 12 years to get to $4 trillion. The Nobel award-winning economist at MIT said it was the most irresponsible economic policy in the history of the world.

On that tax cut, Mr. President, I made this point yesterday, but I am going to make it every day that I can get the floor. You hear this unctuous, solemn business about the tax credit for our children. There are 5 million households in this country that have 11 million children in them. With those 11 million children and those 5 million households, the parents—not the children—will get a partial or full $500 tax credit. There are 8 million households in this country with 11 million children that will not get one single thin dime.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUMPERS. You bet.

Mr. SANTORUM. Why would 8 million households not get it?

Mr. BUMPERS. Because they have not paid income tax.

Mr. SANTORUM. Thank you.

Mr. BUMPERS. A family with a man and a wife and three children making $25,000 a year do not pay any income tax. A man and wife with three children making $100,000 will pay $10,000 to $20,000. They get the full $1,500 refund. The people who need it, the man and wife with three children making $25,000 a year, do not get one red cent.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUMPERS. Yes.

Mr. SANTORUM. Does a family of three making $100,000 a year qualify for the EITC?

Mr. BUMPERS. Do they qualify for what?

Mr. SANTORUM. Does a family of three earning $100,000 qualify for the earned income tax credit?

Mr. BUMPERS. Certainly. I hope so.

Mr. SANTORUM. Does a family making $320,000 a year qualify?

Mr. BUMPERS. They used to qualify for it. I do not know whether they are going to or not. That is another $32 billion.

We are not just depriving people of an education. We are not just depriving people of school lunches. We are not just putting another million children in poverty under the welfare bill. We are not just savaging the Medicaid Program for the poorest children in America to have health care. We are also savaging a program that even Ronald Reagan said was the best thing that was ever invented to keep people off welfare. We said "no." No. If you are working for $4.25 an hour and trying to keep body and soul together and stay off welfare, in the past we have said, if you will stay off welfare, we will give you a couple of grand at the end of the year. We are savaging that program.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania on one thing. I do not like taking pension funds. Do you know why we are taking pension funds? Because the Senator from Pennsylvania will not send a debt ceiling to the President that simply said we spent the money, let us pay for it. No. You want to put habeas corpus and regulatory reform on the debt ceiling, of all things. Of course the President vetoed it. I would never have voted for him again if he had not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SANTORUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, just by way of quickly responding to the earned income tax credit under the conference report that will be coming out, no one, with the exception of families who have no children, no family that has children will get less money under it than they would have gotten under current law. No family will get less money under the earned income tax credit next year than they would have under current law. Some will get more because some qualify also for the tax credit for children. That is in the bill.

So do not talk about slashing the EITC, [the earned income tax credit], for working families. We do not. In fact, the increase that is projected that is in law under the President's 1993 Budget Act—those people at least get that much, and some will get more. Particularly families who are in the $15,000 to $20,000 to $25,000 range will actually get more because some of them actually do pay taxes.

I will be happy to yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, what is the situation on time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes 20 seconds.

Mr. THOMAS. The other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No time.

Mr. THOMAS. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, it would be interesting, would not it, to look in on this recent conversation, this recent debate if you came from somewhere and you knew nothing about the background of what was going on here? I suppose you would say, "Gosh. What is this all about? What is the issue here?" We are talking about all kinds of things. We are talking about Medicare, slashing Medicare, when in fact it does not slash Medicare. We are talking about raising premiums on Medicare when in fact it does not raise premiums at all. They stay where they are.

You would say, "Gosh. What is happening? What is this?" You would hear this morning the Senator from Nebraska saying this resolution is ridiculous. It deals with balancing the budget. I think you would go on to say there are some principles. What is ridiculous about a principle of balancing a budget that this body has not balanced for 30 years?

It would be interesting to sort of sum up the years that the opposition on that side of the aisle has been in this place and never has balanced a budget. They talked about it. They say now we are for a balanced budget. For 30 years they have not balanced the budget.

You would say, "Gosh. What is going on here?" Everyone who has risen has said, "I am for balancing the budget." And it has not happened. I guess they would say, "What is wrong?" People who ran in the last election particularly said we have a priority to balance the budget. That is what we are talking about doing here.

I guess you might also be surprised at how difficult it would be if you were a newcomer looking at it, and saying, "Gosh. What should be so difficult about balancing the budget?" You do it in your family, and I do it in my family. You do it in my business because you have to. Do you do it in government? Is that not financially and fiscally responsible as we move into a new century? Is it not responsible to balance the budget rather than continuing to charge it to your children and your grandchildren? Is that what it is about? If that is the issue, why are we talking about all of these other things?

A balanced budget is not extraneous. Someone rose this morning and said, "Oh, gosh. This continuing resolution has extraneous materials on it." Balancing the budget is, after all, the key issue. All we are asking is that the President certify that in 7 years he will join us in balancing the budget, and use the Congressional Budget Office numbers that the President said in his State of the Union Message we all needed to use so we all work in the same place. It is not a new idea.

The minority leader, who a short while ago objected to the idea of CBO, stood up not 2 weeks ago and said we all will do whatever accommodation to use CBO numbers.

So I think you would say, gosh, what is it? You would probably soon recognize that part of it is philosophical. There is a difference in view. There is a legitimate view among liberals that we ought to have more Government and more spending. That is a legitimate view. I do not share it. I do not think the majority of people here share it. Nevertheless, there is a populace view that is there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. SNOWE). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

So the motion to table the amendment (No. 3056) was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOTT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Order in the Senate, Madam President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chamber will be in order. May we have order in the Chamber, please?

The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, life does not often provide second chances, but the Congress is giving President Clinton just that. With this continuing resolution, we are providing the opportunity for him to right the terrible wrong committed by vetoing the previous continuing resolution and shutting down the Government. This resolution will allow the U.S. Government to reopen and remain open while Congress and the President resolve outstanding issues on the remaining appropriations bills and the Balanced Budget Act.

As a Presidential candidate, and early in his Presidency, President Clinton told the American people that he wanted to balance the budget. Here is his chance to fulfill that pledge, since he has failed to send a balanced budget plan to Congress. President Clinton said he wanted to use Congressional Budget Office numbers. Here is his chance to commit to that. President Clinton recently stated that he raised taxes too much. The Congress will give him a chance to correct that mistake and fulfill his pledge for a middle-class tax break.

Madam President, President Clinton's veto of the previous continuing resolution brought the Federal Government to a standstill. Here is his chance to right that wrong. President Clinton must put aside his reelection concerns and focus on his responsibility to govern. By agreeing to this continuing resolution, he can do the right thing, restore full Government services and put the hundreds of thousands of Federal workers who are facing the holidays without a paycheck back to work immediately.

Congress and the President previously approved a continuing resolution which funded the Government through November 13. The Congress sought to extend it earlier this week, for the purpose of avoiding a shutdown of the Federal Government. We are giving President Clinton another chance to keep the Government operating and to fulfill his promise to balance the budget.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DASCHLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate minority leader.

AMENDMENT NO. 3057

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, subject to the majority leader's intention, as I understand it, we may set this bill aside. But given the informal agreement we had this morning, I now send the second Democratic amendment to the desk—I guess it is the third Democratic amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] proposes an amendment numbered 3057.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

Section 106(C) of Public Law 104-31 is amended by striking "November 13, 1995" and inserting "December 22, 1995.

SEC. 2. (a) The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002.

(b) The unified balanced budget in subsection (a) must assure that:

(1) Medicare and Medicaid are not cut to pay for tax breaks; and

(2) Any possible tax cuts shall go only to American families making less than $100,000.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

APPROPRIATIONS BILLS

Mr. HATFIELD. Madam President, I would just like to give the body a brief report on the process of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and where our bills are at the moment.

I would like to, first of all, indicate that the Senate Appropriations Committee reported all 13 bills to the floor by September 27. The Senate has acted upon 12 of those 13 bills. I, first of all, say they were reported by September 15, and we acted upon 12 of the 13 in the body by September 27. Right at the moment, four of those bills have been signed into law by the President. We have concluded the conference on three more, and we expect to conclude our conference on VA-HUD and the District of Columbia within either hours or within the next day or two.

So we can say that that is the movement.

There is one bill that has eluded us, and that is the Labor-HHS appropriations bill upon which the Senate has not acted. I want to say further that as we consider the continuing resolution, if this one is passed and vetoed or if the next one is passed and agreed to, we have to have a benchmark in relation to how we are going to fund Labor-HHS.

Up until now, the other side of the aisle has not permitted us to move to bring up the Labor-HHS to be considered here on the floor.

So I think in order that we as the members of the Appropriations Committee—I speak at least for myself—I would like to be able to conclude our job on the Senate side. It has to go to conference, of course, with the House-passed bill.

I would like to propound a unanimous-consent agreement at this time. I ask unanimous-consent that the majority leader, upon consultation with the minority leader, be authorized to call up H.R. 2127, the Labor-HHS appropriations bill for 1996.

Mrs. BOXER. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. BOXER. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. There are a number of provisions that are troubling to a number of Senators who believe in a woman's right to choose, and that is one of the reasons why we have had trouble agreeing to bringing up the bill. So I would have to object, unless I knew that those provisions were being handled. So I would object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1996—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 2126 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2126) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1996, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of November 15, 1995.)

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, it is my understanding that this will not take any great length of time. I am also advised that about 400,000 civilians, who might be affected by the Government shutdown, are affected by this bill. Maybe we can pass this bill and get it down to the President.

Unless I misunderstand it, it would be about half the total. It seems to me that it is something we should do as quickly as we can. I do not know the President's intentions with reference to this bill. At least it will be another major appropriations bill that we can send to the President.

I also understand that we have the legislative appropriations bill and the Treasury, Post Office bill, which have been completed, which I think would be sent to the President if there was some indication that he would sign those bills. Again, that would help in some areas, and some of the people who are not essential could come back to work.

In the meantime, I will be discussing the pending legislation with the Democratic leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, this is acceptable to our side. I think, also, the foreign operations bill is prepared to be sent. So we are making progress on some of these bills. I think it is important that we get as many done as we can. Some of them are going to be vetoed. This may be one of them. I think it is important to keep the process moving along, and this will accommodate that need.

I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Madam President, I might state, for the Senate's knowledge, that we have 2½ hours. I do not think we will use the whole 2½ hours. I expect the vote to take place some time right after 6, depending on who else might want to speak.

Just to set the record straight, I had reminded the majority leader of the number of people in the Department of Defense that were affected by the furlough process, and it was our estimate that it was approximately 400,000 that could be affected. I am told that it is somewhere around 260,000 that actually have been furloughed so far. He was correct that approximately 400,000 would be affected by the bill in the long run.

We believe it is in the best interest of all concerned to get the bill passed. I am hopeful that we will get word from the President that he will sign it so we can expedite delivery of the bill to the President.

This is now the conference report on H.R. 2126, the Department of Defense Appropriations Act for 1996. I first want to start off by applauding the House for the expeditious move on this bill today, and I appreciate the support of both leaders for allowing us to bring the bill to the Senate now.

Senator Inouye and I have sought to move this conference report prior to the commencement of the fiscal year on October 1. The original conference report, however, was rejected by the House. That resulted in a substantial delay in bringing the bill before the Senate, and I take part of the responsibility for that. We have been negotiating for a period of time on one particular issue.

Before proceeding further, however, I do want to express my high regard and thanks to the chairman of the House Defense Subcommittee, Congressman Bill Young, for the work he has done on this bill. This has been the first year that he has been the chairman of that subcommittee, and he was the chairman of our conference, and he has shepherded this large and complex bill through the House and then the conference with great skill. His determination to meet the needs of the men and women of the Armed Forces shows throughout the legislation.

I think Members should become aware of this bill because it is a very different defense appropriations bill.

I also recognize the hard work and cooperation of the ranking member on the House side, Congressman Jack Murtha. Senator Inouye and I have worked with Mr. Young and Mr. Murtha for many years now, and we appreciate their willingness to work with us on the tough issues in this bill this year.

Madam President, the conference report before the Senate now closely matches the bill previously filed under the report No. 104261. That report has been available to all Senators since September 25. On that basis, I do not intend to take the Senate's time to detail the contents of the report. Instead, I want to speak to the Senate today on why we need this bill now and why I feel the President should sign this bill.

This pending bill provides about $1.7 billion more for defense than was appropriated in the fiscal year 1995. Taking inflation into account, this amount represents a decline in real spending for the Pentagon. That is the reality of this bill. It really continues, in terms of real dollars, a downward trend in real defense spending for another year.

This further decline in real defense spending comes in the face of increased commitments of the United States overseas, increased deployments overseas, and the determination by the Joint Chiefs that we need more money for modernization for the Department of Defense.

Let me speak first about those overseas deployments. Today, there are 241,000 U.S. military personnel permanently stationed overseas. That does not reflect their dependents. This is military personnel. It also does not reflect the contingency deployment to Bosnia, Iraq, or Haiti. These are the day-to-day demands on the men and women of the Armed Forces. They face these demands constantly.

Last September, we took a trip and met with some of our military people in the British Empire, in London. We found, in many instances, that our pilots, for instance, have been deployed in several different places within 1 year. We are stretching these people to the nth degree almost daily now, in terms of the demands that face the Armed Forces in the United States and throughout the world.

Added to these actual permanent commitments are the additional unplanned and unauthorized contingency missions that the Commander in Chief has sent our military people on.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a table that shows the current overseas military deployment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Active Duty, U.S. Military Personnel Overseas

241,000 soldiers, sailors, Air Force personnel and Marines including:

212,000—ashore
29,000—afloat

U.S. Military Personnel in Europe and European Waters

121,000 soldiers, sailors, Air Force personnel, and Marines including:

76,000—in Germany
12,800—in the United Kingdom
11,500—in Italy
7,400—afloat
3,100—in Turkey
2,800—in Spain
2,000—in Iceland
1,700—in Belgium
1,000—in Portugal
734—in The Netherlands
620—in Macedonia
490—in Greece

These totals include the following ongoing operations:

Deny Flight—Bosnia No Fly Zone
Provide Promise—humanitarian airlifts into Bosnia
Sharp Guard—sanctions enforcement in the Adriatic Sea
Able Sentry—Macedonia border observers
Provide Comfort—humanitarian aid to Kurds in Iraq

U.S. Military Personnel in East Asia, the Pacific Region and Pacific Waters

92,000 soldiers, sailors, Air Force personnel, and marines including:

39,600—in Japan
35,800—in Korea
15,600—afloat
320—in Australia

These totals include the following ongoing operations:

Joint Task Force Full Accounting—to determine the fate of American POW's and MIA's
Cope North and Annualex—U.S. and Japanese forces naval and air defense exercises
Foal Eagle—U.S. and Korean forces training exercise

U.S. Military Personnel in the Near East, North Africa and South Asia and Related Waters

6,100 soldiers, sailors, Air Force Personnel, and marines including:

1,400—afloat
1,200—in Egypt
1,050—in Saudi Arabia
900—on Diego Garcia
460—in Bhrain
435—in Kuwait

These totals include the following ongoing operations:

Southern Watch—Southern Iraq No Fly Zone
Vigilant Sentinel—deterring another Iraq invasion of Kuwait
Arabian Gulf Maritime Interdiction Operations—enforcing U.N. sanctions against Iraq
Bright Star—U.S. and Egyptian forces training in Egypt

U.S. Military Personnel in the Western Hemisphere and Related Waters

17,000 soldiers, sailors, Air Force personnel, and Marines including:

8,000—in Panama
4,600—at Guantanamo Bay Naval Station, Cuba
2,500—in Haiti
1,400—afloat

U.S. Military Personnel in Sub-Saharan Africa and Related Waters

3,500 soldiers sailors, Air Force personnel and Marines.

Mr. STEVENS. This is a very interesting chart. I invite Members of the Senate to look at that. I know we cannot print the map. I will not ask to put it in the Record.

We have soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines in Germany, in the United Kingdom, Italy, afloat on the seven seas, in Turkey, Spain, Iceland, Belgium, Portugal, Netherlands, Macedonia, and Greece.

We are continuing such as: Deny Flight to the Bosnia no-fly zone; Provide Promise to the humanitarian airlifts in Bosnia; Sharp Guard—this is the sanctions enforcement of the Adriatic Sea; Able Sentry to the Macedonia border; Provide Comfort and humanitarian aid to the Kurds. We have soldiers in Japan, Korea, and afloat in the Pacific.

We have 320 in Australia. We have a whole series of movements going on with regard to North Korea.

In the Near East, Asia, South Asia, 1,400 are afloat; 1,200 are in Egypt; soldiers and sailors and marines are in Saudi Arabia and Diego Garcia, Bahrain, and Kuwait. Southern Watch, the no-fly zone in Iraq, and another deployment to deter a further Iraqi invasion in Kuwait has our men and women serving where they are needed. The Arabian Gulf Maritime Interdiction Operations that enforce the U.N. sanctions on Iraq, and Bright Star, the United States and Egyptian forces that are training in Egypt are just another example.

We have additional forces in Panama and Guantanamo Bay Naval Station in Cuba, Haiti, and another 1,400 afloat down in the Western Hemisphere and related waters. Another 3,500 soldiers and sailors and Air Force personnel are in the sub-Sahara in Africa and other areas in that part of the world.

Now, Madam President, that ought to tell anyone that we are dealing with a situation now that has never been faced before in peacetime. We are the last superpower in the world, and we are acting like one. We have our Armed Forces deployed around the former Yugoslavia, in the Caribbean, in Southwest Asia, and Korea. I am told by the Pentagon, we have 14 ongoing contingency operations.

Just last week five Americans died in Saudi Arabia, the victims of another terrorist attack. Our forces, as I said, are in Saudi Arabia and will remain there because of our commitments for some time.

In my judgment, we cannot have it both ways. We cannot be the world's only remaining superpower and continuously reduce the amount of money available to the men and women who carry out these chores for us around the world. We cannot respond to every world crisis, to every humanitarian crisis with this military force. These forces have to be carefully allocated, and it has to be thought over where we send them, Madam President.

The President has committed United States military personnel to operations in Somalia, Rwanda, the Middle East, Northeast Asia, the Caribbean, and now to the Balkans. But nevertheless, this President has consistently pressed to reduce our military forces, reduce the money for modernization, and reduce the spending for defense.

Madam President, this is a bill that will determine whether or not that stops. Despite its downward trend, we have to turn the corner on modernization in this bill.

We have critics of this bill who say we have too much money. One is the President of the United States. We significantly increased the amount of money that is available to procurement and research and development for the Department of Defense in this bill. We did so to meet the specific priorities identified by the service chiefs themselves. Every significant procurement item in this bill is included in the military's modernization plans except the B–2. I am including the F–22, the F–18, the LHD–7 amphibious assault ship, the third DGG–51 destroyer, the Army's M1–A2 tank upgrade, the Comanche Scout helicopter and multiyear procurement of the Longbow Apache.

We did not come up with these programs. They were not added and thought up by me. The Pentagon has requested them.

Now, what we have done with our modernization initiative is to save taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars over the next 10 years.

Think of this: In the LHD–7 alone, we are going to save $700 million by continuing that procurement in 1996 rather than postponing it for 4 years. Now, by continuing the ongoing line, we will have another LHD–7 and save $700 million.

More importantly, we are providing equipment to meet military needs now for the people who are being deployed overseas. We are doing this now rather than waiting 10 years to try and modernize the equipment that they are currently using.

Some in the House claim this bill exceeded the amounts requested by the military and the Joint Chiefs. What we have learned since we passed this bill in September is we actually did not go far enough.

Recent press reports indicate that General Shalikashvili's chairman's program assessment for the Department's 1997 budget has determined we should be spending about $60 billion for procurement. The budget presented to the Congress by the President was $39 billion; this bill is $44 billion for procurement. We have increased the President's request, but we are still considerably below the amount that is listed as being the minimum by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs.

The Chairman's assessment—and this is General Shalikashvili's chairman's program assessment—reflects the decisions by our national military leaders on what we need to meet our defense obligations and to provide the men and women of the Armed Forces the equipment they need to minimize casualties.

Let me add, in my judgment, this is not a political document. I am talking about the Chairman's program assessment. Every member of the Joint Chiefs and every vice chief was appointed by this administration. I, for one, am willing to accept and advocate their judgment.

On this matter, I ask unanimous consent that recent articles from the Washington Post and the Los Angeles Times be printed in the record following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. STEVENS. Madam President, for these reasons alone, in my judgment, the President has no alternative but to sign this bill. In our work on this bill the conferees have sought, to the maximum extent possible, to accommodate the concerns of the administration on this bill.

Now, we referred repeatedly to the statements of the administration policy at the request of the Joint Chiefs as we accommodated the President's and his appointees' priorities. In the case of funding for the Nunn-Lugar program, we preserve $300 million for 1996. We have sustained $195 million for the technology reinvestment program, which was a program terminated by the House.

One exception was that the conference provided $493 million to provide one last consideration of additional production of the B–2 bomber. The Senate bill did not, when we passed the bill here before, include funding for the B–2.

We have not voted on the B–2 since the control of the Senate changed to our side of the aisle. The House sustained funding for the B–2 on three separate votes. They were adamant that this bill come back approving their position on the B–2.

While I have some concerns about the affordability of the B–2 in the next few years, this funding permits the President to make a final decision in the 1997 budget. He, of course, has the right to ask for a rescission if he does not want the money in this bill.

An important initiative included in this bill and supported intensely by Secretary Perry is funding for contingency operations. This year, we had to pass a mid-year rescissions bill that realigned over $3 billion to pay for overseas contingency operations. That was because they were not funded in the bill that covered 1995.

In this bill, for the first time, we are providing money at the beginning of a fiscal year for these operations. Madam President, $647 million is funded in this bill for operations in Iraq and Southwest Asia. The Department readily concedes that no moneys were requested in the President's budget for 1996 to pay for these ongoing missions. Everyone agrees we must pay the bills, and we decided to include the money now rather than wait for some supplemental process next year.

Madam President, in my judgment, as I said, this bill must be enacted into law. Looming ahead of us is the potential deployment of United States military forces to Bosnia. This bill makes no provision for that deployment but expresses the strong concern of the conferees about the merit of this mission and the belief that the President should consult and seek the authorization of Congress for any such deployment.

Simply put, however, without the money in this bill, there is no way that the Department of Defense or the President could send 25,000 ground troops to Bosnia.

We cannot have it both ways, Madam President. We cannot be against this bill and also want to send troops to Bosnia without money.

In the view of this Senator, I cannot conceive of the circumstances where the Senate would vote to endorse a deployment of United States forces to Bosnia if there were no funds available to support that mission. This is especially true if those funds were not available for the Department through the 1996 bill that we have before the Senate now.

According to the Pentagon, a full-year mission to Bosnia will cost in excess of $2 billion, and only with the money that is in this bill could that be possible.

Again, we are not crossing that bridge. I, for one, do not support that deployment. However, I do believe we must be up front about it. Let me point out that those who do want to support a deployment of forces to Bosnia ought to realize it would not be possible but for the funding and the way the money is divided in this bill for the functions of the Pentagon.

Let me close with this, Madam President. I hope we can sustain the long-standing tradition of bipartisan action on these defense issues. This bill poses no severe policy issues. It provides funding consistent with the congressional budget resolution and the Appropriations Committee's 602(b) allocation to this subcommittee for the Department of Defense.

Senator INOUYE and I have fought to present this bill on a nonpartisan basis and this conference report reflects that determination. The cooperation and partnership of my friend from Hawaii is still a very essential ingredient to this bill. I have worked with him in the past, and he with me. We have rotated as being chairman of this subcommittee. I continue to thank him for his work and his commitment to the people in the armed services.

I would like to recognize the work of the subcommittee staff. It is a very interesting staff, which enjoys substantial stability as far as professional competence is concerned. They are professional staff. The Senate has benefited from this approach, in my opinion. Jay Kimmit, Peter Lennon, Mary Marshall, John Young, and Mazie Mattson have been stalwarts on the committee staff for several years.

Some of them I brought on the staff when I was chairman before. The Senator from Hawaii maintained them as professional staff, and we have continued with them. They are real professionals.

With the transition this year, Jim Morhard and Sid Ashworth have come from the minority. Susan Hogan and Justin Wheddle have joined the subcommittee staff. All have made contributions to the bill and to the subcommittee. This has been especially true during the conference.

In addition, we have had the assistance of two detailees, Mr. Joe Fenglar and Ms. Sujata Millick.

I might point out, in 1982 Charlie Houy joined the staff of the subcommittee when I was the chairman. His counsel to Senator INOUYE and the members of the subcommittee is invaluable. He now works with Senator INOUYE. It shows the professionalism that we all still value in our relationships. His contribution is invaluable and it is a pleasure to work with him in this new assignment as the minority chief clerk.

Madam President, this is a good bill. I do think it will meet the needs of the men and women of the Armed Forces and our national security. One of the reasons it is a good bill is because of the continued assistance that I have from my good friend, the chief of the majority staff for the subcommittee, Steve Cortese, who is here with me today.

Our bill passed with a strong bipartisan support in the House. In my judgment, the Senate should adopt this bill now and permit the work of the Department of Defense to move forward. The majority leader has made the decision to bring it up now because of its impact on those who have been furloughed under the existing hiatus. I, too, hope the President will sign this bill if we get it to him as soon as possible.

PENTAGON LEADERS URGE ACCELERATED 50 PERCENT BOOST IN PROCUREMENT

(By Bradley Graham)

The uniformed leaders of the armed forces, worried about aging weapons and equipment after a decade of declining procurement, have recommended a roughly 50 percent jump in spending on purchases over the next two years.

Clinton administration plans call for spreading the same rise over four years. But top military officers are skeptical about ever seeing all the money, noting that past projections have rarely been realized.

So to highlight what they see as an urgent problem, the military chiefs have asked that the Defense Department set a goal of boosting annual defense procurement from about $40 billion at present to $60 billion by fiscal 1998, not 2000 as the administration has proposed. "We now don't expect it to go up like the projection shows it will. It never has before, I don't expect it to now," said Adm. William A. Owens, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. "And secondly, 2000 is too late.

"So our view is, you have to get to $60 billion as soon as you can, and 1998 would be a good year."

The recommendation was included in a budget assessment submitted last month by Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to Defense Secretary William J. Perry. It reflected heightened concern about a potential erosion of military capabilities unless purchases are accelerated. It also marked a shift in focus from last year, when the Pentagon, intent on shoring up the current readiness of military units, reduced procurement to cover higher-than-expected operational and maintenance costs. Procurement spending has fallen to its lowest level since 1950, forcing the military services to defer buys of jet fighters, helicopters, ships, trucks and other assets to replace earlier models entering, in some cases, their fourth or even fifth decade of use.

"We are significantly underfunded in the procurement line," Owens said. "Our thrust is to say we must do something, we've got to fix it."

He said the military chiefs are concerned not just about low procurement but a rising "bow wave"—the piling up of postponed programs.

At the same time, Owens indicated the message from the chiefs was not intended to be confrontational or divisive with the Pentagon's civilian leadership, and may have been aimed less at Perry than at the military services themselves. By committing all the chiefs to an ambitious new procurement goal, the memorandum is especially useful to Shalikashvili and Owens in their nascent effort to exercise more central discipline over individual service plans.

The memo, which represents the consensus view of the chiefs and vice chiefs of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps as well as regional commanders in chief, is said by Pentagon officials to be short on details about just how to bolster procurement and on what to spend the extra funds. "It's a broad statement, expressing a broad sense of concern," said a senior defense official. "But the details get a little thin."

Shalikashvili makes clear the chiefs do not expect the added funds for modernization to come from higher overall defense spending but rather through cuts in some programs under development and other savings. Even with a Republican-controlled Congress committed to boosting the defense budget, the military leaders are assuming little if any growth in military spending.

Nor are the chiefs suggesting reversing the priority given last year to readiness over procurement—that is, draining funds from the operational and maintenance accounts that support current readiness to pay for more modernization. Rather, the biggest adjustments proposed in the Shalikashvili memo would involve cutting back on competing service programs in such development areas as theater missile defense and unmanned aerial vehicles and reducing modeling and simulation activities.

Even so, these recommended savings would not come close to providing the roughly $20 billion increase in annual procurement the chiefs would like to see between now and 1998. "We acknowledge the answers are not all there," Owens said.

But he expressed confidence that substantially more funds for procurement can be found by eliminating redundant systems, embracing economical high-tech innovations and realizing Pentagon plans to farm out more defense activities to the private sector. Significantly, the chiefs have decided not to look for more savings by shrinking troop levels below the 1.45 million active duty service members called for in the administration's plan.

In its 1996 budget proposal to Congress, the administration provided for $39 billion in military procurement, a drop of 71 percent in inflation-adjusted dollars from the 1985 peak. House and Senate defense appropriation committees have tentatively agreed to raise procurement to $43 billion, but their conference report has yet to win floor approval.

The administration's five-year budget plan envisions a 47 percent increase in modernization spending between 1996 and 2001. But much of that is not projected to materialize until the turn of the century—and assumes still uncertain savings from military base closings and reforms in Pentagon buying procedures. Responding to Shalikashvili in an Oct. 24 memo, Perry agreed that $60 billion in annual procurement "is an appropriate goal" and offered "to work closely with you to accelerate" reaching it.

But Shalikashvili's initiative, known formally as the chairman's program assessment, has come late in the 1997 budget cycle. A final defense budget proposal is due at the White House next month. Perry suggested major adjustments in Pentagon plans would have to wait until next year and depend largely on what more the services have to offer. "I will be particularly interested in seeing your specific program recommendations for achieving efficiencies and funding reductions in programs of lower priority from a warfighting perspective," the secretary wrote. For the chairman of the Joint Chiefs to be weighing into the Pentagon budget debate with his assessment is indicative of an increasingly assertive Joint Chiefs' role in coordinating individual service plans and articulating a consensus view of military requirements. The Shalikashvili memo emerged from the deliberations of the Joint Requirements Oversight Council, a panel headed by Owens and including the services' vice chiefs. Over the past year and a half, Owens has strengthened the panel's role in formulating common investment objectives and reducing overlap among service programs.

JOINT CHIEFS SEEK MORE FUNDS TO UPDATE ARMS

(By Art Pine)

WASHINGTON—Reflecting growing concern over recent reductions in defense spending, the nation's top military leaders have warned that the Pentagon must boost its budget for weapon modernization sooner than planned or risk eroding military preparedness.

In a memo to Defense Secretary William J. Perry, the military service chiefs recommend increasing the modernization budget to $60 billion a year by fiscal 1998, rather than fiscal 2000, as currently anticipated. The budget now stands at $39 billion.

The unusual move by Gen. John M. Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the heads of the four individual services, is intended to serve as a warning flag, both to the Clinton Administration and to the top generals and admirals involved in putting together the military budget.

Although President Clinton has promised to restore some of the recent defense spending cuts by fiscal 2000, the services say they are being squeezed and have had to use funds from their modernization and procurement budgets to help maintain military readiness.

There has been no immediate indication that the Administration would adopt the Joint Chiefs' recommendation in the fiscal 1997 budget, which is due out early next year. Clinton is already under pressure to hold down spending levels, and an increase of that size would be difficult to grant.

Although Perry pledged in a return memo to Shalikashvili and the other chiefs to "work closely with you to accelerate" the budget increase, officials said the memo has come so late in the budget preparation process that any serious consideration is likely to have to wait until next year.

Military leaders have been warning for months that many of the weapon systems and types of equipment in need of upgrading or replacement were not being modernized on schedule, but there has been little extra money available.

As a result, all four services have put off purchases of a wide array of new and replacement weapons and equipment, from fighter aircraft and helicopters to ships, tanks and trucks. They also have begun falling behind on maintenance.

Clinton asserted last winter that the squeeze on modernization would be temporary and pledged to restore much of the earlier cutbacks by the turn of the century. With pressures on overall federal spending mounting daily, however, military leaders have been skeptical that the White House can come through.

In the fiscal 1996 budget that it sent Congress last January, the Administration requested $39 billion for procurement—a drop of 71% from the 1985 peak, after adjustment for inflation. The Republican-controlled Congress raised that to $43 billion, but the House and Senate bills are stalled in a conference committee.

The Administration and the Joint Chiefs want the individual services to provide at least some of the difference by saving money in other areas, such as eliminating unnecessary programs and transferring some jobs to civilian contractors, but the effort is not yielding much.

Senior military officials insisted that the memo, while strongly worded, is not intended to provoke a confrontation with the Administration.

Critics have been contending for months that the Administration has not been budgeting enough to finance the size of military force that it has said it wants to maintain. The White House insists that it can find the money through savings coming from procurement reforms, but so far those gains have been elusive.

Mr. INOUYE. Madam President, the conference report is before the Senate for its consideration because of the extraordinary leadership and wisdom demonstrated by our chairman, the Senator from Alaska. If it were not for his leadership I think we would still be back in H-140, the conference room.

Madam President, this is a good bill. But before I proceed with my statement, pursuant to the consent agreement reached by this body, I am pleased to provide 20 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, I appreciate very much the courtesy. I want to say at the outset I understand it is far easier to be critical and to oppose. I regret very much, for that reason, that I cannot vote for this conference report. I have voted for a number of conference reports, defense appropriations, and defense authorization bills. But I want to explain, during this period of time, why I cannot vote for this one.

Before I do that, I would like to respond to something the Senator from Alaska said earlier when I was not on the floor, because it will relate to something I am going to talk about in this conference report. I had spoken about the juxtaposition of Star Schools and Star Wars. I just used it as a metaphor of the choices that we often make.

I pointed out in the continuing resolution that we were about to consider, there is a 40-percent cut in funding in the small Star Schools Program, which is I believe a $25 million program whose funding will be cut to $15 million, a 40-percent cut.

The Senator from Alaska said, since this is forward funded, these schools are not going to be cut. My point was, when you cut something from $25 million to $15 million, the Senator may be right, if they are forward funded they are not cut this year but if you cut the funding, sometime they are going be cut.

The reason the 40 percent was included in the CR, 40-percent cut, 40 percent of funding, was because the House has determined they want to kill the Star Schools Program.

The only reason I raise the point on the floor was, in the priorities that we are involved with here in Congress, it is choosing one versus another. Can we fund this or that or the other thing? What can we afford? What can we not afford?

The point I was making is the Star Wars Program, which I am going to talk about at some length here, is juxtaposed against Star Schools. One we can afford; we have plenty of money for. The other we decide we either want to kill or we want to cut it back. The CR does take it from $25 million to $15 million. At some point in the funding cycle, that is going to affect someone. That was the point I was making.

Let me come to the point of my appearance on the floor on this piece of legislation. We are talking a lot about balanced budgets and spending and a lot of it is theory and debate. But the steps that you take, albeit baby steps, to deal with budget deficits, is when you start spending real money on the floor of the Senate. That is what we are talking about with respect to this bill. This is a spending bill. This is not theory. This is not idle debate. This is a decision about whether we spend money and how we spend money.

Now the question is, Who are the big spenders? Who on this floor wants to cut back on spending? Resist waste? Cut spending where it is inappropriate and unneeded? Let us see. Let us review.

This is the Defense Department. The men and women in our Armed Forces are critically important to preserving liberty in defense of this country. I understand that and salute them. I think they deserve our praise every single day. But all of us know there is waste in the Pentagon. Why else would we hear about $700 hammers and $500 ash trays and $1,800 toilet seats? I know those are some older stories, but there are legendary stories about procurement problems, even in recent times.

But let us talk about the procurement in this bill. This bill is for defense. The Pentagon said, with respect to T–39 trainers, they did not want to buy any. The Congress said, "I am sorry, you are wrong about that. You might not want to buy any but we insist, we want to spend $45 million and we insist you buy 17 T–39 trainers."

The Pentagon said, "We do not need any EA–6 strike aircraft modifications." We said, "We are sorry, you are wrong about that. We insist you spend $165 million."

The Pentagon said, "We do not need two amphibious assault ships." The Congress said, "Well, we must need one." And then the Congress said, "Let us buy two, while we are at it. Let us buy two, one for $900 million and one for $1.3 billion. The sky is the limit. Let us buy two." So you add $2.2 billion.

F–15 fighters. Let us buy six of those. The Pentagon said they did not want to buy any. We said, "Pentagon, you are wrong about that. We insist you buy them."

"F–16 fighter aircraft," we said, "You ought to buy six." We are going to spend money for six of them. The Pentagon did not ask for them. Cargo aircraft, three, $133 million.

Let me get some of the big ones. Black Hawk helicopters, Longbow helicopters. I could go on. M–1 tank upgrades, heavy tactical vehicles. I come from a small hometown. We do not use those terms. It is called trucks; heavy tactical vehicles, trucks, trucks the Pentagon said they did not want, trucks the Pentagon did not order, and the trucks the Pentagon did not need. But guess what? The Congress said let us buy some trucks. Spend the money because we have a credit card. By the way, we want to talk about cutting spending, but we want to buy trucks that nobody asked for.

That is not really the reason I came to the floor. I came to the floor to talk about two big items, the B–2 bombers and Star Wars. B–2 bombers—the administration says let us keep the production line open. Let us keep the production line open. Congress says let us start buying more B–2's. We have 20 of them. Let us buy 20 more. Let us obligate ourselves to spend over $30 billion on B–2 bombers the Pentagon did not ask for.

That is trouble enough. That is not really the reason I came to the floor of the Senate. The reason I came to the floor of the Senate is to talk about Star Wars. The cold war is over. There is no Soviet Union. This afternoon as I speak we are crushing missiles over in the old Soviet Union, drawing down launch vehicles, and destroying warheads as a part of our arms control agreement. But the cold war is not over everywhere. It is not over in this Chamber. The appetite to build things we do not need with money we do not have rests right here on this little line, "national missile defense," albeit Star Wars, ABM. The only one built in the free world was built in North Dakota, my home State. A couple of billion dollars was spent, and 30 days after it was opened and was declared operational it was mothballed. That is the way it works sometimes.

Now that there is no Soviet Union, we are involved in arms control. We are destroying missiles and weapons on both sides. We have a Congress that says to the Pentagon, by the way, we insist that you start deploying a Star Wars Program. We insist that you deploy missiles in the ground by 1999 on an accelerated basis with a space-based component and multiple sites, which will abrogate the ABM Treaty, among other things.

What is this? I do not understand. I guess I missed something. We have people here who say we are out of money and in debt up to our neck. We want to pass an amendment to the Constitution to require us to balance the budget. The very same people bring to the floor of this Senate an unending appetite to spend the public's money—as long as it is not on milk or shelter for kids—to spend the public's money on something called Star wars. I think people can be excused for wondering what kind of air is being breathed in these Chambers. This makes no sense at all.

I mentioned earlier the juxtaposition of priorities. I do it again because—let me remind people what we are talking about this year. If you say it is not related, you do not understand the process. We only have a certain amount of money to spend. Of 55,000 kids, every single one has a name who is going to be told, "We are sorry. You will get kicked out of the Head Start Program." If you come from a low-income family, from a circumstance of disadvantage, tough luck. "We do not have any money for you. No Head Start Program for you, Timmy, Tommy, or James." There are 600,000 kids, low-income, disadvantaged city kids, will be told, "We are sorry. No summer jobs. We cannot afford it. Tough luck." And 2.2 million Americans will be told, "We are sorry. I know we have a low-income home heating program to help you pay the heating bills in the winter in States where you have harsh bitter cold." We say, "We are sorry. Home heating is a luxury. You can do without it."

I wonder if those who say that have been in these sheds or shacks where people sit on the floor with diapers and kids ill-clothed and the wind is howling through the cracks in the walls, and have seen the desperate condition, especially on Indian reservations and elsewhere. Then would you say to these people, "We are sorry. When it is 25 or 30 below, low-income home heating help does not matter. You can do without."

There are dozens and dozens of those kinds of choices. Then we say, "By the way, even though we cannot afford those things—which I happen to think are necessary—the sky is the limit when it comes to ships, planes, and submarines and helicopters that the Pentagon did not order."

But especially galling to me is the resurrection of the star wars program, to decide that we want to start building a monument that will cost $48 billion—$48 billion for a star wars program. We had people bring on the floor of the Senate charts that show us that North Vietnam is a big threat, and Libya is a threat, and Iraq is a threat. Lord wonders how they can sleep at night. Maybe that might be the problem. Maybe those who are so frightened by Qadhafi and others simply are not sleeping, and the result is a proposal to build a star wars program.

Everybody in here who thinks that ought to understand that a far greater threat to this country, if in fact there is a nuclear threat by a rogue nation, is not from a sophisticated intercontinental ballistic missile. It is the threat from a nuclear bomb packed into a suitcase, or put in the trunk of a Yugo car and parked at a New York City dock. Everybody understands that is a much higher potential threat than some rogue nation getting an ICBM. Or what about a glass vial about that big full of the most deadly biological agents known to mankind? Or what about somebody that rents a truck and builds a fertilizer bomb? Do you all think that some rogue terrorist nation is going to get an ICBM and a nuclear tipped warhead so we can spend $48 billion we do not have? Look, this is an appetite that simply cannot be satisfied.

I would vote for this conference report if there were several changes. But I am not going to vote for a conference report at a time when this country is out of money. This country is choking on debt. This country is saying to everybody, tighten your belts. And then we say to those folks who are building a star wars program that we have been planning for 15 years, we know the world has changed, we know the cold war is over, we know there is no Soviet Union, but guess what? The appetite to build a star wars program goes unabated. Frankly, probably one of the locations for the star wars program will be in my home State. I have some folks pretty upset with me. "Why don't you support this? This is jobs." It is not jobs. It is waste. I support things that defend this country, that represent strength and represent the ability to preserve liberty.

But I think when we start making choices, real choices on spending and come to the floor of the Senate with these kind of add-ons—I know the Senator from Arizona was going to talk about some others—but especially add-ons like the B-2 bomber program and a star wars program, I just wonder what people are thinking about.

Again, let me say we will probably be in session tomorrow, Saturday, Sunday, and the rest of the week, over whether you balance the budget in 5 years, 7 years or 10 years. You know, those who want to do that deal with the theory of it. They might just as well get a pipe, eat a croissant with their feet up and ruminate forever about it.

The way you balance the budget is bring spending bills to the floor that cuts spending. This bill adds $7 billion to the President's request for defense, and explained where it is added. But the most significant thing this bill does is it commits this country to two areas of spending—the B-2 bomber and the star wars program that will bleed tens and tens of billions of dollars in the next 5 and 10 years from the taxpayers' pockets in this country for something we do not need.

I am anxious for those who support this bill, for those who say we have plenty of money for star wars but not enough for Head Start, plenty of money for star wars, a star wars program the Secretary of Defense did not ask for, the star wars program the President says we do not need—I am just anxious to see those folks who say we have plenty of money for star wars but not enough for star schools come to the floor again and talk about their appetite to cut spending. If there is an appetite to cut spending, this is a good place to start. We do not have to wait until January. We do not have to wait until December 1. A good time to start would be today at 5:30, if we can get a chance to vote—maybe adding close to $400 million for star wars. It does not seem like a lot of money to some. But if you grow up in a town of 400 people and graduate from a high school class of nine and do not understand much about $400 million, then understand they say we just cannot afford these other little programs that would help folks that are in need, help folks send their kids to college, and help folks do the right thing. Then we start thinking maybe this is not just about the old theoretical debates. Maybe it is once again the same old debate we have every time we discuss money on this floor. Big interest and little interest, and little interest be damned. The big interest, guess what? Start smiling, because in our envelope behind door No. 1 is the big prize for you.

I regret that I cannot vote for this conference agreement. But it seems to me, if all of the angst and all of the energy and all of the anxiety we have heard on the floor of the Senate now for the last several weeks about spending is indeed real, then those who express it should come to this floor and auger in on questions like the B-2 bomber and like the star wars program, and, yes; like the other programs where we have added planes, ships, submarines and helicopters that were not ordered, were not needed, were not asked for. Come to the floor, stand up, and proudly pull up their suspenders and say, "Count me in. I want to cut spending." Or will they come to the floor and just button their suit and say, "Well, here we go. I sure like this kind of spending. Let's add to it. Let's take 7 billion bucks and stuff the Pentagon's pockets and let's decide that is our priority. Not star schools, star wars. That is our priority."

It is, with all due respect to those who believe it is the right thing, a warped priority for this country's future. And I hope that when the dust settles on all of this debate, the American people will understand when some waive their arms and raise their voices and boast to the heavens that they are the ones who are against all the big spending, they are the ones who are between the taxpayers and calamity because they are the ones who want to cut the deficit, they are the ones who want to balance the budget, I hope they will take a look at how they voted on this, an obligation for my kids and yours to ante up $48 billion for a star wars program that does nothing to add security to this country.

Madam President, how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes and 31 seconds.

Mr. DORGAN. I would like to reserve the 3 minutes.

Mr. INOUYE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Pursuant to the consent agreement, I am pleased to yield 15 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABRAHAM). The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank you and I thank the Senator from Hawaii for his constant courtesy and helpfulness to all of us here in the Senate.

I also regret that I must rise in opposition to this conference report on the Defense appropriations bill. It is clear to me that the bill should be vetoed, and that the President is going to veto it.

Let me quote from a letter that the President sent to Congressman LIVINGSTON dated October 18. It said:

> However, by appropriating $6.9 billion more than I requested, the conference report did not address my fundamental concerns about spending priorities. As the bill now goes back to conference following its defeat on the House floor, it is important that the conferees understand where I stand. Absent a broader agreement with Congress that adequately funds crucial domestic programs in other appropriations bills, I will veto any defense appropriation bill that adds extra billions for defense programs not in my request.

Mr. President, the conferees did not address the President's fundamental concern about misplaced priorities in their second conference. And this conference report, like its predecessor, is full of unrequested, unneeded, and unsustainable add-ons. As for funding of crucial domestic programs in other appropriations bills, particularly the Labor, HHS, the VA-HUD and the Commerce, State, Justice bills, it is absolutely clear that we have made virtually no progress since the President wrote.

The fiasco of closing down the Government has only widened the gulf between the majority party and the President on what our domestic priorities should be. Indeed, the majority party's interest in cutting programs for education, the environment, civilian research, heating assistance for low-income citizens, national service, Indian programs, and many others seems to grow as we proceed through this budget debate.

I voted against the bill when the Senate passed it early in September. I thought it was worthy of a veto then. In my view, the conference has not improved it. In fact, it has made it worse.

This bill has truly become a weapons-for-everybody bill. When it left the Senate, the bill was $6.45 billion above the President's request. It is now $6.9 billion above the President's request. But that figure alone understates the net addition because, according to press reports, the conference report that we are here considering takes back $1 billion that the National Reconnaissance Office, [NRO] had accumulated in unspent funds. That money was spent on unneeded, unrequested, unsustainable weapons that were not in the Senate version of the bill, just as the other $6.9 billion were. If you adjust for the NRO money, this bill is in fact about $8 billion above the President's request, not $7 billion.

The conferees had enough money to buy ships, planes, trucks, helicopters of every description, some of which—like a $20 million Cyclone class patrol craft—were in neither bill prior to going to conference.

The total add-on package is in the range of $10 billion. There are offsets in the range of $2 billion as well.

The obvious question is what is it that justifies this extraordinary increase in defense spending, and I for one cannot point to a threat.

We spend twice as much as all of our potential adversaries combined. If we put together the budgets—our budget with those of our NATO allies and Japan—we and our allies are outspending our potential foes by more than 3 to 1. Of course, it will be argued that much of the additional spending in this bill is somewhere in the Pentagon's budget for the next 6 years. That was the argument that was made for the $1.3 billion HLD–7 amphibious assault ship that the Senate debated when we passed the bill in August. The Navy planned to buy that ship in the year 2001. That will undoubtedly be the argument that is used to justify the $900 million LPD–17 amphibious transport dock which the House insisted on in conference. The Navy planned to buy that in 1998.

Mr. President, this is really an extraordinary argument. Essentially those who make it are saying that they can pick and choose anything in the 6-year plan that the Department of Defense has that helps their State or district and that plan when you add it up totals about $1.6 trillion. Where else in our budgeting this year are we finding the ability to do that? The answer clearly is nowhere. Everywhere but in this case of the Pentagon we cannot find enough for this first year's budget, let alone find money to add $1 billion projects in the States or districts of powerful members of the Republican leadership.

But worse are the programs that do not even fit in the 6-year plan. Some of these have huge budgetary implications. The B–2, which was not in the Senate bill, has an outyear requirement for tens of billions of dollars. National missile defense, which my colleague from North Dakota spoke about, will require tens of billions of additional dollars not in the 6-year plan. There is certainly no money in future year budgets for the Hellfire-2 and the CBU–87 antiarmor munitions. The Pentagon's own inspector general told Congress that we already had enough of these munitions to cover every target in a 2 major regional contingency scenario, and yet the Senate voted to continue to buy these unneeded weapons, and the conferees agreed to spend tens of billions of dollars on them as well.

There certainly is no money in the 6-year plan for most, if not all, of the member interest add-ons in the research and development budget, which always seems to have an outyear requirement that goes on and on. I have in mind items that the Senator from Arizona has on his earmark list, like the curved plate technology program, the Center for Astronomical Adaptive Optics—which presumably should be funded by the National Science Foundation's astronomy program, if at all—the Pacific Software Research Center. There are many others.

It is frankly disconcerting to me that the Technology Re-investment Project, which is a competitive and a cost shared program, was cut by $305 million while noncompetitive, noncost share programs like those I referred to flourish in these supposedly austere budget times. Obviously, austerity stops at the door of the Pentagon as far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. President, we cannot afford these add-ons even under the Republican budget. There is no money in the outyears to sustain the programs. As Congressman OBEY has repeatedly pointed out, the Republican defense budget over the 5-year period from fiscal year 1998 to 2002 is less than the President's. Let me repeat that. The Republican defense budget for fiscal years 1998 to 2002 is less than what the President has asked for. According to an article from the November 6 issue of Aviation Week, the Republican majority is considering reducing the net 7-year addition to the defense budget from $20 to $8 billion in the final negotiations over the budget with the President, whenever that negotiation occurs.

I ask unanimous consent that that article from Aviation Week be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, whatever figure emerges, this bill is inconsistent with it. This bill assumes future Congresses are going to spend tens of billions of dollars more for defense than the Republican budget resolution allows.

The Senate Armed Services Committee earlier this year made clear in its report that it had not designed the authorization bill to be consistent with the realities of the out-year Republican defense budget totals. The committee said on page 3 of its report:

> The Committee remains concerned about the adequacy of funding levels for national defense programs in coming years. * * * Budget levels proposed for future years do not adequately fund even the level of forces required for the Bottom-Up Review Force. * * * The limited progress reflected in this bill cannot be maintained unless future funding is increased.

Mr. President, increasing defense spending above the June budget resolution is not even on the table. Nor should it be. I hear no one in the Republican leadership saying they want to increase defense spending even more. Despite the rhetoric in last year's campaign about the President not spending enough on defense, the fact is all the 7-year Republican defense budget does in its current form is provide a 2-year infusion of pork this year and next followed by 5 years in which Republicans are saying that the President is being a tad too generous to defense. Mr. President, I say we should forgo the pork this year and next. Let us put this money to better use in the domestic appropriations bill, particularly Labor-HHS, VA–HUD, and Commerce-State-Justice, all of which require additional funds to sustain critical programs. I suspect that by the end of this year's budget process, at least some of the unneeded, unrequested, and unsustainable projects will be stripped from this bill.

Mr. President, there are several other provisions which concern me in this bill. When the Senate debated this bill in August, the senior Senator from Arkansas, Senator BUMPERS, offered an amendment to trim the defense export loan guarantee authority in this bill from $15 to $10 billion. The vote to table that amendment was 53 to 47. Yet the conferees came back with $15 billion in loan guarantees for defense exports, to the extent they are authorized. Unfortunately, a loan guarantee provision is included in both the House and Senate versions of the authorization bill. So if there is an authorization bill, this appropriations bill will put the taxpayers at risk to the tune of $15 billion for defaults on payments for defense exports.

Mr. President, when Senator KEMPTHORNE started working on this issue a couple of years ago, he sought authority for a trial program to guarantee about $1 billion in defense exports to a limited number of countries. At that time, it was a subsidized guarantee. Now it is supposed to be paid for by the defense industry itself. But we have moved in 2 short years from a $1 billion trial program to a full-blown $15 billion program of defense export guarantees.

Mr. President, we should not be attempting to prop up our defense industry by turning it into the arms merchant for the world. It is our own troops who will too often be facing off against these weapons. Instead, we should be taking the lead in trying to negotiate arms transfer restraints. There is a historic opportunity with the end of the cold war and with nations across the globe attempting to free up funds for economic development and useful infrastructure to scale back regional arms races. This loan guarantee provision is just bad public policy and I regret it was not at least scaled back by the conferees after the close vote on the Bumpers amendment.

Mr. President, I also regret the cuts made in this bill to the technology reinvestment project and SEMATECH. The $305 million cut in the technology reinvestment project and the $50.5 million cut to SEMATECH in the last year that it was seeking Federal funds, send precisely the wrong signal to the Pentagon's research bureaucracy. The signal is that rather than leveraging the commercial sector in innovative ways to save the taxpayers' money in developing and procuring dual-use technologies, it is OK to hunker down and pursue duplicative, ultimately dead-end research with a military label on it. In fact, not only is it OK, but it is the preferred approach of the congressional majority.

This is again bad public policy which the Pentagon cannot afford to pursue at a time of limited resources and which will come back to haunt us in the next century if it is not soon reversed.

Mr. President, I could go on and on and cite additional problems with this bill. I think the point is well made. And I will not delay the Senate further in discussing the details of the conference report. I urge my colleagues to vote against the bill. I urge the President to carry out his threat to veto the bill. It reflects a set of priorities with which I for one do not want to associate myself at a time when we are doing so much damage to many vital domestic programs.

Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from North Dakota, this bill does make a mockery of all the speeches that I have been hearing here on the Senate floor about deficit reduction, about the need to balance the budget, about the need the tighten our belts. The Congress can and must do better than to ratify the misplaced priorities reflected in this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the letter to Mr. LIVINGSTON printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, October 18, 1995.

Hon. BOB LIVINGSTON,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter regarding the conference report on the Fiscal year 1996 Defense Appropriations Act. I want you to know that I appreciate your hard work and leadership on this bill, as well as that of Senators Stevens and Inouye. The Conference Report had many commendable features. For example, a number of policy provisions that raised serious constitutional and national security concerns were satisfactorily resolved in conference, and funding was secured for several programs that were of particular importance to me and to the national security of this country, including the Cooperative Threat Reduction program and the Technology Reinvestment Project.

However, by appropriating $6.9 billion more than I requested, the Conference Report did not address my fundamental concerns about spending priorities. As the bill now goes back to conference following its defeat on the House floor, it is important that the conferees understand where I stand. Absent a broader agreement with Congress that adequately funds crucial domestic programs in other appropriations bills, I will veto any defense appropriations bill that adds extra billions for defense programs not in my request.

I am ready to work with Congress to ensure that we reach that agreement.

Sincerely,

BILL CLINTON.

DEFICIT HAWKS GAIN, THREATEN DEFENSE HIKES

(By David A. Fulghum/Washington)

U.S. Republican lawmakers are considering a deal that could cut $12 billion from promised defense increases—a key element in the party's Contract With America.

Defense boosters and fiscal conservatives are trying to craft compromise budget language that would make the cuts over the next six years. The Republican leadership is attempting to satisfy lawmakers who believe deficit reduction should take priority over defense increases. The compromise is aimed at gaining passage of the Fiscal 1996 reconciliation bill, catch-all budget legislation that funds the entire federal government.

The compromise defense language is still in flux. But if it survives in the overall reconciliation bill, the Republicans' much ballyhooed $20-billion defense spending hike above the Administration's request could be slashed to only $8 billion, according to a Democratic congressional aide. But a Republican aide said it is not yet clear if all $12 billion in cuts "will be directly translated to defense." Complicating matters, the fate of the reconciliation bill is in serious doubt because of White House and congressional squabbling over the best way to balance the budget.

If the Republican leadership decides for the sake of fiscal peace with its deficit hawks to renege on its promised defense increases, the Pentagon could find it impossible to buy as much new armament as GOP defense hawks would like. That includes C–17 airlifters, B-2 bombers, missile defense, ships and submarines.

Moreover, organized resistance to defense hawks appears to be mounting. A coalition of freshman lawmakers, heavily influenced by Sen. John McCain (R.-Ariz.), has concluded that defense is not a top priority, and they are forming a task force to begin examining the whole issue of defense spending early next year.

"From the reconciliation bill will flow the defense budget top lines," the Democratic congressional staffer said. If there are major cuts, "there will be no money to sustain buying C–17s at a high rate or additional B–2s."

The U.S. military is being unequivocal in its support for purchasing an airlifter fleet made up of 120 McDonnell Douglas C–17s. A plan to buy less expensive C–33/Boeing 747–400 freighters or Lockheed C–5Ds has of late had shrinking support in the Pentagon. However, congressional opponents of purchasing an all-C–17 fleet contend there is still a flicker of interest from the White House in the Boeing 747–400. Consequently, they expect the Pentagon to leave the door open for a mixed purchase at least through the 1996 presidential election.

However, senior defense officials believe that the reasons for buying a mixed fleet have disappeared. The C–141 fleet, which C–17s are to replace, is no longer grounded and is expected to soldier on in decreasing numbers well into the next century. Meanwhile, McDonnell Douglas has transformed the C–17 from a troubled program to an operational and technological success.

Congressional supporters of a mixed fleet point out that a Pentagon recommendation to buy 120 C–17 equivalents is simply an acquisition decision. It does not mean the money is in the long-term defense budget.

"It means they go from standing in the acquisition line to standing in the budget line and that's a whole new ball game," a Democratic staffer said.

Some staffers contend the Air Force can sustain only a $2.5-billion per year investment in airlifters, which would equal only eight C–17s. At that rate, the U.S. Air Force would actually lose airlift capacity until 2007 because of the retirement of C–141. Airlift could be sustained only by buying some high-payload 747–400s, they said. Some congressional and aerospace industry officials thought the Pentagon might keep the C–33 option alive as a goad to McDonnell Douglas to keep C–17 prices down.

Senior defense officials said they do not believe the Defense Acquisition Board (DAB) will sustain the option, choosing instead to use contractual methods to ensure McDonnell Douglas prices stay low. Moreover, Air Force planners believe the defense budget as now projected will allow them to buy C–17s at a greater rate than eight per year, thus avoiding an airlift shortage.

But, there are indications that defense planning could receive some severe jolts. A senior Air Force official candidly admitted that planners are being forced to "look at the issue with blinders on." They have not made budgetary excursions to project what will happen if, for example, they are forced to buy more B–2s. The requirement is considered a likely inclusion in a compromise Fiscal 1996 defense appropriations bill. If the Republican Congress forces the Pentagon to buy more B–2s without additional long-term funding, Air Force leaders will have to rebuild their budgets and likely cut or stretch out C–17 purchases.

But in a move guaranteed to keep the airlifter debate alive, Congressional Budget Office researchers have just completed a study that offers compelling arguments for buying a mix of aircraft to meet the Pentagon's requirement for 120 C–17 equivalents.

"Buying 32 more C–17s plus 30 C–3s would provide the same delivery capability as 80 additional C–17s," the CBO report said. "That option would also be nearly $8 billion cheaper."

CBO researchers said the mix of C–17s and C–33s would cost about $28 billion to buy and operate and would be a better deal if there were adequate room on airfields to land and unload the less maneuverable C–33s.

"If, however, U.S. forces were limited to a few airfields that had a small amount of ramp space [such as Macedonia], the [C–17/C–33 mix] option might not deliver cargo as quickly as would 80 more C–17s," the CBO report said. "And such a combination would not provide as much flexibility to handle specific military missions such as strategic brigade airdrops [flowing directly from the U.S. to a foreign battlefield]."

CBO noted that the first 40 C–17s cost about $300 million each in 1996 dollars but predicted the company light like to achieve a flyaway cost of $203 million each, without government furnished avionics and engines.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. STEVENS. I am prepared to yield some time to the Senator from Maine. But I want to say to the Senator from New Mexico, I am saddened to hear those comments. I wish we had a little more time. I would be glad to disabuse him of some of the comments he made.

To the contrary, I am sure there are New Mexican men and women around the world in some of these deployments we have made. I will be very interested to see how he is going to vote on the deployment to Bosnia, whether he supported the deployment to Somalia, whether he supported the support for the Kurds, the humanitarian assistance to Bosnia that is going on now or the deployment to Macedonia or the Adriatic blockade or the blockade of Iraq.

I do not see how we can send our people, our young men and women, throughout the world, and then complain we are providing them the equipment they need to survive. And in my judgment, the amount of money in this bill is literally a decline from last year in real terms. And I really think that to request the President to veto this bill, and at the same time to consider deploying forces to the Balkans, is just the height of really—well, I do not want to use the word here on the floor of the Senate.

It boggles my mind to think some people will vote against this bill and then vote to deploy forces to the Balkans.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Would the Senator from Alaska yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS. I will be glad to get to the Senator later on. But I want to yield to the Senator from Maine 4 or 5 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, first let me thank both the Senator from Alaska and the Senator from Hawaii for their efforts in trying to negotiate with their House counterparts. I and other Members have been locked in negotiations for weeks now with our House counterparts on the authorization bill, and we have yet to reach success. And so I appreciate the work that the Senators have put in and, especially, in working out the differences in the funding requirements.

One area that troubles me is the B–2 bomber. For several years now I think we have gone on record as saying no more than 20. We decided that several years ago.

At first there was a notion we had to have a penetrating bomber because after we fired off our ICBM's in an exchange with the Soviet Union, we would need the B–2 bomber to penetrate Soviet air defenses, what remained of them, to go in and hunt down mobile missiles. When that became rather impractical, to say the least, when we finally exposed the rationale for that, the Air Force at that point came back and said, well, we do not really need it as a nuclear penetrating bomber, perhaps we can use it as a conventional bomber.

They used to present us with a chart indicating that the B–2 will replace some—I cannot recall the number now—but somewhere from 40 to 50 aircraft. If you have one B–2, you will not need all these other aircraft. This one B–2 can fly back and over. No jamming aircraft needed, no F–15 escorts, and so on. I said, "Fine, take all the B–2's and eliminate all the other aircraft. We do not want that tradeoff," they said. "We want to have the B–2 and all the other aircraft."

But we are now on the eve of this particular conference report, and once again, we find there is roughly $500 million included for the B–2 bomber. I want to ask a question of my colleague from Alaska as to whether or not it is his and his colleague's intent, the managers of the bill, to open up the B–2 line to start producing more B–2 bombers?

I can tell you why I am concerned about this. We are in the process now of negotiating with the other body. The other body by 3 votes—3 votes—approved additional funds for the B–2 bomber. They want to open up an entire new line to produce another 20 B–2 bombers. That is with life-cycle costs of roughly $30 billion.

I want to know, where is the $30 billion going to come from? Now, I could see some are making the case, saying, "Well, maybe we need to do a little more experimentation here on the B–2, that this is, by the way, 1970's technology. We are moving into the 21st century. We may have to update the B–2 with some new research and development."

I can see the case being made for the purchase of even spare parts for the existing B–2 fleet. But I am really concerned that we might start down the path, an irrevocable path, to build 20 more B–2 bombers, at a cost of $30 billion, and I do not know where the money is going to come from.

So, I want to know from my friend from Alaska as to whether or not the Appropriations Committee is committing itself and committing this body to opening up this line, to taking the cap off, to starting another process of building at least 5, 10, 20, more B–2 bombers. If that is the case, I would have great difficulty with this measure.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator from Maine that, as I made the statement in the opening part of this discussion on the bill, we have provided the money for the continuation of the line. The decision will be the President's as to whether that will go forward, or at least it will be with the Armed Services Committee, because we have no authorizing language in the bill. We have just funded it.

It is not within our province to start a multiyear procurement line with an annual appropriations bill. I will say, though—I am constrained to say that 20 B-2 bombers is equivalent to four Seawolf submarines. I have fought every Seawolf that has come before the Senate, and yet they are going forward. And we need Seawolf submarines a lot less than we need B-2 bombers. At least B-2's are force projections and capable of meeting some of our needs on an international basis. The Seawolf, in my judgment, is not needed at all. But I tell the Senator that some of these decisions are not made by individual members of either the Armed Services Committee, on which the Senator serves, or the Appropriations Committee, of which I am pleased to chair the subcommittee.

The answer to the question directly is, we have not opened up this line by the language in this bill.

Mr. COHEN. I thank my friend for his comments. I point out this body has gone on record saying no more than 20. Whether or not the Senator agrees with the need for the Seawolf—that is a debatable matter obviously—the fact is that the Senate has gone on record that no more than 20 B-2 bombers should be built. And here we are at least opening up the prospect of a new line of more B-2's at a time when, in the outyears, I do not know where the money is going to come from.

I know that the Senator from Alaska, the Senator from Hawaii, have been creative over the years in coming up with money that is necessary to fund our programs. But if you look past the year 2000, I do not know that even he and the Senator from Hawaii can be persuasive enough for their colleagues to say we have to appropriate that kind of money.

By the way, looking at the SCN account, the Navy's shipbuilding and conversion account—and the Senator from Alaska can correct me on this—we have roughly $4 billion in the SCN account. And in order to meet the Navy's needs, by the year 2000, it is going to go up to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. COHEN. Could I have 1 more minute?

Mr. STEVENS. I will be glad to give the Senator 1 more minute, but let me precede that by saying we have provided the money for long lead-time items for the new B-2 line, should the President decide to open it up. We have not funded money for any single B-2.

We have given the administration a chance to revisit the question of keeping the B-2 line open by virtue of making the money available for long-lead-time items for new B-2's should the decision be made to procure them.

Mr. COHEN. I thank my friend.

As I indicated before, we are going to be going in the SCN account, the shipbuilding account, from $4 billion, roughly, up to $15 billion in the year 2000 and beyond to get the ships that the Navy indicates it is going to have to have in order to meet its requirements.

I do not know where that money is going to come from. I do not know how we are going to have enough money in the shipbuilding account at the turn of the century, and I am not sure there will be a Congress willing to vote the money to fund it. That is one reason why I raise the issue on the B-2.

I am at least consoled somewhat by the Senator's statement that it is not the intent of the appropriators to open up a new line but rather it is the intent to leave it up to the President to decide whether he is going to overrule his own Secretary of Defense and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, both of whom indicated they do not need the B-2 or want it given the cost requirements of the program.

I thank the Senator for yielding me this time.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Maine for his contribution and his comments. Although we were criticized by another Senator on the floor, it is a fact that we have saved money by accelerating the decision to buy the LPD and LHD now. That, in fact, will make room for the outlays that are necessary to carry on the ship procurement that the Senator from Maine has mentioned.

But there is severe strain in the Department's budget in the outyears, and both the President and the Congress have noted that in terms of the last 2 years of the 7-year period. It will be a difficult thing to fund the items that are started, both in the shipbuilding and the aircraft procurement accounts. However, there are decisions that are going to be made, I assume, that will take care of the outyears by the authorizing committee.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona has 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I do not think I will consume the entire time allotted to me, I tell my colleagues.

First of all, I paid close attention to the colloquy between Senator COHEN and the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, who I believe, along with the Senator from Hawaii, has worked very hard on these issues for many, many years.

I note and I think it is an important aspect of what I am about to say, that since 1985, the defense budgets have declined by 35 percent in real dollars, with another 10 percent decline by the turn of the century.

There is no possible way that we will be able to meet a Bottom-Up Review, a modified Bottom-Up Review or anything resembling it with those kind of numbers staring us in the face, which is one reason why I was a strong supporter of the $7 billion increase in defense spending, because I believe that we are terribly short and facing block obsolescence in items such as sealift, airlift, amphibious capability, tactical air, depot maintenance, that terribly unsexy word, 4 or 5, 6, 10 years behind. Training funds are miserably short. We had a situation not too long ago where the U.S.S. Inchon came back from 7 months off the coast of Somalia, was back home approximately 2 weeks and then went out for another 3 months off the coast of Haiti. Mr. President, there is no way you will keep qualified men and women in the military under those kinds of conditions that the crew of the Inchon was subjected to.

So, I believe that there is a clear and compelling requirement for us to increase spending, which increases the depth of my bitterness at how we have spent this additional $7 billion. I can identify, and I will in my statement, $4.1 billion, or over 60 percent of this total $7 billion, wasted on projects which do little or nothing to enhance the readiness of our forces today or to modernize our forces to ensure their future readiness.

We live in a very dangerous world. I strongly disagree with the comments of the Senator from North Dakota about the fact, in his view, we do not need to spend money on ballistic missile defense. I think any casual observer of the passing scene will recognize the incredible threat posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the means to deliver them. We are finding out that in Iraq, Saddam Hussein was very, very close to having both delivery capability and the weapons needed to have changed that conflict in a most dramatic and significant fashion.

So, I am not arguing for cuts in defense spending, but I am saying this, and I am saying it as much and as sincerely as I have said anything on the floor of this Senate: If we do not stop wasting these tax dollars, if we do not stop this pork barreling, if we do not stop spending money on projects and programs that have no relevance to the post-cold-war era, the American people will not support a minimum level of defense spending.

One of the problems, I have to tell you, Mr. President, is we no longer have a conceptual framework for the threats that face our national security interest. The Bottom-Up Review, in its day, was an important step forward. It is no longer relevant because it cannot be built. There is no way that we are going to maintain the Bottom-Up Review. But what we have to do is ascertain what the threats are to our national security, which I have been over many times on this floor, and what we need to meet those.

The administration has failed to do it, and we in the Congress have failed to recognize them. So, therefore, it opens the door wide to not only pork barreling of additional projects, but also funding of major weapons systems, major commitments to multibillions of dollars in the future years that have no relevance to the threat.

I, obviously, speak specifically of the B–2 bomber and the Seawolf submarine. I was pleased to hear that the distinguished subcommittee chairman said this additional $493 million for the B–2, which is in this bill, does not commit us to an additional $36 billion. I have been around here long enough, I have been around here long enough to know that once you get your fist in the tar baby, you do not get out. If we start that line up again, we are not going to shut it down until we have expended an additional $36 billion, which we simply do not have.

Mr. President, I want to also point out, I find it interesting that the President has threatened to veto this bill on the grounds that much of the spending is unneeded and much of it may be wasteful and unrequested items. If he should have ever vetoed a bill, he should have vetoed the military construction appropriations bill.

Did the President miss the fact that there was $700 million added on in the military construction bill which was neither requested nor required, items such as hypervelocity ballistic-range facilities, such as fire stations, such as a foundry renovation at Philadelphia Navy Shipyard that is being closed, such as a dining facility at Fort Bliss, a highway overpass at Fort Sam Houston?

Did the President miss all those? If the President was serious, then the President of the United States would have vetoed the MilCon bill in a New York minute.

What we are doing, I will tell you again, and, as I say, I am dead serious and the reason why I risk offending my hard-working colleagues on these appropriations bills is the American people in 1994 said they do not want any more of this pork barreling and wasteful expenditures on defense and they will not support it. Everyplace I go, it is almost a joke. I am not going to go through all of these tonight, because I have gone through them so many times before.

Earmarks: $5 million grant to the Marine and Environmental Research and Training Station in Oregon for "programs of major importance"; $25 million to the Kaho'olawe Island conveyance, where I am led to understand there is already $50 million sitting idle, not in either bill, not in either bill, it comes out in the conference; $3.4 million for private physicians "who have used and will use the antibacterial treatment method based upon the excretion of dead, decaying spherical bacteria" to work with Walter Reed Army Medical Center for a treatment of Desert Storm Syndrome. That may be a valid requirement. Why did we not discuss it? Why did it appear in the final bill?

Authority to provide free medical care at Army medical facilities in Hawaii to citizens of surrounding islands. I visited Hawaii, I understand that there are needs on the islands around Hawaii for medical care. I also know that there are rural places in my State and there are rural places all over America that do not have medical care either. Why do we not provide free medical care for all of them?

Prohibition on downsizing or disestablishing the 53d weather reconnaissance squadron; prohibition on using Edwards Air Force base as the interim airhead for the National Training Center at Fort Irwin. There is a little more to these than meets the eye.

Somebody wants to have a runway extended at Barstow Daggett Airport when the Army has determined that Edwards Air Force Base is the facility that should be used and has plenty of facilities there.

So how do we beat that? We beat it by prohibiting using Edwards Air Force Base for our people to land and then be transported over to Fort Irwin. It goes on and on. Cleanup of the National Presto Industries site in Eau Claire, WI. I have been through before. It was in litigation in the courts. We had no business providing $15 million for that until the courts had settled it. Then there is $7 million for the Center of Excellence for Research in Ocean Science; $6 million for a Pacific Disaster Center; $1.5 million for the Beaumont Army Medical Center computer support; $3.5 million for distributed manufacturing demonstration project; over $200 million in earmarked medical research projects; a natural gas boiler demonstration, $2 million; earmark for Mississippi Resource Development Center.

Here is one of my favorites: $5.4 million in unrequested funding to continue ongoing efforts with an established small business development center to be administered as in previous years, focused on developing agricultural-based services, such as bioremediation. The committee supports targeted research and development projects and agricultural development activities in zones surrounding military installations.

What in the world does that mean? "The committee supports targeted research and development projects and agricultural development activities in zones surrounding military installations."

Next is $8 million to be "competitive awarded to a qualified Washington, DC, region-based institution of higher education with expertise and programs in computational sciences and informatics capable of conducting research and development that will further efforts to establish an effective metacomputing testbed."

I will not even ask what that means. "The committee urges the Department to provide not less than $8 million in financial and technical support toward the study of neurofibromatosis. The committee urges the Department to provide not less than $1 million in financial and technical support toward the study of Paget's and related bone diseases."

Report language calls for $5 million for instrumented factory for gears; $2.7 million for standard monitoring control system; $10 million for FDS-deployable refurbishment and spares procurement.

The list goes on and on and on and on. I saw the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill that we passed yesterday. It was a clean bill, a good bill. It did not have earmarks, it did not have special projects in it, which was a dramatic change from the previous years. It proved to me that we do not have to have this practice in appropriations bills.

Mr. President, we have 50,000 enlisted families in America in our Armed Forces that are eligible for food stamps. I suggest that if we had additional money, maybe we ought to give them a pay raise—the enlisted people. Maybe we ought to do that and take them off of eligibility for food stamps. Maybe we ought to do a lot more in the way of quality of life and make sure that there are enough ships like U.S.S. Inchon, so they do not have to spend 7 months at sea and come back and then go out for another 3 months.

Instead, we make sure that the Reserve and National Guard are not only taken care of, but we also earmark funds and a list of specific equipment for them.

The bill also includes $977.4 million for unrequested Guard and Reserve equipment. While the report allocates the funds among generic categories of miscellaneous equipment for the Reserve components, the report also strongly suggests that priority be given to a long list of specific items. The report also specifies that the funds will be used to buy C–130 and C–126 aircraft, long a staple of congressional add-ons for the Guard and Reserve.

Mr. President, I support the Guard and Reserve. I think the Guard and Reserve are vital components in our ability to defend our Nation. But when we do not have the fundamental basics that our active duty forces need, and the prospects of them getting it any time soon are remote, we have to stop the earmarking.

I want to waste a little more time here on both the B-2 and the Seawolf. If this were 1989, before the cold war was over, there would be no stronger supporter on the floor of the Senate than this Senator for both of those programs. The B-2 bomber would have really been a vital and important part of the triad, which I was always supportive of. Now the B-2 bomber is being advertised as some kind of long-range attack weapons delivery system which will be stealthy.

I do not argue that, Mr. President. I really do not argue that at all. I would be curious which commander is going to send an over $1 billion per copy aircraft anywhere in a conventional scenario. I have long recommended that we not put ejection seats into that plane because the pilot that ejected would be the subject of investigation for the rest of his or her natural life.

The fact is that this is an incredibly expensive weapon system for which there is no relevance today in the post-cold war era. What we need in the post-cold war era, Mr. President, is the ability to project power over long distances with an ability to remain there for a significant period of time and have enough firepower to affect the battlefield equation. The B-2 can do a little of that. But we do not have enough of the tactical aircraft, the carriers, amphibious ships, the airlift that were really the fundamental components of that capability. So we have opened the door to another $36 billion over the next 20 years to spend on B-2 bombers.

This, interestingly enough, is despite the objection of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Secretary of Defense, and even the Chief of Staff of the Air Force. Why does the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, who is a fine and decent man, oppose the B-2 bomber? He opposes it for a broad variety of reasons, and I do not want to put words in his mouth. But one of the reasons is he does not see enough money there in order to fund the F-22, which the Air Force and he believes—and this could be a subject for debate on the floor—are a vital component in our ability to defend the Nation's vital national security interests in the next century. They need a follow-on fighter aircraft. If you siphon off $36 billion in the next 20 years for the B-2 bomber, it is hard for them to see where you will get the money for the F-22.

As far as the Seawolf is concerned, Mr. President, it is well known that during the Presidential primary, President Clinton went to Connecticut and said he would support the Seawolf submarine. It is clear that this is a jobs program. There is no doubt that there have been tremendous cost overruns. We now have two shipyards that can build nuclear powered submarines. We now have two of them. I can envision no scenario in the future where we have a requirement for two shipyards to build nuclear submarines. But perhaps more important, Mr. President, is that we continue to hear this argument that the former Soviet Union, Russia, today, which cannot meet anywhere near its quota of conscription for the year; estimates are between a quarter and a third of those conscripted show up; they have an incipient revolt in Chechnya on their hands, which has cost them the blood of many hundreds of their young fighting men and women; and their officers, which were moved out, and their families, out of Eastern Europe back into Russia, are living in boxcars.

The state of their military establishment, by all objective observers' estimates, is in a terrible and horrendous condition—not to mention the threat that we have of how we are going to dispose of the nuclear weapons that abound throughout the former Soviet Union.

So, Mr. President, what we are supposed to believe, given the conditions and the threats to Russia's vital national security interest, which they see clearly are as they have been for most of its history in the so-called "near abroad," that they are going to spend an enormous amount of money that they do not have on fast, quiet submarines.

Mr. President, they are not. It does not make any sense. It does not make any sense to believe that the Russians are spending billions of dollars on fast, quiet submarines when they cannot even get their officers out of boxcars into houses, when they cannot make their yearly annual conscription to man their armed forces to any degree whatever, when they are fighting a guerrilla war in Chechnya, when they have problems in practically every part of what the Russians call "near abroad."

I do not believe that the Russian defense experts are so naive and so uninformed that they sit around and say, gee, forget all those problems I just articulated, build some fast, quiet submarines.

Mr. President, we are really doing the American taxpayers a great disservice.

I want to say, finally again, I appreciate the hard work that is done by the members of the Appropriations Committee. I know they have difficult issues to wrestle with. I am sure that, in fairness, the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking member should bring up the legitimate point that the authorizing committee has so far failed to come up with any legislation, so they have had to make many of these decisions. I think that is a very legitimate statement on the part of the appropriators.

I will say, finally, one more time, Mr. President, and the last time, and mark my words, if we keep doing this, if we keep wasting taxpayers' dollars in this fashion, we are going to lose the confidence of the American people and at some point there will be great resistance to adequately fund our defense forces and we may see a threat posed to our national security that we cannot meet because of our failure to articulate to authorize and to appropriate adequate funding to meet the real threats to our vital national security interests.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEVENS. How much time does the Senator desire?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Ten minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield the Senator 10 minutes, but I do want to thank the Senator from Arizona for his contribution. He does not know how often we use his positions in conference in order to achieve savings—which he does not mention.

Some of the items he mentioned, I think, are legitimate complaints. Others I think have legitimate military value. We can discuss that on the floor.

His last comment is the correct one. We did not have the guidance of the Armed Services Committee this time and we just did our best. I think that is because of some of the problems we face here on the floor.

I yield 10 minutes to the Senator.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I would like to speak briefly on the conference report on the Department of Defense [DOD] appropriation bill.

The amount of money provided in this measure is too high.

I argued for a lower figure when we debated the budget resolution.

And I argued for a lower figure when we debated the defense authorization bill.

The cold war is over.

The Soviet military threat is gone.

We are closing military bases. Our force structure is shrinking.

Defense budgets should be coming down—not going up. But we lost that battle.

For unknown reasons, Congress decided on the higher number, and that's that.

Mr. President, I didn't come here to argue about the size of the defense budget.

I come to the floor to thank my friend from Alaska, Senator STEVENS, for his advice and assistance with the DOD unmatched disbursements problem.

Last year, with the help of my friend from Hawaii, Senator INOUYE, we began the process of trying to fix the $30 billion unmatched disbursement problem.

We established thresholds at which DOD must match disbursements with obligations—before making a payment.

This year, Senator STEVENS helped to reenergize and continue that process. He is helping to keep the pressure on.

And DOD Comptroller John Hamre is doing his part. He's helping, too.

In the coming months, both the General Accounting Office [GAO] and DOD Inspector General [IG] will be conducting detailed reviews of DOD's emerging capability to prematch disbursements.

Next year, at this time, I hope we are in a position to lay out a road map for ratcheting down the thresholds.

Next year, I hope we can move the threshold to zero.

Mr. President, as I have said many times, with $30 billion in unmatched disbursements, there are no effective internal controls over a big chunk of the DOD budget.

That means those accounts are vulnerable to theft and abuse.

Mr. President, we must keep the pressure on and keep moving down the road toward the time when all DOD payments are prematched.

I thank Senator STEVENS, Senator INOUYE, and Mr. John Hamre for their help in trying to fix this problem.

Mr. President, I would also like to seek the advice and assistance of the committee's leadership on another issue.

I am concerned about the possible existence of a slush fund at the Central Intelligence Agency [CIA].

Recent press reports suggest that bureaucrats in just one CIA office—the National Reconnaissance Office [NRO]—accumulated a pool of unspent money that totaled between $1 and $2 billion.

Now, I know that the committee has taken certain steps in this bill to recover some of the money.

The bill also includes restrictive language governing the availability of CIA appropriations.

The restrictive language is embodied in section 8070 of the bill.

I commend the committee for taking these important steps.

However, in my mind, the action taken in the bill is a short-term fix.

We need to get at the root cause of the problem.

We need to understand the mechanisms that allowed bureaucrats in the NRO—and possibly other CIA offices—to accumulate huge sums of money.

And we need to develop a long-term solution.

Mr. President, we must not allow the CIA to accumulate huge sums of money in a honey pot that lies outside of the law.

The CIA must handle unspent appropriations in ways that are consistent with the requirements of title 31 of the United States Code, and in particular, the M account reform law.

Senator ROTH and I have sent a letter on this matter to the committee chairman, Senator HATFIELD.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the letter to Senator HATFIELD, along with an article from the Washington Post on the same issue.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, October 3, 1995.
Hon. MARK O. HATFIELD,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MARK: We are writing to express concern about the possible existence of a slush fund at the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and to seek your help in launching an independent review to determine the origins of the money and root cause of the problem.

The source of our concern is a series of reports that appeared recently in the Washington Post and New York Times. These reports suggest that one office within the CIA—the National Reconnaissance Office—has accumulated "a pool of unspent money" that totals between $1 billion and $1.7 billion and that some of these funds may have been used for unauthorized purposes.

In the wake of these disturbing revelations, unnamed intelligence officials readily admitted: "The agency's financial practices were governed by custom, not by written rules. . . . Many of the financial practices were time-honored, but they were not documented. . . . They were just folklore" [New York Times, September 25, 1995, page 11].

On the surface, based solely on these very sketchy news reports, we have to conclude that the CIA's books need more scrutiny. A potential multi-billion dollar slush fund in just one CIA office plus a possible breakdown of discipline and integrity in accounting equals a recipe for abuse.

We must not allow the CIA to accumulate a "pot of gold" that lies outside of the law.

As you may remember, back in the late 1980's, Congress discovered the infamous M account slush fund at the Department of Defense (DOD) and at other agencies as well. The M accounts, which were also known as the "honey pot," were being used by DOD to circumvent the law—primarily the Anti-Deficiency Act (31 USC 1341)—and to fund cost overruns and other unauthorized activities beyond the purview of Congress. DOD, for instance, had stashed at least $50 billion in these accounts.

After holding extensive hearings that examined abusive M account practices as revealed in audit reports prepared by the Inspectors General and General Accounting Office, Congress took decisive steps to close down the entire M account operation.

The M account reform legislation was signed into law by the President on December 5, 1990. It is embodied in Sections 1405 and 1406 of Public Law 101-510. It closed the M accounts, canceled billions in unspent balances in "merged surplus authority," and place strict limits on the availability of "unspent" appropriations of the kind described in the above-mentioned press reports. To the best of my knowledge, this law applies to all government agencies, including the CIA.

The M account reform law in combination with all the other laws governing the use of appropriations—as spelled out in Title 31 of the U.S. Code—are supposed to make it very difficult—if not impossible—to create a slush fund within any government institution.

If the CIA is indeed "hoarding" money, as White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta has suggested, and stashing it away for a rainy day, then Congress needs to know about it. We should know about it because we have passed a law that is designed to prevent bureaucrats from accumulating money outside of the law. If the CIA has succeeded in doing that, then we would like to understand exactly how it was done. There may be a loophole in the law that needs to be plugged.

For these reasons, we are seeking your advice and assistance on how to initiate an independent review of the CIA's accounting records pertaining to balances of unobligated and unexpended appropriations.

We need to know if the CIA is complying with the M account reform act. Toward that end, certain questions need to be answered: Were the agency's merged surplus and M accounts closed and balances canceled as required by law? Are expired appropriation account balances being canceled after five years as required by law? Is the agency protecting the integrity of expired appropriations accounts as required by law? Have the agency's no-year accounts been handled according to law? No doubt, there are other important questions, but these are the ones that immediately come to mind.

Between August 1991 and October 1992, the GAO conducted an audit of residual M account monies throughout the government. The results of this audit were published in a report entitled "Agencies Actions to Eliminate M Accounts and Merged Surplus Authority" in June 1993, Report Number AFMD-93-7. Unfortunately, the CIA was not among the agencies reviewed. The GAO, we are told, cannot get the access needed to audit CIA accounts. The inability of the GAO to audit the CIA's books leaves a gaping hole in our knowledge regarding government-wide compliance with the M account reform law.

Mark, we would like to feel confident that the monies Congress appropriates for the CIA are being controlled and used in ways that are consistent with the requirements for Title 31 of the U.S. Code, and in particular, the M account reform law.

We have never examined a financial management issue at the CIA and need your advice on how to proceed with such a review.

Your assistance in this matter would be appreciated.

Sincerely,

CHARLES E. GRASSLEY,
U.S. Senator.
WILLIAM V. ROTH, JR.,
U.S. Senator.

DEFENSE GIVES ITS ACCOUNTING SYSTEM A '3'

(By Dana Priest)

Despite efforts to turn around what the Pentagon concedes is an error-prone, cross-eyed financial accounting system, top Defense Department officials yesterday said that on a scale of 1 to 10, the ability to track where $260 billion is spent each year rates only a sorry "3."

"We are far short" of being able to produce clean, auditable annual financial statements, Richard F. Keevey, director of the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, told a congressional panel yesterday.

Summoned by a subcommittee of the House Committee on Government Reform and Oversight—called in part to respond to Washington Post articles about the problem in May—the department's top financial officers and investigators from the General Accounting Office and the inspector general's office explained, defended and criticized the way the department manages the money Congress gives it.

Only three members of the subcommittee showed up, and one only briefly, perhaps a testimony to how arcane and complicated the subject can be.

Chairman Rep. Steve Horn (R-Calif.) described the state of Pentagon bookkeeping as something not even up to the standards of "every Mom and Pop store in America."

"What you're telling us today is a disgrace to the American fighting men and women," said ranking minority member Carolyn B. Maloney (D-N.Y.), her voice rising in frustration before she bolted out the door for a quick floor vote. "I'm sorry, I'm a little upset."

What was upsetting to Maloney and Horn was good news to the Pentagon officials who point out that their accounting problems are decades-old and are only now getting better. For instance:

The accumulated amount of payments that cannot be traced with certainty to particular purchases has fallen from $50 billion in June 1993 to $20.5 billion in September.

The department now refuses to pay any bill larger than $1 million without the proper bookkeeping. The threshold used to be $5 million, although the higher figure still applies to its major, trouble-plagued Columbus, Ohio, check writing center because contractors there complained that a new standard would dramatically slow payments.

On the other hand, department Inspector General Eleanor Hill testified the financial data "for the vast majority of [Defense Department] funds remain essentially not in condition to audit," according to Hill's written statement.

"The same types of system problems and internal control weaknesses that hamper preparation of annual financial statements," she said, "also impair the efficiency of day-to-day operations."

So concerned is the IG's office about the problems that it is deploying 700 auditors to snoop around the finance and auditing areas at the department. Still, it does not expect a significant turnaround until the year 2000, she said.

Mr. GRASSLEY. We are asking for advice on how to initiate an independent review of the CIA's accounting records pertaining to balances of unobligated and unexpended appropriations.

Mr. President, I would like some assurances from the chairman and ranking minority member that they will work with us in developing an acceptable approach to our request.

Our purpose is simple.

We want an independent review of the CIA's unspent balances.

Are they being maintained and controlled according to law?

But how do we do that?

We need the committee's advice and assistance.

We have been told, in news reports, that CIA Director John Deutch is launching his own investigation to review the NRO's "deliberately obscure fiscal practices."

That is fine and dandy.

But that's not an independent review.

I hope the committee will work with us to find a way to conduct an independent review of the CIA's unspent balances.

The taxpayers of this country have a right to know that their money is being spent according to law.

Mr. President, I would also like to ask the committee's leadership these three questions:

First, could the committee conduct an examination of the CIA's appropriations accounts to determine whether they are maintained and controlled as required by law?

Second, could the committee do the job if assisted by knowledgeable personnel from the DOD IG's office and the GAO?

Third, could the DOD IG do the job?

I just hope my two colleagues help us get to the bottom of sense things. I know you have the same concerns I do. But I would like to move forward with this, to make sure we are not—my point is, we are not relying just upon internal CIA investigations to make sure this does not happen. We ought to have some sort of independent, outside group, make sure that the job is being done and done correctly.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I welcome the attention of the Senator from Iowa to what we call the classified annex that discusses some of the problems that are raised with regard to the CIA carryforward funds. Others have referred to them as slush funds. I found no slush funds. I have found carryforward funds that represent program changes, programmatic decisions not to spend money but carry the money into the future, and downsizing that led to savings that were from money that was not limited in terms of years.

We have dealt with that. It is not proper, in my opinion, for us to discuss that here. I direct the consideration of the Senator from Iowa to discussing it with the Intelligence Committee. We take our lead from the Intelligence Committee and Armed Services Committee, but this year we did take an extraordinary initiative in dealing with these funds to make sure they would not be carried forward. It is discussed in our classified annex. I invite my colleague's attention to that.

I do not want to delay, if the Senator from South Carolina wishes some time. I am saddened to hear my friend discuss the needs of the Department of Defense, however, in the terms he has. I wish he would see these needs through my eyes. I get tired of seeing pilots fly C-130 E's that were made in 1964. I get tired of flying in VC-137's that were made in 1938. I get tired of going out and watching the people on the flightline go to fly and train in F-14's that were made in the 1970's, the early 1970's.

The 5-ton trucks we have in our Army were made in the 1960's, and we have not replaced them since. The M-1 tanks were made in the 1970's.

You find me any other part of our economy that is asked to train and live in things that are 30 years old. I remember, when I was a young man, how much General Patton criticized the Army because they were training in the 1940's in things that were made in the early 1930's. Our people pray that they train in things that were made in the early 1990's.

Again, I say to my friend, criticize the amount of this money if you wish, but if you do wish to criticize them, then take action to reduce the commitments of our people abroad. I read earlier today the number of our people who are permanently living abroad now. Almost 250,000 Americans plus their dependents live abroad permanently as members of the armed services. There is just no reason for those people to live and be in harm's way. Many of them are daily in harm's way, in equipment that is old. We are trying to upgrade our procurement. That is the basic decision we have made. We are trying to upgrade our research and development. That is another basic decision we made.

Senator INOUYE and I face a severe amount of criticism concerning the amount of money in this bill. We are now in a 7-year, level-funded concept for the Department of Defense. We reached out and brought some of that, from the late 1990's, into this bill because we can save money. We are doing our best to stretch this money out so it will not make additional demands on the American taxpayers.

At the same time, I ask, how many of us are driving home in 1964 cars? If the American public wants us to have a status as a world power, and we are the only world power left; if we want someone in the world to have the capabilities we have; then we must fund our people so they can carry out their responsibilities and live in doing it. We are losing too many people, now, because they are flying and driving in and on vessels that are too old. We are doing our very best to do it, and I do not like to hear Members of the Senate complain about the amount of money we are spending given the commitments.

If you do not like the commitments, then use your power to stop the deployment of our forces abroad. Consider again deployment of forces to Bosnia. Consider whether we need to still have people in Haiti.

Did you know they were supposed to be out by March? They are still there.

Mr. GRASSLEY. They will be there until after the election, because things are going to blow up if they get out, and it will make the President look bad.

Mr. STEVENS. But you have to finance them. If they are not going to get them back and you have to keep them there, keep them there safe. They are still in Rwanda. Around Iraq, we have a no-fly zone. There are young pilots flying over that country every day to prevent them from launching once again and becoming the second largest Air Force in the world.

I tell you, my friend, I understand the Senator from Iowa with regard to the financial management. Incidentally, those problems came about because we brought all the records into Washington. It used to be if you wanted to audit these things, you could go to Denver, go to San Francisco, go to Panama, go somewhere in the world and find those records.

Five years ago we just consolidated them in Washington. That is still going on. It is true that there are a lot of those disbursements and the record of what was gotten for the disbursements have not been matched up. That is a delay in the computerization program in terms of verifying expenditures once they have been authorized. I agree 100 percent.

We have done more in this bill, I think, than the Senator has ever had done before to meet his objectives, and we agree we ought to have—and by the end of next fiscal year, 1997, I hope we will have—the zero amount there.

We should be able to balance our checkbook. I do not know about the Senator from Iowa, but I still have trouble balancing my checkbook and figuring out what I wrote the check for. I know where I wrote the check that I got something for, but sometimes I do not write down what I write it for. That is what happened at the Department of Defense. No one has brought before us positive fraud or thievery. It is a question of lining up the records of actual acquisitions with regards to authorization for expenditure. We are doing our best to do that.

The other committee which I chair, the Governmental Affairs Committee, will be happy to work with the Senator from Iowa on that matter. I thank him for his consideration. The only thing I wish we would do is look again at the amount of money we need to put up for the armed services, for the people who are doing the job for us to be in harm's way as a superpower. If we do not want to do that, then let us cut the budget. If you want us to do the job we are doing, then you have to fund what these people need, and you have to give them the assistance that will help keep them alive.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Could I please have 2 minutes?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, first of all, in Iowa for the benefit of the Senator, I drive a 1961 Oldsmobile 98. So some of us do drive around in old cars.

Mr. STEVENS. Mine is a 1965 Ford.

Mr. GRASSLEY. The second thing is you complimented me for what I was doing on accounting. But you castigated me for what I was saying about the level of expenditures, it seemed to me. My point is they are very, very tied together. It seems to me that before we put more money into the pot, we ought to be able to prove what we are buying, and have a system of accounting that makes sure that every dollar that we put into defense gets us a dollar's worth of defense.

The second thing, and more appropriate to what the Senator from Alaska was saying about the level of expenditure—I think I said this on the floor in the debate originally—but I was told by leaders on military issues in the House of Representatives when we were on the budget—and I am the second senior person on the Budget Committee; so I was involved in those discussions—confidentially they said to me, "CHUCK, you know we have to have about $6 or $7 billion more than what the President wants because we have to take care of our Members. We have to take care of our Members."

Mr. STEVENS. Who said that?

Mr. GRASSLEY. I am not going tell the Senator who said that.

Mr. STEVENS. It was not this Senator.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I am talking about leaders in the other body. "We need $6 or $7 billion to take care of our Members," meaning projects that Members had that they wanted in the Defense budget.

That is just exactly the amount of money that we are above the President's figures. So I figure we have about $6 or $7 billion in here just to take care of a bunch of pork barrelers.

That is what I am complaining about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator from South Carolina, if you do not mind, asked us to yield him time. I will do so. Then we would be happy to take care of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNETT). The Senator from South Carolina.

How long does the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENS. Such time as he uses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I want to join my colleagues in complimenting Senator STEVENS, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense Appropriations and Senator INOUYE, the ranking member of the subcommittee for bringing this conference report to the floor. This has been a difficult conference for them and I congratulate them on their diligence and perseverance in arriving at this conference report.

Mr. President, as I have indicated many times, these conference reports represent compromises made by both the House and Senate. They will never please everyone. There are items in this report that I believe could be better, but on the whole it provides the critical funds to ensure the continued readiness of our forces both in the near term and in the out years.

Mr. President, we may soon have to vote on commiting our forces to maintain the peace agreement in Bosnia. Although I may object to sending the forces, I am confident that they will have the means and training to carry out the mission. I am confident of that fact because over the past years the Congress has provided the funds to ensure their capabilities. The conference report that we are considering today provides the funds to ensure our armed services can continue to fulfill their mission and the tasks that are placed on them by our Nation.

Mr. President, I want to thank my good friends, Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUYE, for their dedication to and support of our Armed Forces. They have brought a sound conference report to the Senate and I urge the Senate to support them and this conference report.

In closing, I want to say this: There is nothing more important to this Nation than to keep a strong defense. It means our very survival. We could do without a lot of things, many things. But we cannot neglect our defense, if we want to maintain this great Nation. Our Constitution provides this country with the greatest freedom of any nation in the world. It provides us with more justice, more opportunity, and more hope than any people have ever been provided in the history of the world. And we want to keep this. But, to keep this, we have to keep a strong defense.

Again, I compliment Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUYE for this fine report.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I reserve the remainder of our time and Senator McCAIN's time under my control.

Mr. GLENN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. INOUYE. I am pleased to yield 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I wanted to comment on Senator GRASSLEY's concern. His concern is very well taken about the fact that we have an inadequate accounting system over at the Defense Department. But let me carry it beyond defense also.

We also have an inadequate accounting system across all of our Government. Governmental Affairs worked on this going back about 7 or 8 years in the late 1980's, and for the first time—it is unbelievable that up until 1990 there was no requirement in the Federal Government to do a bottom-line audit at the end of the year. Some departments did it. Some agencies did it. Some did not. The Defense Department was one that basically did not. We put through a Chief Financial Officer Act; arcane, people did not even show up at hearings because it was such a boring subject. But once we passed that act, as Charles Bowsher, head of the GAO, said, it was probably the "best financial management act that we passed around here in the last 40 years," to quote his words.

Over in Department of Defense, they are trying to get that under control.

But back in the years before that we would not even give them the money to do the upgrades on computers, and so on, to manage their equipment, manage their accounts.

I have been out to the DFAS Center, the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, and have gone through what they go through on trying to decide whether to pay a bill or not. Do you know what they are doing? They go from an office, and they go down the hall to a warehouse. They go down a long line of hundreds of thousands of manila envelopes, folders on metal racks, bring those files back, and lay them out on the table to decide. Yes; we will pay this, or not that, or something else. That is the way much of this work has been done.

They are making great strides. They have even contracted some of this out. I have been out there. I think we are making great strides and John Hamre deserves a lot of credit for taking this on.

Have we solved the problems yet in the time period to 1990? No, we have not. So we do not have the problem solved yet. But we are making progress. Meanwhile, I can quote horror story after horror story about how contractors have sent back in $700 million they said we had not sent bills in for, and things like that.

I wanted to add my support for Senator GRASSLEY's concern. I share his concern. I just want everyone to know that we are making progress in this area. I do not think we will have it by the end of next year, as Senator STEVENS said. It is still a big job over there to get done. We are making a lot of progress in this area. We never required that until 1990.

Mr. STEVENS. I said the end of fiscal 1997.

Mr. GLENN. I misunderstood. I am sorry.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to the conference report on the Department of Defense appropriations bill, and I would like to take this opportunity to outline several of my concerns.

In the coming year, American families across this country will begin to feel the very real effects of the budget cuts this Congress has made in most of the fiscal year 1996 appropriations bills. Programs across the spectrum are being deeply cut or eliminated in an attempt to eliminate this country's spiraling national debt.

Unfortunately, while the Republican spending bills make deep cuts in programs for children, the poor, veterans, and the elderly, defense spending has been insulated from cuts and, in fact, increased dramatically. The bill before us increases defense spending by $7 billion above the President's request, at a time when we are cutting $270 billion from Medicare, $170 billion from Medicaid, $114 billion from welfare, $36 billion from nutrition programs, and $5 billion from student loans.

Mr. President, I have a deep and strong respect for our Nation's military, which is second to none in the world. Our Armed Forces deserve the gratitude of this Nation for the protection and security they provide to the American people. Congress has an obligation to ensure that our military personnel are adequately compensated for their work, and that they have the best tools possible to work with as they undertake their many and difficult missions.

But in this era of shared sacrifice where no one is spared the budget ax—not children, seniors, nor veterans—I cannot support a bill that goes so far beyond the Pentagon's request for defense spending and fails to cancel even a single major weapons program. This bill is a bad deal for the taxpayer and a bad deal for our military, who will have to live with unrequested and unneeded weapons systems provided for them from a Congress that refuses to take no for an answer.

During the cold war, Americans made sacrifices here at home so that our national resources could be used to defeat communism around the globe. The Berlin Wall fell in 1989, and with it, the Warsaw Pack. The Soviet Union officially dissolved in 1991. We fought the war, and we won.

In the aftermath of the cold war, I believe American families deserve to live in a safer and more stable world. They deserve to know that more of their tax dollars are going to educate their children and police their streets.

Time and again when this body has debated domestic spending bills my Republican colleagues have urged us to have the courage to cut funding for this program or that program—saying they have outlived their usefulness.

So why, Mr. President, does the bill we are voting on today continue funding for several cold war-era programs that have clearly outlived their usefulness? And where, Mr. President, are the calls for courage to terminate programs we cannot afford?

For example, the conference report provides $700 million as a downpayment on a third Seawolf nuclear-powered attack submarine. Nearly everyone acknowledges that this third Seawolf is not necessary to meet force structure requirements. This program, as my colleagues know, was designed to combat the "great Soviet Navy"—a Navy that is now in port and in serious need of repair.

Supporters of this program claim that construction of this third Seawolf is needed to preserve the submarine industrial base. But Mr. President, overall the Seawolf program has cost the taxpayers of this Nation $12.9 billion. In this budget climate, it is inexcusable to continue funding the Seawolf, especially given the lack of mission for this submarine.

Likewise, it is simply unforgivable that the bill before us resurrects funding for the B-2 bomber program, providing $493 million to keep that program alive. This, despite the fact that several years ago Congress agreed to terminate this program after 20 planes had been built, because Congress recognized that in the aftermath of the cold war, this aircraft lacks a realistic mission.

Nonetheless, it appears that Congress is on a path to fund yet another 20 planes which, according to the Pentagon, will cost $31.5 billion in the coming years. The Pentagon does not want this program, and clearly cannot afford it.

The Pentagon does not want to take on the immense financial obligations of further B-2 procurement—knowing that this unneeded system will take precious and scarce dollars away from other priorities.

Let's keep these issues in perspective. The unmasked for and unneeded funding this bill provides for the B-2 bomber—the $493 million—is more than enough money to pay the tuition, room and board, and book costs of all the undergraduates at the University of Washington for their entire 4 years. That's 20,500 students.

And as I've noted, the money provided this year is just a downpayment on the $31.5 billion that will ultimately be needed to build 20 more planes. For that amount, 1.3 million Washington State residents could get a 4-year education at the University of Washington.

Ironically, the conference report we are considering today fails to fund one program that I believe is a real cost saver for the Pentagon and the taxpayer, and provides an effective response to our Nation's airlift problems. The Non-Developmental Airlift Aircraft Program [NDAA], designated as a pilot program under the Federal Acquisition and Streamlining Act of 1994, is an ideal model that demonstrates how commercial products can support military missions. I am disappointed that the conference committee failed to provide funding for NDAA, which stands to improve our current airlift shortfall and provide several billion dollars in budgetary cost savings.

So, Mr. President, as we ask teachers and students to accept dramatic cuts in education spending, worker training programs, and student loan programs, so too must we find ways to trim our defense budget.

And as we ask preschoolers and their parents to accept deep cuts in Head Start funding, we must find ways to trim our defense budget.

And as we ask rural Americans to accept cuts in mandatory agriculture spending, we must find ways to trim our defense spending.

And as we ask children and the elderly to shoulder billions in Medicare and Medicaid cuts, we must find ways to trim our defense budget. In America today, one in four children, and one in three infants, are covered by Medicaid.

And as we ask our Nation's scientific community to accept millions in cuts for basic research, we must find ways to cut our defense spending.

In the coming years, the Republican budget blueprint increases the veterans' contribution for GI bill education benefits, and freezes funding for the VA's medical system at the 1995 level for the next 7 years, cutting access to health care for veterans around the Nation. Under the Republican proposal, the VA will be forced to close the equivalent of 35 of its 170 hospitals and deny care to over 1 million of our Nation's vets.

Proponents of this bill point to recent declines in defense spending with alarm. While spending for our military is down from the mid-1980's level, we must keep this trend in perspective. The United States today has the largest military budget and the most powerful military force in the world.

The combined military budgets of Russia, Iraq, China, North Korea, Libya, Iran, Syria, and Cuba total $95 billion annually. That is one-third the level of U.S. defense spending. Each year, the United States spends more than the next nine of the world's biggest military spenders combined.

In fact, this country spends so much for defense, even the Pentagon can't keep track of it all. According to the GAO and the Pentagon's inspector general, as well as the Pentagon's Controller John Hamre, billions of defense dollars are lost year after year due to poor recordkeeping and lax accounting practices at the Department of Defense.

At the very least, Congress should hold defense spending to the President's level until the Pentagon can fix their payment procedures and bring some accountability to the system. We owe that much to the Nation's taxpayers.

But most of all, in order to project strength abroad, we must gain strength here at home. Our national security, in my view, will not be strengthened by yet more guns and missiles. We need to restore global economic leadership. We must invest in our children and their future—in their education and their health. We must rebuild our cities and our infrastructure, and invest in technology and scientific research.

We must ensure that the economy our children inherit in the next century is sound and growing.

So, in closing, Mr. President, it is with regret and disappointment that I must vote "no" on this bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President I am pleased that we are able to consider the Defense appropriations bill conference report today. I commend Chairman STEVENS and Senator INOUYE for their work in hammering out the necessary compromise allowing us to bring this bill to the floor. The Defense appropriations bill, which funds the greatest share of the Nation's defense spending, is one of the most important bills we pass each year.

This year the Republican-led Congress is keeping our promise to the American people to restore our national security. We have turned the corner on defense spending. As a result of the Republican leadership and the hard work of the chairman, Senator STEVENS, we no longer head down the path to a hollow military. Most of the funds Congress added will restore funding for the procurement and research & developments accounts—accounts neglected by the current administration. Without this funding, the armed services face a nearly insurmountable modernization bow wave in the very near future.

The President and administration officials have spoken at length about maintaining readiness, but they've failed to consider the impact of the insufficient funding on the readiness of our forces in the future. This administration has maintained short term readiness at the expense of our future forces. And no one should forget that the President's force plan required significant force enhancements. But those enhancements have not been fielded. The bottom line is that under the Clinton administration, our forces have become smaller, but not more capable.

With this bill the Republican-led Congress sends a very clear message. We have fulfilled our responsibility to provide our forces with the most modern equipment available, ensuring their overwhelming superiority on the battlefield. We have taken steps to ensure that our forces, though smaller, maintain the ability to project power around the world—quickly and decisively. This Congress has taken the lead in protecting both our deployed forces and our home land against ballistic missile attack.

The President and many on the other side of the aisle oppose this bill. But the choice is clear. If you vote for this bill, you vote to restore our national defense. If you vote against it, you vote to continue down the path to a hollow force.

In closing, I again commend the chairman and ranking member for their work on this critical legislation and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, providing funds for our national defense is one of the most important functions we in Congress are entrusted with. I take with particular seriousness my duties on the Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense, since we provide taxpayer dollars for weapons, people, and training.

I have the deepest respect for our subcommittee chairman, Senator STEVENS, and for our ranking member, Senator INOUYE. For many years, whether the Congress is controlled by Republicans or Democrats, the heads of this subcommittee have provided reasoned, nonpartisan leadership on defense issues.

This bill will spend $6.9 billion more than the President's request at a time when virtually every other discretionary spending account is being cut. I would support this expenditure if there were an imminent threat to the Nation, of if there were some glaring deficiency in our defenses. Neither of those conditions have been met, in my judgment. While we are cutting Medicare, school loans, and veterans benefits, this bill spends $493 million for more B-2 bombers that the President didn't request and that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Air Force Chief of Staff say they do not want. Twenty more B-2's will cost us $31 billion, and there are no funds in our 5-year defense plan for these planes. This program is questionable from a defense perspective, and especially irresponsible in the larger context of our pursuit of a balanced budget.

I was also disappointed that the House conferees were successful in including restrictions on a woman's right to choose an abortion at Department of Defense medical facilities. This provision has no place on an appropriations bill and I am saddened that the Senate has accepted this provision in conference.

There are other aspects of this bill that I disagree with, but the increased funding, additional B-2 bomber procurement, and antiabortion language caused me to respectfully disagree with my chairman and ranking member, and to vote against this conference report.

Mr. BRADLEY. October 1, Mr. President. Every year, we have until October 1 to pass the 13 necessary spending bills that keep our Government running. This year, when it became clear that Congress would not be able to complete floor action on these bills by this deadline, we passed a continuing resolution to keep the Government running until November 13. Still, the additional 6 weeks proved insufficient for Congress to complete action on these bills.

Our Government is now shut down because Republicans in the House and Republicans in the Senate cannot agree with each other on what should and should not be included in these bills. In large part, the appropriations bills presented before us have been seriously flawed, so much so that Republicans themselves cannot agree on them. As Republican House and Senate conferees continue to bicker in back rooms, several hundred thousand Federal employees are home, waiting for a paycheck that is not coming. The so-called faceless, nameless bureaucrat waits, wondering how he or she will put food on the table, make the next mortgage payment, or prepare for the coming holiday season. Thousands of citizens wait to obtain a passport, a visa, file for Social Security, and so on. Congress has once again failed the American people.

It is time to put this budget impasse behind us. We will only be able to do so if the majority party presents us with fair and responsible spending bills to send to the President's desk.

This brings me to the legislation we now face, the Department of Defense appropriations report. As the Republicans claim to want a balanced budget, they now put before us a defense spending bill bloated beyond one's wildest imagination. Let me remind my colleagues on the opposite side of the aisle that the cold war is over. Let me repeat that. The cold war is over.

We must put an end to outdated notions—outdated notions of America's defense needs and outdated notions of the threats to U.S. security. The Defense appropriations bill reported out of the conference committee is designed for the cold war era—an era that has ended. This budget embodies outdated notions and adopts an outdated approach to our national security. I therefore urge that the conference report be rejected.

Rather than focusing on threats that no longer exist, we must begin focusing on the realities of the present day and the fundamental transformations that are shaping the world and our country. Chief among those transformations are the end of the cold war and our runaway debt. These transformations have enormous political, strategic, and economic implications. They are changing the way we must view the world and the role of the United States in that world.

The end of the cold war, for example, has brought a period of transition. We are no longer faced with a Soviet threat. Rather, we are confronted with a period of transition—a work in progress—as Russia and other countries move to define themselves and their relationships with the United States and the rest of the world. This transition period has brought with it different and very real threats for which we must be prepared. Ethnic conflicts and renegade nuclear proliferation, among others, are threats that must be recognized, met, and defeated.

Economically, these transformations have changed the way that we produce things, the services that are offered and the way that we must compete in global markets to be successful. Jobs have been lost and our enormous debt places very real limits on our spending choices. This has very real implications for U.S. security interests, which obviously depend not only on military power, but on economic power as well. It is crucial that our military power be supported by a strong and vital economy and work force. This in turn requires fiscal responsibility, not the current runaway deficit spending. It also requires difficult choices. In short, we simply cannot afford to waste millions of dollars on outdated programs that will not serve our national security or our economic interests.

But that is precisely what this defense budget does. Rather than directing scarce resources where they are needed, this budget funds exorbitantly expensive and unnecessary programs.

As you will remember, I spoke against the Defense appropriations bill when it was considered by this body in August. Since then, that bill has gone to committee to be reconciled with the House version. What has resulted is even worse than could have been expected. No program was eliminated. Rather, when there were competing budget items in the House and Senate bills, the committee accepted the extravagances of both, never mind that they were redundant or not even necessary in the first place.

Take, for example, the funding of two types of marine amphibious assault ships—the LHD-7 amphibious assault ship included in the Senate bill—a ship that the administration did not even request. In the House bill, funding was provided for the similar PD-17 amphibious assault ship. Rather than choose one or the other, this budget funds both at a cost of almost $2.3 billion. This is fiscal irresponsibility and it is not in our national security interests.

This budget also provides for increases for the B-2 bomber program—an increase that the Pentagon doesn't even want. Indeed, the Pentagon-sponsored May 1995 study opposed any further purchases for this system. But throwing such recommendations to the wind, this budget increases funding by $493 million.

Not only does this budget fund B-2 increases, it provides over $2.2 billion for the competing F-22—a program that the House appropriations subcommittee zeroed out as long ago as 1989 for its highly unrealistic assumptions about funding levels and possibly unrealizable technical goals. Now, the F-22 is 1,300 pounds overweight, its stealth signature is larger than expected and there are questions about its software. But this budget continues to fund it although both the CBO and GAO found that the lower cost F/A-18E/F could do the job.

This budget also provides $700 million for a third Seawolf submarine that we simply do not need and that is far too costly. Although the Bush administration proposed halting this program in 1992, we have already funded a second one, and this budget would add a clearly unnecessary third.

This budget provides $757.6 million for the continued development of the V-22 Osprey, a program that the Bush administration tried to kill 4 years ago and whose mission can be performed more cheaply and reliably with the procurement of CH-53E helicopters.

This budget provides $299 million for the Comanche. Not only is the Comanche unproven and experiencing developmental problems, its air combat missions can be performed at a much lower cost by the Apache. Even the Defense Department had proposed limiting this program to the production of two prototypes. But this budget not only continues to fund those prototypes, it increases funding by $100 million over the administration's request for full-scale production.

With all these increases, it is not surprising that this budget exceeds the administration's request by nearly $7 billion. But this increase in funding does not represent an increase in our national security. Rather such fiscal irresponsibility will do more to harm our national security than to improve it.

Too much of this $243 billion Defense budget represents nothing more than a jobs program. It funds defense contractors for weapons that we simply do not need and increases funding for programs like the B-2 against the Pentagon's own recommendations. It is true that the end of the cold war era has required a substantial drop in jobs in the defense sector. Defense jobs will decline from 7.2 million to 4.2 million by 1996. This job loss in the defense industry clearly must be addressed. However, the answer is not found in funding jobs through unnecessary weapons programs.

This is a budget for a time now gone, not a budget for today, let alone tomorrow. I urge my colleagues to join me in rejecting it.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the conference report accompanying H.R. 2126, the 1996 Department of Defense appropriations bill.

I commend the distinguished chairman and ranking member, and all the conferees, for bringing the Senate a bill that meets the most critical needs of the U.S. military for the defense of our Nation.

The conferees have achieved this significant accomplishment even though the Defense Subcommittee contributed additional defense spending authority to both the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Subcommittee, which I chair, and the Military Construction Subcommittee. These subcommittees also fund vital programs related to our national defense.

Mr. President, the conference agreement on defense appropriations provides a total of $243.3 billion in budget authority and $163.2 billion in new outlays for the programs of the Department of Defense in fiscal year 1996.

When outlays from prior-year budget authority and other completed actions are taken into account, the conference agreement provides a total of $243.3 billion in budget authority and $242.9 billion in outlays for fiscal year 1996.

The Senate bill is within the subcommittee's revised section 602(b) allocation for both budget authority and outlays.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the relationship of the pending bill to the subcommittee's 602(b) allocation pursuant to the 1996 budget resolution be printed in the RECORD.

I thank the conferees for their consideration of several important items that I brought to their attention.

I urge my colleagues to adopt this bill.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESEARCH EFFORTS AT HISPANIC-SERVING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if I might engage the distinguished chairman in a brief colloquy.

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly. I am always happy to hear from the senior Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the chairman. Mr. President, let me begin by acknowledging again the efforts of the chairman and the committee for their diligent and steadfast efforts to produce a fiscal year 1996 Defense appropriations bill.

Furthermore, I would like to acknowledge the committee's support for the historically black college and university and minority institutions [HBCU/MI] account, particularly language within the account that encourages the Department to continue its support for minority institutions, including Hispanic-serving institutions [HSI's], through academic collaborations for research and education related to science and technology. This language carries a considerable amount of importance for the education and research community in my home State of New Mexico.

Three Hispanic-serving institutions in my State; the University of New Mexico, New Mexico State University, and New Mexico Highlands University have teamed up with the University of Puerto Rico, the largest minority institution in the country, to develop an academic program that will foster the growth of Hispanic students in science and technology. This collaboration was created out of the need to strengthen the competitiveness and capabilities of Hispanic students in these fields. Such a collaborative effort will effectively contribute to the development of a critical mass of talent and substantially enhanced research opportunities for DOD that are uniquely available at these institutions. As we look to advance the Department's research capabilities, programs such as the ones established between these fine institutions of higher learning should be encouraged.

Mr. STEVENS. I would note that my colleague makes a strong case in support of this initiative. I, too, understand the importance HBCU/MI programs play in the research efforts and capabilities of the Department.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the chairman for his support of the HBCU/MI account and I urge the committee's continued support for future research activities at these institutions related to our national security interests.

BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE ORGANIZATION TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss an item that concerns the Phillips Laboratory.

Mr. STEVENS. I welcome such a discussion with the senior Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am concerned that language in the report accompanying the Senate-passed Defense appropriation bill, specifically Report 104–124, contains language regarding ballistic missile defense that is subject to misinterpretation. The language states the following:

> In order to optimize follow-on technology development, the Committee directs BMDO to designate the Army Space and Strategic Defense Command (SSDC) as a center of excellence for technology development. The Committee believes that commonality in requirements offers the potential for cost savings through centralized screening and common, technology development, with SSDC functioning as the executive agent to BMDO, to help assure that duplication is avoided, and efficiencies are maximized.

Mr. STEVENS. We certainly would not want this language to be misinterpreted. Would you elaborate on your concerns?

Mr. DOMENICI. One of the goals of this language is to avoid duplication, save funds, and maximize efficiency. These goals are supported by everyone. However, certain aspects of the language, as written, could be misconstrued to mean that Phillips Laboratory missile defense programs and the associated technologies could be transferred to SSDC.

Mr. STEVENS. It was not the intention to transfer any programs. I am told that SSDC works primarily on ground-based systems, while the Phillips Laboratory works primarily on space-base systems. Furthermore, there are a number of order DOD commands and laboratories which can serve BMDO's technology needs in these and other areas.

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes, I agree with the chairman of the Defense Subcommittee. I sought clarification to make clear that the intent is not to move programs. Thus, the proposed space-based laser, the airborne laser, and the supporting space-related technologies should remain at Phillips Laboratory. The laboratory has made great progress in these areas.

Mr. STEVENS. It was never our intention to do otherwise.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator and would just like to clarify one additional point. It is clearly not the intent of this language to give any authority to SSDC or BMDO with regard to any Air Force-funded programs at the Phillips Laboratory. It is only intended to have effect on the SSDC and BMDO Programs. Is that the understanding of the distinguished chairman?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, that is my understanding of the language's intent.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the distinguished chairman for the opportunity to be heard on this issue.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I had hoped we could avoid a train wreck as we try to wrap up our budget and appropriations work. Now I hope we can work together in a bipartisan way to solve these problems, for that is surely what the public wants. And the public wants us to function with common sense in an intelligent way to keep the Government going as we make these decisions.

But the public also knows it does not make sense to be adding $7 billion to the defense budget so we can build more B–2 bombers, F–15 and F–16 fighters, and other equipment that the Pentagon doesn't want, and at the same time threaten to cut education, crime prevention, and other programs that are so critical to the security of our people.

And so I rise to indicate that I cannot support this conference report, as I voted against final passage of the Senate bill several months ago. While the conferees have removed some of the provisions of the bill that I opposed, this bill still has far more total funding than the Pentagon needs and more than the Department of Defense asked for.

The President has already indicated that he would veto the bill. On October 18, in a letter to House Appropriations Committee Chairman LIVINGSTON, where he said:

> . . . by appropriating $6.9 billion more than I requested, the Conference Report did not address my fundamental concerns about spending priorities. . . . Absent a broader agreement with Congress that adequately funds crucial domestic programs in other appropriations bills, I will veto any defense appropriations bill that adds extra billions for defense programs not in my request.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the President's letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, October 18, 1995.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter regarding the conference report on the Fiscal Year 1996 Defense Appropriations Act. I want you to know that I appreciate your hard work and leadership on this bill, as well as that of Senators Stevens and Inouye. The Conference Report had many commendable features. For example, a number of policy provisions that raised serious constitutional and national security concerns were satisfactorily resolved in conference, and funding was secured for several programs that were of particular importance to me and to the national security of this country, including the Cooperative Threat Reduction program and the Technology Reinvestment Project.

However, by appropriating $6.9 billion more than I requested, the Conference Report did not address my fundamental concerns about spending priorities. As the bill now goes back to conference following its defeat on the House floor, it is important that the conferees understand where I stand. Absent a broader agreement with Congress that adequately funds crucial domestic programs in other appropriations bills, I will veto any defense appropriations bill that adds extra billions for defense program not in my request.

I am ready to work with Congress to ensure that we reach that agreement.

Sincerely,

BILL CLINTON.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, that veto writing has been on the wall even longer. Alice Rivlin, OMB Director indicated 10 weeks ago, when this conference report first went before the House, that the President would veto it. I would ask unanimous consent that her letter to House Minority Leader GEPHARDT of September 29, 1995 be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Washington, DC, September 29, 1995.

Hon. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT,
Minority Leader, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. LEADER: I understand that the House may consider the conference report on the FY '96 defense appropriations bill today.

As he has shown in his 10-year plan, the President that we can balance the budget and maintain a strong defense without sacrificing critical investments in education and training, science and technology, environmental protection, and other priorities—all of which are essential to raise the standard of living for average Americans. By providing $6.9 billion more than the President requested, however, this bill would divert funds from our needed investment in these critical areas.

Now that the House has passed 12 of the 13 appropriations bills and the Senate all but two, the trade-of between defense and domestic investments are all the more clear. In an environment of limited resources, we have to use available funds as prudently as possible. We simply cannot allocate nearly $7 billion more than we need at this time for defense, and starve our needed investments in education and training and other priorities.

The changes to the bill in conference, while commendable in many instances, do not address the Administration's fundamental concerns about spending priorities. For this reason, in the absence of an agreement between the Administration and Congress resolving these important issues, the President would veto this bill.

Sincerely,

ALICE M. RIVLIN, Director.

Mr. LEVIN. The President's original Pentagon budget provided for a strong defense. It funded the priorities of the armed services and recognized that in the post-cold war world we have to prepare for different threats, not conduct business as usual. We cannot afford to buy equipment that is in excess of our military requirements, or make long-term funding commitments that are not sustainable, like signing up for another $30 billion or higher tab for 20 more B-2 bombers. If we follow that course, we are actually robbing from our future security, robbing resources that should go into keeping our troops well-trained and keeping our forces in high readiness and high morale, modernizing equipment in areas we ignored for too long, and continuing research and development on future modernization.

Instead, the conferees have sent us a bill that includes $493 million as a down-payment on what will be at least a $30 billion program to build 20 more B-2 bombers not requested by the Pentagon. Secretary of Defense Perry has been saying all year that we should not add funding for more B-2's. He said, as this bill was taking shape in September that the B-2 money "was put in against my explicit advice."

Was Bill Perry, the acknowledged "father of stealth", alone in his judgment? No, that judgment is shared by the General Shalikashvili, by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and by the President. The Senate bill did not include that money for B-2's. In fact, it was in the original Defense authorization bill mark of the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, and the committee voted to cut it out, by a strong bipartisan vote of 13-8.

What else did the conferees include that was not requested by the Pentagon and not authorized by the Senate? For 6 new F-16 fighters, $159 million. That is a program we in the Senate have voted to terminate at least three times, including this year. We have a surplus of F-16's in the force; we do not need any more. The conferees included $311 million for 6 new F-15 fighters, also not requested and not authorized by the Senate this year. For an LHD-7 landing ship $1.3 billion that was not even in the 5-year defense plan, but was moved forward for purchase in this appropriations bill.

That is not all. The conference report also doubles the Defense Department's request for national missile defense research, from $370 million to $745 million, and funds a $30 million Antisatellite Weapons Program that was not requested by the Pentagon.

What was not funded in the conference report? Ongoing operations, misnamed "contingencies" by the Pentagon, receive some finding, about $600 million, but not the full $1.1 billion we know we will have to pay in fiscal year 1996 for ongoing operations that are already in place. This shortfall is a direct threat to readiness, precisely the area that so many in Congress expressed concern about just within the last year. Training and maintenance accounts could end up being the source of funds to pay for these operations and that could hurt the readiness of some divisions.

The Technology Reinvestment Program, which is trying to preserve our cutting edge research capability for the future by supporting dual-use development programs on a cost-shared, competitive basis, was slashed by more than half by the conferees to only $195 million. And Mr. President, there is much more.

This conference report is not in step with our priority security requirements; not in step with the priorities of the Joint Chiefs, the Secretary of Defense and the President. It is not fiscally responsible. We can and should do better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. STEVENS. How much time does the Senator seek?

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Five minutes or three minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska controls 15 minutes and 30 seconds.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield the Senator 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I want to say that I have been watching this subcommittee deliberation on this very important defense authorization appropriations bill. I know how hard it has been to get this bill through. I have watched the negotiations with the House Members. I have watched the negotiations between the Members. I have heard some of the debate on the floor in the last few hours. Of course, there are things that one Member may not think are the priorities for another Member. But there is an equal force on the other side that does not like something else in it. It is very difficult to bring people together.

But the bottom line here in the big picture is that we have put more into defense appropriations this year than the President sent up here, and we did that in a bipartisan effort because so many of us are concerned that we have a false sense of security, that we are in a safe world, that the United States can pare down its military, and we do not have to be the superpower that is ready in any eventuality. That is not the case. I compliment Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUYE for bringing the parties together and forging a bill that does spend enough money to make sure that we are going into the next century strong.

It is not as strong as I would like it to be. There are other priorities that I might like to see. I understand the concerns of some of the Senators who have spoken here, but the bottom line is, we are a deliberative body and we have to give and take on priorities as long as we meet the cap that we have put in the budget resolution, and that is exactly what we have done here.

So I compliment the two Senators who are the chairman and ranking member of this very important committee.

I want to say especially that one of the concerns that I have that has been met in this bill is something I hope we are going to talk about in the next few days, and that is the sense of the Senate that is a part of this bill which says that "no funds available to the Department of Defense shall be obligated or expended for deployment or participation of United States Armed Forces in any peacekeeping operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina unless such deployment or participation is specifically authorized by a law enacted after the date of enactment of this act."

Now, this excludes the kind of operations we have had this year—the air cover, the participation that we have had on the periphery. That is excluded, but it does have a sense of the Senate that we will not spend funds unless we specifically authorize those funds for that kind of peacekeeping operation.

This is just the beginning of the real debate that is going to come on the floor of this Senate in the next few weeks about what the role of our armed services should be in Bosnia. I am going to argue very forcefully that it is not our role to send American troops on the ground in Bosnia. We are starting that debate tonight when we pass this bill.

We are saying it is the sense of the Senate that we must be consulted and we must pass specific authorization and appropriations before we send our troops in, and that that is for a number of reasons. It is because we have not staked out the United States security interest that would require troops on the ground. It is because we have not staked out that this is going to be the death of NATO if American troops are not on the ground. In fact, I think it is the opposite. I think it is important that we have the strength of NATO by saying exactly what our leadership role will be, and there are many things we can do that do not include our troops on the ground.

So, Mr. President, I am just saying that the sense of the Senate will be passed tonight. It is very important, and I hope the President of the United States is listening to this debate. I hope he is listening to the importance to all of us that he come to Congress for enactment before he sends peacekeeping troops to Bosnia.

I thank the two leaders on this bill. I appreciate what they are doing for this country, and I am going to support the bill wholeheartedly. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I yield back all the time on this side.

I ask unanimous consent that following the statement of the Senator from Hawaii, which I understand will take 10 minutes, and I apologize for limiting the time, that the rollcall vote commence at 6:25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] is unable to be with us this afternoon because of circumstances beyond his control, and he has requested that his statement be made a part of the RECORD.

Before I submit the statement, I would like to read from his second paragraph, and I quote:

> This is a good bill, Mr. President, and I believe the Senate should support it and the President should sign it. Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUYE have produced a conference report which addresses our national security needs in a fiscally responsible manner.

(At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD):

• Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I want to start by commending the Senator from Alaska and the Senator from Hawaii for all the hard work I know they have put in to bring this conference report before the Senate.

This is a good bill, Mr. President, and I believe the Senate should support it and the President should sign it. Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUYE have produced a conference report which addresses our national security needs in a fiscally responsible manner. Anybody who has known Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUYE as long as I have would expect nothing less.

This conference report preserves funding for some of the administration's top priorities, such as the Cooperative Threat Reduction Program, the Technology Reinvestment Program known as TRP, and the third Seawolf submarine.

The House bill eliminated funding for the Seawolf and the TRP, and cut the Cooperative Threat Reduction Program almost in half, so this conference agreement preserves the Senate position on some key items of interest to the administration. This bill also avoids legislative provisions that try to dictate to the President when or how he can deploy our military forces.

As I have stated on many occasions, I believe the defense budget has been cut too far, too fast. Our forces are simply much busier than I believe anyone really anticipated when the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact were dissolving. Today our force structure is much smaller than it was 5 years ago. We all agreed that based on the reductions in the threat and the increased warning time for any kind of global conflict, these reductions were prudent and necessary.

But the smaller force we have left is busier than it has ever been. The fact is we simply cannot keep on reducing the defense budget the way we have been. The people are wearing out. The equipment is wearing out. So I think the budget resolution moved us in the right direction by providing for a small increase for defense over the next few years.

I do not think a lot of people realize how small that increase is. First of all, compared to the baseline concept that we use for entitlement programs, defense is not even getting an increase. The amounts provided for defense in the budget resolution over the next 7 years do not even come close to keeping the defense budget as large as it is today, after taking account of inflation. We would need to add at least another $100 billion over the next few years to stay even compared to a so-called current services baseline.

Compared to the administration's plan, the budget resolution increases defense by only $19 billion over the next 7 years, which is equivalent to a 1-percent increase over the administration plan. That is the defense increase

Congress has agreed to. Many of us felt the increase should be larger, especially in the outyears from 2000 through 2002, when defense is projected to be lower under the budget resolution than under the administration's plan. I also recall very well that over the past 5 or 6 years defense was the only part of the budget coming down, so it seems that the principle that defense has to be cut if something else is being cut is not always applied consistently.

Most of the increases in this bill over the administration's plan are in the modernization accounts which are the key to future readiness. We cannot continue to stay in the deep procurement though we have been in for the past few years indefinitely. We have cut procurement deeply to take advantage of the shrinking force structure, but our military can't live off its stock of old capital forever any more than any business could.

I want to briefly discuss the one program that represents two-tenths of 1 percent of the funding in this bill, but that seems to get more discussion than the other 99.8 percent of the programs in this conference report. Many people argue, and I am sure they truly believe, that the B-2 bomber is unaffordable. In my view, Mr. President, the argument that the B-2 is unaffordable is No. 1, false, and No. 2, a false issue.

Over and over I have seen people focus on the price of the B-2 without ever hearing a word about the cost of the collection of systems you would need to do the same job without the B-2. People tend to look at it as if the choice were buying the B-2 or doing nothing. They don't look at the whole picture.

The only real argument I hear from the Defense Department against the B-2 is that they would like to have it but they don't want to give anything up to get it. But that is a false issue, because Congress has made more funds available over the next few years specifically for programs like the B-2. It is not necessary to slow down the modernization of one part of our forces in order to modernize our bombers.

I am disappointed that this conference agreement does not fund the Corps SAM program at the requested level as in the Senate bill. The Corps SAM program represents just 1 percent of the funding for the ballistic missile defense program, and I regret that this conference agreement did not contain full funding for this important program on which we have asked for allied cooperation.

While the modernization accounts always get the most attention, this conference agreement also seeks to protect current readiness by partially funding the cost of ongoing operations which were not included in the administration's budget. The conference agreement includes $647 million to fund the fiscal year 1996 costs of our continuing missions in and around Iraq, operations Provide Comfort in northern Iraq and Southern Watch in southern Iraq. This was one of the administration's highest funding priorities, if not the highest. The conferees added nearly $1 billion to the requested level in the readiness accounts—pesonnel and operation and maintenance—and much of it was to fund these ongoing operations.

In my view, it made no sense to add substantial funds to the defense budget request without taking account of must-pay bills we know we are going to face either this fall or next spring.

By providing funding for these ongoing operations, Congress has not only attempted to avoid a readiness problem in next year, but it may allow us to actually make some progress in one of reducing the backlog of maintenance and repair on our barracks and other facilities where our forces live and work. The bill adds $700 million to the request to reduce the maintenance backlog on barracks and other facilities. This is not the first time Congress has added funding for real property maintenance or depot maintenance.

But what usually happens, and what would most certainly happen this year if we did not set aside funds to cover the cost of these ongoing operations, is that the increases we set aside for maintenance get diverted to cover must-pay bills. I hope that the approach the conferees have taken in this bill will allow us to avoid that trap.

Mr. President, this is not a perfect bill. No bill is. But I think this is a good bill, a bill that should be signed, and I once again commend Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUYE for their leadership.●

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise today to offer my support to this conference report. The conference agreement is a good compromise between the interests of the House and Senate. It is truly a bipartisan effort in the long tradition of the Appropriations Committee.

Chairman STEVENS and I worked together with Chairman BILL YOUNG and the ranking member, JACK MURTHA, of the House National Security Subcommittee in formulating the final conference agreement.

It has been a long journey, but the end result is a bill that warrants the support of all my colleagues.

The conference agreement under consideration has three priorities: It protects critical military readiness programs, it fully funds the needs of our men and women in uniform, and also provides a much-needed increase for modernizing our forces.

In total, the conference agreement recommends $243.3 billion for the Department of Defense, an increase of $6.9 billion compared to the President's request.

Mr. President, I want to point out to my colleagues on this side of the aisle, that this bill is consistent with the administration's policy objectives. It does not legislate changes in the ABM Treaty or the Missile Defense Act. It contains no limitation on the President in his conduct of foreign affairs.

One of the most contentious issues to be resolved by the conferees was abortion. On September 29, the House voted against the first conference agreement because of abortion language.

For the past 6 weeks we have worked hard to reach a compromise which can pass both Houses. The conferees agreed last night to incorporate language mirrored on that which both the House and Senate passed yesterday on the Treasury-Postal Service appropriations bill.

The language would allow for abortions to be performed in military hospitals when the life of the woman was endangered or in the case of rape and incest.

Most of my colleagues will remember that both the chairman and I have voted against this policy many times over the past two and a half decades. We are recommending it now because it reflects the policy already agreed to by both bodies.

The bill before you provides $81.5 billion for operation and maintenance to protect the readiness of our forces. This amount is $700 million more than requested by the President. It supports the military personnel levels requested by the President; it funds a 2.4-percent pay raise for our military personnel and increases their basic allowances substantially—all consistent with Senate recommendations.

The bill also raises procurement spending by nearly $6 billion, up to $44 billion.

To those who suggest that the bill provides too much for modernization I would note that, even with these increases, we are still spending less than half of the amount the Senate recommended for procurement 10 years ago.

Throughout this year, Chairman STEVENS and I asked each of the military Chiefs of Staff to meet with the Defense Subcommittee to review the needs of their respective services. The recommendations for procurement spending match these requirements very closely.

Let me also point out that the Joint Chiefs of Staff are reportedly seeking an increase of an additional $60 billion for procurement in future budgets. That amount is $16 billion higher than we recommend in this bill. I think my colleagues should realize that recommendations on procurement in this bill are the minimum that must be provided.

Mr. President, there have been reports that the White House might veto this bill. I hope that this is not correct.

The conferees have gone a long way to resolving the objections that were raised by the President when the bills passed their respective Houses. The policy statements on Bosnia, and abortion have been eliminated. Funding eliminated by the House for technology reinvestment, for cooperative threat reduction, and the Seawolf submarine have been restored as requested by the President. The conferees have reduced funds from the House-passed level for missile defense. In each case these recommendations are consistent with White House wishes.

Mr. President, I believe it is essential that we invest in the readiness, quality of life, and modernization programs funded by this bill. I am in full support of this legislation. It is a good, fair, and very important bill. I encourage all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. President, I just wish to spend 9 minutes commenting on statements made by my colleagues in this debate.

One of my illustrious colleagues stated that he sees no threat on the horizon; why are we spending all of this money, which reminded me of the early days of a war that was fought 50 years ago.

Five days ago, we gathered to commemorate the end, the victorious end of this war, but I also recall those years just before December 7. I was young enough to remember that, Mr. President. A year before December 7, because Members of the Congress did not see the threat which many of us thought was just obvious, we nearly defeated the Selective Service law. It passed by one vote. At the moment of its passage, our merchant vessels were being sunk in the Atlantic Ocean by German submarines, the Germans were rampaging all over Europe, London was being bombed, the Japanese were rampaging all over China, Nanking was being raped, Peking was falling and we saw no threat. And December 7 came as a brutal surprise to many of us. Not to me, Mr. President, and thank God for that one vote, we had the draft.

Two years before December 7, the very famous general from Virginia, General Patton, reported for duty at Fort Benning in Georgia. He was told to organize an armored division. When he got there, he saw 375 tanks. At least they looked like tanks. The only trouble is that over half of them would not roll. They were not operational.

This may sound facetious, but it is not. He called up the War Department and said, "I need some money because these tanks need parts, otherwise they won't move." And the War Department said, "Sorry, sir, we have no money."

Fortunately, General Patton was one of the wealthiest men in the United States at that time. He took his checkbook, went to Sears, Roebuck in Atlanta, GA, and bought parts, and that is how we developed the 1st Armored Division in the United States. Thank God somebody had a checkbook.

One of my colleagues also said that some of these activities that we have funded in this bill were not authorized, were not requested by the President, were not requested by the Senate.

Mr. President, the freedom to criticize, the freedom to disagree, the freedom to discuss, to debate and make decisions are very important in this democracy. This is not a dictatorship. The President does not tell us I want that ship and nothing else.

I want to review history, recent history.

We have been told that the most important weapon system in Desert Storm was the F–117, the Stealth fighter bomber, and if it were not for that, we would have lost lives, many lives, because this Stealth bomber was the one that was able to knock out all of the radar stations, which made it possible for our fighter planes and bombers to go in. It might interest you to know, and I think we should remind ourselves, that the administration and the Pentagon opposed building the F-117. This Congress persisted. I am certain the chairman of the committee remembers that.

Let us take another weapon system that was most important in Desert Storm, the Patriot. If it were not for the Patriots, the casualties on our side would have been at least double. The Patriots were able to knock out the Scuds. Thank God we had the Patriot. The administration opposed it, the Pentagon opposed it, but we in the Congress and in this committee insisted upon it.

In 1978, the President of the United States vetoed a defense appropriations bill that carried the Nimitz-class nuclear carrier. It is the most powerful weapon system we have today. Thank God the Congress persisted, and we overrode that veto.

There is another aircraft that my colleague from Alaska is the most knowledgeable expert on, the V–22 Osprey. The Pentagon did not want it. The White House did not want it. This committee insisted upon it. Now everyone wants it.

So, Mr. President, much as we would like to suggest that we are the repository of all wisdom, it is not so. The democracy that we cherish here is made up of many minds, and the wisdom from all of these many minds, hopefully, will reach the right decision. And we would like to believe, Mr. President, that the decision we present to you today is the right decision. I cannot tell you, in all honesty, that there is no pork in this bill. But those who advocate and those who have fought and supported these provisions in their belief that it is essential to our democracy. And, also, I am certain all of us agree that when one enters into a conference, you cannot hope to get everything you want. You can get some of it. You will have to give in to some.

This is the compromise that we have reached. It was not easy, Mr. President. But I think we have done a job that we can stand before our colleagues and say that we have done our best, and we are presenting our best to the Senate of the United States. I notice that my time is up.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 6:25 having arrived, under the previous order, the yeas and nays having been ordered, the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

NOT VOTING—1

Nunn

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I have voted today for the Defense Appropriations Conference Report because I believe it is fundamentally a sound and necessary bill which will fund critical defense functions for the current fiscal year. This bill is not perfect. It funds procurement of a few weapons systems which the Secretary of Defense and the military service chiefs have said they do not need or want; I would have preferred that such systems not be funded. But on balance I believe the right programs are funded, critical modernization for our armed forces will take place, and critical skills of defense workers across the country, including in my State of Connecticut, will be maintained. At the same time, I am very troubled that this appropriations conference report includes language that prohibits abortions in military facilities. My record of opposition to language that creates unfair barriers to legal abortion services is clear. I see no reason why this restrictive provision needed to be included on a defense appropriation bill and I oppose it. No one should misconstrue my vote today for this important appropriations bill—a bill which is even more critical as many defense workers have been furloughed along with thousands of other Federal employees caught up in our current budget crisis.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry, are we back on the continuing resolution?

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, may we have order, please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not in order. The Senate will please come to order.

The minority leader is correct.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment and raise a point of order that the bill violates section 306 of the Congressional Budget Act.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the point of order be vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, let me explain. I know it is certainly the intent of colleagues on both sides of the aisle to work through this process and to accommodate what we all want here, and that is an agreement on a continuing resolution at the earliest possible date. It is also my personal view, and the view of most of our colleagues, that the best way to do that, of course, is to send a clean resolution to the President. I offered the point of order in the hope that we could strip away the extraneous matters and get back to what we tried to do this morning, which was to offer a clean continuing resolution.

It appears, however, that that would entail a good deal of parliamentary discussion and negotiation and procedure that, in my view, would be counterproductive, frankly, because it would take us at least through another day.

It was not my intent to surprise the majority leader. I thought we had an understanding about the point of order, and there was some misunderstanding. For that reason, as well, I think it is propitious at this point to pick up where we left off prior to the time the point of order was offered.

So I have discussed the matter with the majority leader, and I am prepared to offer our second amendment, as we had agreed to do earlier today. This would expedite our consideration of the continuing resolution and will allow us to get the bill down to the President, allow us to continue the negotiations in good faith, and to find, at an earlier date rather than a later date, some resolution.

I have no doubt that if this bill goes to the White House, the President will be required to veto this one, as well. So we will be back to where we were prior to the time we offered this.

So I am looking for, and the majority leader is looking for, a way in which to find some resolution. It is in that good-faith effort that I have asked for the unanimous consent.

AMENDMENT NO. 3057

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] proposes an amendment numbered 3057.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

Section 106(c) of Public Law 104-31 is amended by striking "November 13, 1995" and inserting "December 22, 1995".

Section 2. (a) The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002.

(b) The unified balanced budget in subsection (a) must assure that:

(1) Medicare and Medicaid are not cut to pay for tax breaks; and

(2) any possible tax cuts shall go only to American families making less than $100,000.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will take a minute to thank the Senator from South Dakota. We had a miscommunication, and I will let it go at that. We have to work together. We do not surprise each other. I think we are on the right track.

It is my understanding that the Senator from South Dakota would agree to 40 minutes equally divided, or more?

Mr. DASCHLE. Yes, 40 minutes, I think, is adequate time to consider this amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Prior to a vote or a motion to table in relation to the amendment.

Mr. DASCHLE. As I understand it, there will be no second degree amendments.

Mr. DOLE. Right. I ask unanimous consent that what was just stated be the order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. It is my understanding, also, that following disposition of this amendment, maybe after some debate, we will go to final passage.

Mr. DASCHLE. That is my understanding, as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I yield such time as I may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, this amendment starts where the last amendment left off. It simply says that we ought to have a resolution that takes us at least through the month of December, setting as a target date December 22. That is what the earlier amendment did. This amendment would accomplish the same thing.

Second, it uses the same level of spending for all of those agencies of Government affected as the previous continuing resolution—the same, again, as the amendment we proposed this morning.

So in an effort to accommodate what I hoped would be a very serious negotiation on reconciliation, we would offer this continuing resolution, with the expectation that we could avoid facing another crisis for at least for another 4 weeks. So we start with an appreciation that it is going to take longer than a couple of weeks to resolve all of the outstanding differences that we have with respect to reconciliation. If that is the case, rather than revisiting the issue, let us be serious about a continuing resolution. Let us move this date to a point that is practical, that is prudent, that accepts the fact that we may not be able to finish our work prior to that time.

Second, Mr. President, it simply says if we are going to insist in this resolution that there be a 7-year budget, that we use the 7-year budget timeframe within which to resolve all the other differences, priorities, and circumstances that we have, and then let us do a couple of other things. Let us also, since we are setting some parameters here, decide that we are not going to use the Medicare trust fund as a pool from which to draw resources to pay for a tax cut. Let us not do that. And let us not use this process, this particular piece of legislation, to exacerbate income distribution even more than it is.

In other words, let us not build upon what is already happening in this country, where more and more of the wealth is being shifted to the upper-income levels. And to avoid that, let us assume that there will be a tax break; or let us just say if there is a tax break, the resources we will spend for those tax breaks will all go to those making under $100,000 a year—that is, no tax breaks for those making more than $100,000 a year.

So, Mr. President, that is really what this amendment does. First, it allows us to do our work through December 22. Second, it sets funding levels where they have been in the past continuing resolution. Third, it says if we are going to have a 7-year budget resolution, let us at least recognize that that is a constraint that might warrant a couple of other constraints—the first being the protection of Medicare from cuts to finance tax breaks. We have had votes on it in the past. I think this Senate has been on record now on a number of occasions that it is not right, that it is not acceptable, that it is not something that even some Republicans have indicated they can support—to block the use of Medicare resources for purposes of a tax cut—under any circumstances.

I, frankly, think that is one of the most challenging of all the things that we are going to be facing as we sit down to negotiate a final reconciliation package. How do you pay for the tax cut? I know we are told by CBO that there is going to be roughly a $170 billion dividend. Frankly, I am amazed that we can project a dividend 7 years out without really knowing whether there is going to be a recession or what kind of economic growth there is going to be.

We are going to have less economic growth, I remind my colleagues, using CBO growth projections at 2.3 percent than we have had in the last 25 years. In the last 25 years, we are told that the growth, on the average, was 2.5 percent. So what CBO is telling us is that we are going to have a balanced budget at the end of 7 years, but the growth is only going to be 2.3 percent, two-tenths of a percent less than what we have had historically. That seems inconsistent to me, and it is hard to understand how one generates dividends from that. But let us assume there is a dividend of some $170 billion. The tax cut is over $220 billion. It may even be $245 billion, if our House colleagues have their way.

So the question is: Where does the additional amount of revenue come from? We all know that this is all pretty flexible here. We all know that, in the meantime, before the dividend is realized, that revenue has to come from somewhere because the tax cuts start immediately. Well, the tax cut revenue is going to come from pools of resources already in the budget. And the only pools of resources available are Medicare and Medicaid, to the degree we need large revenue sources to pay for the tax cut.

Mr. President, that has been our concern from the very beginning, a very legitimate concern about paying for tax cuts from revenue that is already dedicated to virtually the most important function, in my view, virtually in the entire budget. The health care of senior citizens, the health care of those who are unemployed, insured only by Medicaid, the health care of those who are going to nursing homes—that is what we are talking about, providing a safety net, some security, to those people who have counted on it now for 30 years.

Mr. President, that is a fundamental question that in our view ought to be addressed. If we are going to set out 7 years as a precondition, it is our view we also ought to set out preconditions about where Medicare and Medicaid resources go.

We recognize the need to bring about trust fund solvency. We are not talking about solvency here. We are talking about $270 billion in cuts, $181 billion more than what the trustees tell us we need for solvency. For what reason? Unfortunately, it is our view, it is to provide the tax cuts that, in our view, simply are not necessary in many cases.

That is the first stipulation.

The second stipulation is that if we are going to have those tax cuts, at least ensure they go to those who have the greatest need. Make sure it is working families whose incomes are already stretched with college and a whole range of difficulties. Make sure they are the ones who are held harmless in all of the cuts and to make sure, to the extent we can, that if we have tax cuts, they go to those working families who need it the most.

I really do not know that somebody making $2 million or $3 million or $4 million needs a tax cut, regardless of the circumstances. I do not think somebody with our income level, regardless of what it may be now under this difficulty we are facing, needs a tax cut.

We do not need a tax cut. And certainly no one making more than $1,000,000 a year needs a tax cut—not if we are really serious about balancing the budget, not if we are really serious about bringing down not only the deficit but the debt.

I have always been curious, and I have never had one of my conservative friends respond to this, are they not as concerned about the aggregate debt as they are about the deficit? The aggregate deficits total $6 trillion.

So even if we reach a balanced budget, we still have $6 trillion of indebtedness out there—$6 trillion. I have not heard one of my Republican colleagues give me any indication as to what they think ought to be done with that.

How are we going to buy down that debt? Are we going to be content to leave it out there to continue to pay the interest on it? It seems to me before we start talking about tax breaks not only should we dedicate our efforts to reducing the deficit but we should dedicate our efforts to reducing the debt as well.

I know my colleague from Massachusetts is here. How much time remains, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 10 minutes 49 seconds.

Mr. DASCHLE. I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. I inquire of Senator DASCHLE if he would possibly yield for a question.

Mr. DASCHLE. I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. It seems to me, and I ask whether the Senator would agree with me, that the President of the United States, when the initial continuing resolution was sent down there, it had the increase of the premium—some $52 billion.

At that time, he vetoed it and our Republican friends said, all right, we will not put in that increase for the premiums. All we are interested in is a balanced budget.

Now we have the real intention of our Republican friends, because I do not know whether the minority leader has had a chance to examine the reconciliation that will be up here on the floor tomorrow which right here on title VIII has all of the premium increases that would have been increased on the continuing resolution, they went through it and said all they were interested in was a balanced budget.

Here we have—tomorrow we will be addressing these issues. Is the Senator familiar that all of those increases in Medicare are going to be part of their program?

The point I am just making is all day long and just recently this evening we heard about the willingness of Mr. GINGRICH and our Republican leader who wanted to get a balanced budget.

Tomorrow we are going to have the $270 billion Medicare cuts, the $52 billion in additional premiums which will result in $2,500 additional premiums, the Medicaid cuts of $180 billion, the student loan cuts of $4.9 billion, and the raid on the pensions which we passed here, 94 to 5—$20 billion raid on worker pensions.

Does the Senator agree with me that this argument that is being made here that we have to pass this this evening and all we are interested in is trying to get the President to sign this so we can have a balanced budget, we are glad to work the priorities out with the President, that is rather a hollow statement and comment given the fact that our Republican friends have worked this out in a closed session with effectively only Republicans participating, and they are doing just what we warned they would do in terms of cutting the Medicare $270 billion and tax breaks for the wealthiest individuals at $240 billion? Does the Senator agree with me that has some inconsistency in terms of what this issue is really all about?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator from Massachusetts makes a very, very good point. This is just the beginning.

The real debate will begin perhaps as early as tomorrow when we get the reconciliation package. As the Senator noted, none of us have had the opportunity to see this package yet. It will be on the floor in the next 48 hours at some point.

We know, given what the House did and what the Senate did, there are huge cuts—three times more cuts than we have ever seen before, for Medicare, cuts that go deeply into the program, that go way beyond trust fund solvency, cuts that will be used to create the pool of resources, to create the tax cuts that the Republican majority continues to want to defend.

That is what this is all about.

Mr. KENNEDY. Even if the President signed this resolution tomorrow, these Medicare cuts of $270 billion would still be up here on the floor of the Senate—our senior citizens ought to know it—and there is every indication that the votes are there to pass it.

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator is right. We may have taken it out of the last continuing resolution. It was dropped from the CR, but it is in the budget reconciliation bill. It is in the permanent legislation. It is in the language that we are going to be voting and debating beginning tomorrow, in all of its detail, spelling out exactly how deeply they are going to cut into the Medicare and Medicaid programs. We will see it tomorrow.

We know it is there tonight. We know that there is a huge cut in Medicare. We know that is the pool of resources from which they will pay for the tax cut. That much we know. All the other details we still do not know.

Mr. KENNEDY. Finally, because I see my friend and colleague, this is one Senator who finds this whole exercise of Mr. GINGRICH and Mr. DOLE to be rather a hollow one. This idea that all you have to do is indicate to us that we are headed for a balanced budget goal and we are quite ready to sit down with you and work out the priorities. I do not know how many times I have heard that on the radio and heard it last night. All the while, the priorities are going to be voted on by this body under a very strict time agreement, which will be $270 billion cuts in the Medicare Program.

I think our senior citizens ought to understand who is standing up for them in this debate. It has been the President. It has been the minority leader. It is the Senator from Nebraska, and I am proud to be supporting their efforts.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the Senator for his comments. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I want to ask a question, too, of our Democratic leader.

First, we have been hearing on television and here on the floor that the Democrats do not want to balance the budget in 7 years.

I have looked—and I do not think we have emphasized that the very first part of the amendment you have offered says the President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balance of the budget no later than fiscal year 2002.

As I understand and interpret that—but I want to hear it from the lips of my leader—here is a case where we are proposing to balance a budget by the year 2002; is that correct?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator is correct.

There is a way to balance the budget by the year 2002. The Senator from Nebraska has voted for it. The Senator from South Dakota has voted for it. Many of our colleagues have voted for it.

If you do not have a tax cut, if you use reasonable economic projections about what will happen in the next 7 years, there is a real possibility that you could achieve a meaningful balanced budget in perhaps even less than 7 years.

But it is the Republican insistence on a tax cut, it is the Republican insistence on economic growth projections that go way below what we have experienced historically, for at least the last 25 years, that make many of us very skeptical about whether it is achievable in 7 years.

Mr. EXON. Then the Republican charge that I have heard over and over and over again, that the Democrats simply do not want to balance the budget in 7 years, is blown pretty much sky high with the amendment that you have offered on behalf of the minority?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, the Senator is absolutely correct. This makes it very clear that it is not our desire to oppose a 7-year balanced budget amendment necessarily. What I said this morning holds this evening. It is our desire to ensure that we have to have some better understanding of what we are talking about here.

We will support a 7-year budget resolution if we know that Medicare is not going to be used to pay for tax cuts; if we know that any tax cuts incorporated into the legislation will be targeted to those making less than $100,000 per year. Those kinds of things are fundamental to our enthusiasm, our level of support for whatever else may have come from the negotiations during reconciliation.

Mr. EXON. If I understand the amendment, then, offered by the Democratic leader, that we just talked about, it provides for balancing the budget by the year 2002; and then second and equally important it says that, if we have a tax cut, that tax cut would be limited to only American families making less than $100,000 a year? So if you made over $100,000 a year you would not get any tax cut, if we have one. If we do have a tax cut all of it goes to those making $100,000 or less, is that correct?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator is absolutely correct.

I thank the Senator and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have just heard a preposterous argument. The Republicans are saying to the President of the United States: Mr. President, we have been working since the beginning of this year to develop a balanced budget that is real, that the true authenticator of economics, the reliable group that the President told us to work with, says is in balance in the year 2002.

The President does not like our priorities. He does not like to give tax cuts, apparently. And perhaps the Democrats do not want to give any tax cuts. So, we are suggesting that here is a compromise. You do what you want, but we are going to vote on what we want. And we will go to conference with you, Mr. President.

You are not bound to anything. If you do not want any taxes you go to the table and say we do not want any. If you do not want to reduce Medicare savings, you go to the table and say you do not want to. If you want to bring the CPI to the table, you bring it to the table. Whatever it is. We are only asking for a commitment that, in 7 years, you will have a balanced budget using conservative economics. So that we will not be burned again, and think we got a balanced budget only to find that we got a lot of it as a gift from economic assumptions that were too high.

For, as the distinguished occupant of the chair has said, if the Office of Management and Budget, which makes it easier to balance the budget because you do not have to cut so much if you have these exciting high economic assumptions—if they happen to be wrong, you never get a balanced budget. That is not the case if we use the economics we propose. If we happen to be wrong you get a surplus. And what would be wrong with that?

That is one argument. But let me repeat it just slightly—just a different way. We have been hearing from the other side: Do not tell the President what to do. We have been trying to say we are not trying to tell him what to do. All we want is a commitment to a balanced budget in 7 years, using real economics. That is all we want. The priorities are up to you. But we have our priorities. We want a vote on them and we want to send them to the American people and send them to you and you veto them. And all we are saying is, this Congress, with the President who is now in the White House, we get together and our only commitment is to produce a balanced budget in 7 years using real economics. There is no other commitment.

The Democrats tonight are saying wait a minute. We would like to tell you what is going to be in that budget in advance, when they have not had to vote on anything. They have not produced a balanced budget. They have not told us what they would restrain and what they would not restrain—I take it back. Mr. President, 19 have; 19 Democrats put a budget before us.

Incidentally, they used the same economics we used and they got a balanced budget. They did not want to cut taxes so they did not cut taxes. But they produced one. What is the discussion about? Now they want to tell us how to run that budget when they have not voted on anything. They have not voted on what to do in Medicare and Medicaid and taxes. And they would like, now, to tell us: Wait a minute, we would like to tell you in advance what we cannot do.

All we are suggesting is, Mr. President, sit down with us, and your team and some Democrats, and just use one benchmark. Do you want a balanced budget in 7 years using real economics? No other test. That is the only issue.

Now, Mr. President, because the issue has been raised about Medicare, Medicaid and taxes, we must speak to them. So let me refresh everybody's recollection.

The Washington Post today lends real credence to why we should vote this particular amendment down and why the people of this country ought to listen to the rhetoric of the last 15 minutes and be very suspicious of what it is really about. This editorial today, by the Washington Post, called "The Real Default" addresses the demagoguery of the President of the United States and the leading Democrats, who choose to make the case to the senior citizens for them not to worry. We do not have to change anything in Medicare. Everything is rosy. And this calls it what it is.

It will destroy any opportunity to get a balanced budget. It will put us in a position where we are living year by year to see whether the senior citizens have a program of health care. Once again, at this point in my debate, I ask unanimous consent to have this editorial printed in the RECORD. I will merely read one part of it.

> We've said some of this before; it gets more serious. If the Democrats play the Medicare card and win, they will have set back for years, for the worst of political reasons, the very cause of rational government in behalf of which they profess to be behaving.

Meaning there will be no chance to fix the budget of the United States.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 16, 1995]

THE REAL DEFAULT

The budget deficit is the central problem of the federal government and one from which many of the country's other, most difficult problems flow. The deficit is largely driven in turn by the cost of the great entitlements that go not to small special classes of rich or poor but across the board to almost all Americans in time. The most important of these are the principal social insurance programs for the elderly, Social Security and Medicare. In fiscal terms, Medicare is currently the greatest threat and chief offender.

Bill Clinton and the congressional Democrats were handed an unusual chance this year to deal constructively with the effect of Medicare on the deficit, and they blew it. The chance came in the form of the congressional Republican plan to balance the budget over seven years. Some other aspects of that plan deserved to be resisted, but the Republican proposal to get at the deficit partly by confronting the cost of Medicare deserved support. The Democrats, led by the president, chose instead to present themselves as Medicare's great protectors. They have shamelessly used the issue, demagogued on it, because they think that's where the votes are and the way to derail the Republican proposals generally. The president was still doing it this week; a Republican proposal to increase Medicare premiums was one of the reasons he alleged for the veto that has shut down the government—and never mind that he himself, in his own budget, would countenance a similar increase.

We've said some of this before; it gets more serious. If the Democrats play the Medicare card and win, they will have set back for years, for the worst of political reasons, the very cause of rational government in behalf of which they profess to be being behaving. Politically, they will have helped to lock in place the enormous financial pressure that they themselves are first to deplore on so many other federal programs, not least the programs for the poor. That's the real default that could occur this year. In the end, the Treasury will meet its financial obligations. You can be pretty sure of that. The question is whether the president and the Democrats will meet or flee their obligations of a different kind. On the strength of the record so far, you'd have to bet on flight.

You'll hear the argument from some that this is a phony issue; they content that the deficit isn't that great a problem. The people who make this argument are whistling past a graveyard that they themselves most likely helped to dig. The national debt in 1980 was less than $1 trillion. That was the sum of all the deficits the government had previously incurred—the whole two centuries' worth. The debt now, a fun-filled 15 years later, is five times that and rising at a rate approaching $1 trillion a presidential term. Interest costs are a seventh of the budget, by themselves now a quarter of a trillion dollars a year and rising; we are paying not just for the government we have but for the government we had and didn't pay for earlier.

The blamesters, or some of them, will tell you Ronald Reagan did it, and his low-tax, credit-card philosophy of government surely played its part. The Democratic Congresses that ratified his budgets and often went him one better on tax cuts and spending increases played their parts as well. Various sections of the budget are also favorite punching bags, depending who is doing the punching. You will hear it said that someone's taxes ought to be higher (generally someone else's), or that defense should be cut, or welfare, or farm price supports or the cost of the bureaucracy. But even Draconian cuts in any or all of these areas would be insufficient to the problem and, because dwelling on them is a way of pretending the real deficit-generating costs don't exist, beside the point as well.

What you don't hear said in all this talk of which programs should take the hit, since the subject is so much harder politically to confront, is that the principal business of the federal government has become elder-care. Aid to the elderly, principally through Social Security and Medicare, is now a third of all spending and half of all for other than interest on the debt and defense. That aid is one of the major social accomplishments of the past 30 years; the poverty rate for the elderly is now, famously, well below the rate for the society as a society as a whole. It is also an enormous and perhaps unsustainable cost that can only become more so as the baby-boomers shortly begin to retire. How does the society deal with it?

The Republicans stepped up to this as part of their proposal to balance the budget. About a fourth of their spending cuts would come from Medicare. It took guts to propose that. You may remember the time, not that many months ago, when the village wisdom was that, whatever else they proposed, they'd never take on Medicare this way. There were too many votes at stake. We don't mean to suggest by this that their proposal with regard to Medicare is perfect—it most emphatically is not, as we ourselves have said as much at some length in this space. So they ought to be argued with, and ways should be found to take the good of their ideas while rejecting the bad.

But that's not what the president and congressional Democrats have done. They've trashed the whole proposal as destructive, taken to the air waves with a slick scare program about it, championing themselves as noble defenders of those about to be victimized. They—the Republicans—want to take away your Medicare; that's the insistent PR message that Democrats have been drumming into the elderly and the children of the elderly all year. The Democrats used to complain that the Republicans used wedge issues; this is the super wedge. And it's wrong. In the long run, if it succeeds, the tactic will make it harder to achieve not just the right fiscal result but the right social result. The lesson to future politicians will be that you reach out to restructure Medicare at your peril. The result will be to crowd out of the budget other programs for less popular or powerful constituencies—we have in mind the poor—that the Democrats claim they are committed to protect.

There's a way to get the deficit down without doing enormous social harm. It isn't rocket science. You spread the burden as > widely as possible. Among much else, that means including the broad and, in some respects, inflated middle-class entitlements in the cuts. That's the direction in which the president ought to be leading and the congressional Democrats following. To do otherwise is to hide, to lull the public and to perpetuate the budget problem they profess to be trying to solve. Let us say it again: If that's what happens, it will be the real default.

Mr. DOMENICI. Having said that, let me make sure those who are listening tonight do not misunderstand a couple of things.

If you want to know what is in our budget it should not come as a surprise to you. It has been sitting on your desk most of the day. So, tomorrow when we vote, here it is, the Congressional Budget Act. If not all day, it is here now. If you are interested there it is. I will tell you what is in it.

Medicare is not cut. Medicare will grow 7.7 percent a year for the next 7 years; 7.7 percent.

Medicaid will grow at the rate of 5.5 percent a year. Medicaid will grow 42 percent. Would anybody have guessed that from what we are hearing here on the floor of the Senate?

Inflation is at about 2.5 percent. Medicare is going to grow at 7.7 percent. In fact, Medicare spending will go from $178 billion to $294 billion. Medicaid spending, that is the program for the poor, from $89 billion to $127 billion. I do not think either of those, to any Americans listening, are cuts. They are substantial increases and they will suffice and they will have a very valid program for the seniors and the poor people in health care. We will do it more efficiently with more choice.

Having said that, let us talk a minute about preserving the Medicare trust fund. Mr. President, when the seniors and the other side reads this budget, this Balanced Budget Act of 1995, they are going to find something very, very interesting and very exciting for senior citizens.

We made a conscious decision that we wanted to make the trust fund solvent, not for 5 years, or 7 years, but for 15 to 17 years. And you will read in this that every single penny that is saved in Medicare, not just the hospital trust fund savings, every single penny goes into the trust fund to save the health care program for the senior citizens.

So how can we put it in the trust fund and spend it on tax cuts at the same time? Every penny of it is in the trust fund. Somebody might get up and say, "Are you serious, Senator DOMENICI?" We have never done that before. We have never put savings from the general tax fund, which is what pays for part of this, we have never put it in that trust fund. We decided we would because we want to make it solvent for a long enough period of time for us to work on it, not just until the next election, but for 15 to 17 years. You cannot put it in the trust fund for the seniors and spend it for taxes also.

(Mr. SANTORUM assumed the chair.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, having said that, let me suggest that we firmly believe in an annual increase in Medicaid, the program for the poor, of 5.5 percent. If you add to it some flexibility in the delivery of it, it will be an excellent program covering more poor people than are covered today because you will have the flexibility of managed care and other delivery systems, which everyone knows are more efficient.

If that is the case and when we are finished with all our budget work we have an economic dividend; that is, a surplus, what would the Democrats have us do with it? I assume, from hearing here on the floor, that they would have us spend it. For I can draw no other conclusions. They would have us spend it.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me just finish this thought. I would submit that, if you balance the budget and if you had been fair by the seniors by putting every single savings in the trust fund so their fund is solvent, if you are giving the poor of America a 5.5-percent increase every year for Medicaid and there is a dividend left over of a surplus, I submit that you have an exact case of Republicans versus Democrats.

For what would they do with it? They would spend it. They would say, put it back in the budget and spend it on this, that, or the other. What do we say? Very simple. We say give it back to the taxpayer. And, as a matter of fact, the old tired, wornout argument that they are giving it back to the rich instead of the middle-class, middle-income Americans, is not true. Just find the section on taxes and read it. Some $141 billion of those tax cuts go as tax credits to the American families with children, and no one over $100,000 of earnings gets one penny.

What is wrong with that? You speak of being profamily, which is rhetoric; but you give them back tax dollars to spend, and you are helping them with their family. The only thing conceivably that is for the rich under their rubric is capital gains, which goes to everyone. And that merely says we want you to invest more in America so you can make it grow and have a better economic life for the future.

I will be pleased to yield to my friend.

Mr. BENNETT. Did I hear the Senator correctly say that the growth of Medicare would be 7.7 percent per year?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the Senator recall that under the health care proposal offered by George Mitchell last year the growth rate on Medicare was held to 7.1 percent per year?

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe that is right. It was 7.1 or 7.2.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the Senator's memory that Senator KENNEDY endorsed the 7.1 percent of the President's health care program?

Mr. DOMENICI. My recollection is that he was wholeheartedly in favor of that program.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the Senator's memory that Senator DASCHLE endorsed the 7.1 percent of Senator Mitchell's proposal?

Mr. DOMENICI. My recollection is that he wholeheartedly supported it.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the Senator's recollection that the majority of the Democratic Members of the Senate endorsed the 7.1 percent growth rate in Medicare?

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe that is the case.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the Senator not agree with the Senator from Utah in finding it interesting that since we proposed to allow Medicare to grow more rapidly than the President did, more rapidly than the bill endorsed by a majority of the Members of the Democratic Party in the Senate, that we are now being pilloried as those who would slash Medicare?

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe that is an understatement.

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps we should choose the 7.1 percent level that they endorsed in the previous Congress when they controlled it and thereby slash Medicare a little more.

Mr. DOMENICI. Maybe we would get their support.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not that optimistic.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to read one further sentence out of the Washington Post's analysis of the President's position on this.

> Medicare premiums was one of the reasons he alleged for the veto that has shut down the government—and never mind that he himself, in his own budget, would countenance a similar increase.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes 30 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I voted earlier today for a clean continuing resolution, which simply extended current funding for a couple of weeks, to open up the Government and allow for budget negotiations to move forward. A simple, clean extension of Federal funding, without all the ideological bells and whistles attached, should have sailed through this place and would have been signed by the President lickety split. But that effort failed.

I intend to vote for the pending Daschle substitute amendment as well, because it is a significant improvement over the Republican version, which would have harsh consequences for a host of federal efforts to protect children, the vulnerable elderly, and other

Americans who have been caught in the middle of this unnecessary budget showdown. Now that the earlier clean continuing resolution has failed, this substitute is the surest, quickest, fairest way remaining to get the Federal Government up and running, and to ensure that Federal parks are opened, Social Security applications are again taken, Veterans and other benefit checks are sent out, passport offices are opened, FBI law enforcement training is renewed, and other key Federal functions are being performed.

This Daschle substitute provides for additional interim funding at a rate of 90 percent for a host of Federal programs that were wiped out altogether by House versions of appropriations bills, and that would otherwise suffer cuts of 40 percent in the Republican version of this bill. These include the Low Income Energy Assistance Program [LIHEAP], education for disadvantaged kids, Goals 2000, Safe and Drug-Free School efforts, regional economic development programs, homeless assistance, and many others. I don't know about other Senators, but energy assistance in my State has completely run out of money, and people are getting their fuel shut off across my state. This is a real crisis, Mr. President, which I described in greater detail earlier this week on the Senate floor. This substitute will help bring an end to this energy assistance crisis.

The substitute also embodies other important principles for which we have fought. For example, it provides that Medicare and Medicaid savings are not to be used to pay for tax cuts. It provides that should any tax cuts be included in a final budget agreement, they should only go to families with incomes under $100,000. While I have opposed broad-based tax cuts before we get the budget into balance, I believe that this provision moves us in the right direction, and will help to ensure that massive Medicare cuts made by the Republicans will not be used to pay for tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans.

Finally, it sets a deadline of December 22, which gives us more time to get our work done: to send to the President the numerous appropriations bills which have been stuck for months in Congress, and to send them to him in a form that he can sign into law.

There is a provision in this substitute that, while it does not have the force of law, suggests that Congress should enact a balanced budget by the year 2002. I have consistently opposed this, observing that since it took us 15 years to get into this mess, starting with the massive Reagan tax cuts and defense build-up of the early 1980's, it will take us more than 7 years to get out of it. The President has also opposed this date, observing rightly that the spending cuts it would require in Medicare, Medicaid, and other areas would be draconian and irresponsible, and would likely destabilize the economy.

I agree. I do not believe that we can get there by 2002 without excessive cuts in Medicare, Medicaid, education, job training, poverty programs, and other key Federal investments in the character, skills, health, and educational opportunities of American families. And we certainly can't do it by then if a majority of my colleagues continue to refuse to scale back defense spending and corporate welfare. But it is true that we must eventually get to balance, and I believe that we can do it; it's just that it will take us 2 or 3 years more than this suggests.

Mr. President, most of us acknowledge that we are here today, in the midst of a Government shutdown, for one major reason: Congress has failed to do its job. Let's do our job tonight, and get this substitute passed and on to the President for his signature. We have so far been able to move only a few appropriations bills to the President this year, and even many of those Republicans in Congress knew would be vetoed.

Let us for a change keep the interests of the American people in mind, get this substitute bill signed into law, and then begin a full and robust debate on the real budget, which slashes Medicare and Medicaid in order to pay for massive tax breaks for Americans wealthiest citizens, starting tomorrow.

I look forward to that debate. I do not believe the extremist proposals put forward by Speaker GINGRICH and his band of merry followers in the House are America's priorities. I do not believe similar proposals contained in the Senate-passed version of the budget bill were America's priorities. I believe this debate, and the elections next year, will bear that out. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I will yield the remainder of our time in a moment to the Senator from California.

I simply thank the chairman of the Budget Committee for finally, at long last, giving us the figures that he has been working on now behind closed doors for weeks, months, if not years, to arrive here—not all day, less than an hour or two ago. We have not had a chance to look at it. But at least tomorrow we will proceed to a debate on this.

I appreciate his giving us the information at least a few hours in advance of the major debate.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, anyone who believes the Republicans want to protect Medicare just must be living on another planet. I have to tell you. You go back through history, you will see who voted in Medicare. It was the Democrats.

I listened to NEWT GINGRICH from a couple of weeks ago. He wants Medicare to wither on the vine. The majority leader bragged to a group that he led the charge against Medicare.

So, do not be fooled. If they support Medicare, they ought to now support the Daschle resolution. It says balance the budget in 7 years, but protect Medicare and keep the tax cuts for those earning under $100,000.

They keep saying they love Medicare. They keep saying they want to protect Medicare. They keep saying they want to balance the budget in 7 years. They keep saying they care about the middle class.

This is the moment of truth. Let us come together. I serve on the Budget Committee. I offered some amendments that passed to keep the tax cuts for people earning under $100,000. We all said we were for Medicare.

What does the Daschle resolution simply say? It simply says we will balance the budget in 7 years, and at the same time we will not use those tax cuts. We will not use the cuts in Medicare to fund those tax cuts.

It is a wonderful and should be a bipartisan effort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mrs. BOXER. The Wall Street Journal said the assumptions are wrong. I hope we will support Senator DASCHLE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to leave the floor. I believe the majority leader is en route. He wants to speak for 3 minutes or so. But let me have a few closing remarks.

I say to the Democrats on the other side who have voted to balance the budget in 7 years—and there are 19—I say to them that they ought to vote this down and vote for the Republican resolution which will put the Government back to work and does nothing more than what they have been for. It says during this Congress we will pass the balanced budget amendment. It will be a 7-year budget, and it will use the economics that they used heretofore in their own approaches.

So I ask them to be consistent tonight, and tonight not join with the demagogry of just because it is Republican we can sell the American people that it is anti-senior citizen, that it is anti-poor people.

Let me repeat. The Social Security trust fund will be solvent under this proposal for 15 to 17 years and not one penny of the savings in any part of Medicare will go to tax cuts. It goes into a trust fund for the seniors of America.

Now, you will not hear that tomorrow, and you do not hear that tonight.

But we care about senior citizens, and we want their fund solvent.

We also care about little kids, and maybe we even care more about children that have not been born. And the truth of the matter is, if you listen to that side of the aisle, money grows on trees.

It does not grow on trees. Somebody pays for it. If we do not change things, Mr. President, lo and behold, the money tree will be without money and the children not born will be paying up to 80 percent of their earnings for our bills.

What a wonderful life they will have and how thrilled they will be at the adult leadership of this decade. They will look at us and say: Who were they kidding as they ran around trying to scare seniors while they put America into a bankrupt position where we did not have enough money to pay, so we borrowed it. We were not around when it was paid back so our children and grandchildren have to do it.

Now, I stand pretty proud that after all these years we are on the brink of passing a real balanced budget. But I do not say that the President of the United States must accept that. I say he ought to accept only one thing and so should they, and that is, let us balance this budget. We do not know whose way yet. Maybe half the President's way, half our way. But let us commit ourselves to that, and then let us open Government and let our people go back to work.

How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute, 50 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me close this then, Mr. President.

I remain thoroughly amazed at the President of the United States and his continual day-by-day arguments that the Republicans in the Congress are busy about doing all kinds of actions that will hurt people when we have not seen a balanced budget from him. We have seen everything from a commitment to 5 years, to one that said maybe 10 years, to one with a whole batch of new economics that said maybe 8 years, and yet even tonight he says he will not sign anything that will harm Americans, that will harm seniors, that will hurt the poor, and yet he tells them, I am for a balanced budget.

It just does not ring true. What would ring true would be a very simple gesture when we send this bill to him if he signed it and if the very next day he set up a team and said, let us get this going.

I do not know which budget is coming out of it. I do not know whose priorities will prevail because, after all, the Congress is Republican and the President is Democrat. But we assume in those meetings we would all be Americans. But we cannot go there not knowing where we are supposed to end up. We cannot just say it will all come out all right. We have been at it for years. It has not come out all right. We have had all kinds of meetings. It has not come out all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor.

Mr. DASCHLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will use my leader time for as much time as I may consume.

I did not hear all of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, but let me respond to what I did hear.

I know that the Senator from New Mexico has had the opportunity to serve under many Presidents, and he has seen Republicans and Democrats in the White House. He knows what the record is for the 1980's and early 1990's. Frankly, I think there is a difference between talking and doing.

We heard a lot of talk in the 1980's about the importance of a balanced budget, but the fact is we rolled up a deficit five times what we had prior to the time a Republican President took office in 1981—five times, from $800 billion now to almost $6 trillion. So there is a difference between talking and doing.

The Senator from New Mexico did not mention that the United States has the lowest deficit of any country on a per GNP basis, any industrialized country except Norway. We are lower now than every other country. Why? Because the President showed some courage, showed some leadership, was able to convince the Congress in 1993 to take the single biggest step toward deficit reduction that we have seen in decades.

And what happened? We have the best economic growth. We put 7.5 million people to work. We have actually seen a downward trend in the deficit now for 3 years running. That has not happened since the 1940's. So I hope everyone understands what the record is here.

This amendment says we want to continue building on what the President has done for the last 3 years. We recognize that we have to go further. We recognize the job has not been finished. We recognize that we have to set a time certain, and if you want to insist on 7 years, we have no problem with that necessarily. But we also want to recognize that the fundamental investments that this country has made in better health, in better economic opportunities be protected.

That is all we are saying; that it is not an either/or; that we can balance the budget, but we do not have to do it on the backs of senior citizens who need health care. And if we are going to do a tax cut, we do not have to give it to those who do not need it.

That is really what this amendment is saying. We want to balance the budget. We want to continue to work with our Republican colleagues, even though we did not get much help in 1993 when we committed to that plan. We want to make it work now. But we also strongly believe that it is important to commit to the kind of protection, the kind of security, the kind of opportunity that American people now have had since 1965.

This amendment is very simple, and, frankly, I do not know how people could vote against it. If you support a 7-year budget and if you support this concept of not using Medicare to pay for a tax cut, and if you support tax cuts but recognize the need to ensure some economic equity, then you will want to support this amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to table and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 3057. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 3057) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I move to lay it on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I am voting for the House-passed continuing resolution. As we have debated this measure throughout the day, I supported various amendments which have been proposed which I think were perfectly reasonable, but now the question is whether to vote for or against this continuing resolution. The fatal flaws in the previous version have been removed. Thanks to the President's resolve, Medicare beneficiaries do not face a Medicare premium increase, and I hope and expect the President will continue to persevere with regard to the extremist reconciliation bill, which contains even greater increases for Medicare beneficiaries.

Balancing the Federal budget has been my priority since first coming to the Senate, and this resolution commits us to a legislative approach to reaching that goal by 2002. I ran on that issue. I proposed an 82-plus point plan with specific, balanced cuts to achieve a balanced budget in 5 years, and I was proud to support the President's $600 billion deficit reduction package during the 103d Congress, a package that contained many of the provisions I included in my own plan.

I have also been proud to participate in other deficit reduction efforts, including the bipartisan proposal put together by Senator KERREY (D-Nebraska) and Senator BROWN (R-Colorado), and the package developed under the leadership of Senator KERRY (D-Massachusets).

To me, the language in this continuing resolution means no more and no less than a commitment to achieving a balanced budget by 2002 and it does so without mangling our Constitution. It does not endorse in any way the extremist reconciliation plan that will be before us shortly, a plan which is not based on the goal of a balanced budget but on the reckless, politically self-serving desire of providing a fiscally irresponsible tax cut—tax cuts apparently scheduled to be mailed to voters only days before the 1996 elections.

I firmly believe there is significant bipartisan support in the Senate for a responsible budget measure that achieves a balanced budget in 7 years, or even sooner. Such a plan would reject the reckless $245 billion tax cut, make prudent reforms to our Medicare and Medicaid Programs, and would ask all areas of Federal spending to share in the burden of deficit reduction, including our military, and the special interests that benefit from the massive spending done through the Tax Code.

That is the formula for a budget plan that cannot only be enacted into law, but can be sustained over the entire lifetime of the glidepath to a balanced budget. It is very much like the alternative budget plan I supported that was offered by Senator CONRAD (D-North Dakota) during the budget resolution debate last spring, and is a budget I believe the President would sign. I hope we can soon begin to work toward such a budget.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I rise to announce how I will vote on the pending continuing resolution—and why.

Earlier today I voted for the Democratic "clean" continuing resolution because I believe that is the appropriate way to authorize the continued operation of the government, even though I have long supported the 7-year commitment to balance the budget using CBO numbers. The Republican Majority opposed that amendment, and it was defeated, despite the fact that the lapse in agency spending authority was caused by the failure of Congress to pass the 13 appropriations bills on time.

I also voted for the Democratic substitute which would have required a unified balanced budget in 7 years while assuring that Medicare and Medicaid would not be cut to pay for tax breaks and any tax cuts would go only to families making under $100,000. I supported this amendment even though I have said repeatedly that I do not believe we should pass any new tax cuts at all, no matter how well targeted, until we actually achieve a balanced budget.

But that amendment met the same fate as the first Democratic substitute.

I voted as I did on these Democratic substitutes because I could do so in good faith—and because I wanted to support the President and the minority leader.

But the question before us now is whether to vote for or against a continuing resolution that would end this indefensible partial shutdown of the Federal Government, which has created unnecessary uncertainty for hundreds of thousands of blameless federal workers, generated hardship for countless Americans, disrupted many local economies, and further eroded confidence in our government and its leaders.

I have always said that achieving fiscal discipline would present tough choices. And this vote presents one of these tough choices. I take the minority leader's opposition to this resolution and the President's expected veto very seriously. I would like to continue to support them tonight as I have on so many other occasions. But fiscal responsibility is at the very core of everything I have ever stood for as a public official. And the conditions attached to this pending resolution incorporate precisely the advice I have urged both privately and publicly.

To be sure, it was Congress that precipitated this government shutdown by failing to pass appropriations bills on time. And it then exacerbated the problem by challenging the President of the United States, a President whom I know for a fact has been fully prepared to negotiate seriously on spending priorities for a long time.

And none of this had to happen.

Even though this situation could—and should—have been avoided, emotions are raw today. Too many American families have suffered needless disruption and uncertainty. Too many hardworking federal employees have been held hostage by our actions and denigrated as non-essential, which diminishes the value of their labor and their service to their country. So while I continue to support the position of the President and many of my Democratic colleagues that a "clean" resolution is the appropriate way to proceed, I cannot in good conscience vote against a measure that reflects the kind of fiscal restraint I believe is necessary and would end the protracted agony of so many of the people I represent.

Mr. DOLE. We are now ready for final passage. I wonder if we might get an agreement on debate on final passage. Maybe 30 minutes equally divided, or we could vote and everybody could talk.

By popular demand we will vote. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the joint resolution for the third time.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 122) was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 60, nays 37, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The foregoing tally has been changed to reflect the above order.)

TRIBUTE TO JAN MUIRHEAD

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise today to commend Jan Muirhead, a fellow Tennessean and a former colleague, for her continuing dedication and commitment to serving others. A cardiovascular clinical nurse specialist and coordinator at the Vanderbilt University Medical Center Heart and Lung Transplant Program, Jan has devoted countless hours and a lifetime of energy to her patients.

These patients of all ages came to Vanderbilt knowing that their future literally depends on the availability of a compatible and transplantable heart or lung. They knew if that heart or lung is found, they would surely face a difficult operation and a long recovery. But they also knew that Jan Muirhead was there with them through every step—she has been their nurse, their teacher, their supporter, their counselor, and most of all, their friend.

Mr. President, my friend Jan Muirhead is a native of Memphis, TN. The daughter of a prominent pathologist, helping others is in her blood, in her heart, and in her soul.

Jan has been the anchor for the Heart and Lung Transplant Program at Vanderbilt since its inception in 1985, but her career in public service began years before, in 1975, when she graduated with a bachelor of science in nursing from the University of Kentucky. After graduation, she worked as a staff nurse in Vanderbilt's neonatal intensive care unit and in the surgical intensive care unit. She later joined the department of cardiac and thoracic surgery to work with Dr. Harvey Bender. In 1983, Jan moved to Seattle to get her master's degree in nursing from the University of Washington, where she was awarded the CIBA-GEIGY Award for the outstanding cardiovascular nursing pathway master's student.

After completing her degree at the University of Washington, Jan Muirhead returned to Vanderbilt University Medical Center, where she and Dr. Walter Merrill established the heart transplant program. I joined the program 1 year later, and over the subsequent 8 years had the pleasure and the privilege of working daily with Jan. During that time, I witnessed first-hand her tireless energy, her commitment to others, her enthusiasm for her job, her selfless devotion, and above all, the warmth and dedication she showed to the thousands of patients whose lives she touched.

She recently earned certification as an adult nurse practitioner from Vanderbilt's school of nursing—yet another sign of her continuing commitment to providing the best quality care and the most up-to-date advice. In fact, patient education is one of the most important services Jan provides for patients at Vanderbilt. When a transplant patient is admitted to the medical center, Jan sits down with them, discusses their medical condition, explains how donors are matched, and provides details of the surgical procedure they will undergo when that match is found. She diligently directed the entire postoperative course for the transplant patient. The thought of undergoing transplant surgery and enduring a tough recovery is very scary, but for years, Jan has calmed patients' fears.

Mr. President, Jan Muirhead has also been honored by her colleagues. In 1991, she received the Nursing Research Award in Paris, France, from the International Society for Heart and Lung Transplantation. She has served as secretary and a member of the board of the Middle Tennessee chapter of the American Association of Critical Care Nurses, and in 1994, Jan was chairman of the abstract review committee of the International Society of Heart and Lung Transplantation. She is an active member of the American Heart Association and the Association of Critical Care Nurses. She is the author and principal investigator of numerous articles and chapters on heart disease and transplantation.

Now, Mr. President, my close friend Jan Muirhead leaves Vanderbilt to move to Dallas, TX, where she will participate in a Baylor University outreach program for geriatric patients. So, today, I would like to thank Jan for her outstanding service to her patients and to her community. Her pioneering spirit, her unending commitment, and the unselfish love she has shown toward her patients and her colleagues will be missed at Vanderbilt. I wish her all the best as she embarks on this new venture in her life.

PUBLIC/PRIVATE VENTURES' STUDY

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I would like to bring to my colleagues attention the exciting results of a 5-year study that public/private ventures released today. As a national board member of Big Brothers/Big Sisters of America, it brings me great pleasure to share with you the news of public/private ventures' study of the Big Bothers/Big Sisters Program—the first ever to assess the impact of youth of any major mentoring program.

At last we have scientifically reliable evidence that proves what we have known intuitively for years—mentoring programs can positively affect young people.

As many of my colleagues know, Big Brothers/Big Sisters is a federated movement of over 500 affiliated agencies located in all 50 States. The Big Brothers/Big Sisters movement began in 1904 to provide one-to-one services to boys and girls in need of additional adult support and guidance. While the environment in which today's youth operate is vastly different than that of 90 years ago, basic core services of Big Brothers/Big Sisters remains the same—to provide responsible, consistent adult role models to children at risk. The need for additional adult support and guidance for our Nation's youth has never been greater, however, than at this time. Currently 38 percent of all of America's children live without their fathers. The Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program presently supervises about 75,000 youth-adult matches, but as the public/private ventures report proves an expansion of the Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program would have a positive effect on our Nation's youth.

The public/private ventures study concludes that young teenagers, who meet regularly with their Big Brother or Sister, are less involved with drugs and alcohol, do better in school and have better relationships with their parents and peers than do youth not in the program. In fact, public/private ventures found that "Littles" who met their "Bigs" regularly were: 46 percent less likely than their peers to start using illegal drugs and 27 percent less likely to start drinking; 52 percent less likely than their peers to skip a day of school and 37 percent less likely to skip a class; more trusting of their parents or guardians, less likely to lie to them, and felt more supported and less criticized by their peers and friends.

Most of the 959 youth in the research sample were between the ages of 10 to 14, nearly 60 percent were members of a minority group, more than 60 percent were boys and most were poor or near poor. Many lived in families with histories of substance abuse and/or domestic violence. They are representative of our Nation's youth placed at-risk. Keeping this in mind, it is evident that the Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program suggests a strategy that the country can build upon to make a difference—especially for youth in single-parent families.

And since mentoring programs work through the efforts of volunteers, only modest funds are necessary to have far-reaching impact. The Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program is an innovative and effective program with the potential of having a substantial positive impact on our Nation's youth with a small investment. That is why I was pleased to include the Character Development Act [CDA] as one of 18 bills in a legislative package which I have called the Project for American Renewal. The Character Development Act will link public schools with local mentoring organizations to give more children the chance to reap the benefits of a one-to-one relationship. The Character Development Act is based on a small, innovative, Federal program known as the Juvenile Mentoring Program [JUMP]. JUMP is a competitive grant program which allows local, nonprofit social service and education agencies to apply cooperatively and directly for grants from the Department of Justice's Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention. These grants are used to establish mentoring services utilizing law enforcement officials and other responsible individuals as mentors.

As we, as policymakers, begin to look at mentoring, we need to keep in mind another telling conclusion of the study. The benefits of mentoring do not occur automatically. If programs are supported by the kind of thorough screening of volunteers, careful matching and extensive supervision required by Big Brothers/Big Sisters, they can be expected to produce similar results. In programs that lack the established infrastructure of the Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program, the one-to-one relationship evaporates too soon to positively affect the youth.

While the study's most dramatic findings are the degree to which participation in Big Brothers/Big Sisters prevents a young person from starting to use drugs and alcohol, the authors also noted the fact that Big Brothers/Big sisters participation produces an unusually broad range of outcomes for youth—improved school behavior and performance and better relationships with friends and family. The Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program results in improvements in attitudes, performance, and behavior—with "littles" one-third less likely than their peers to report hitting someone.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in commending Big Brothers/Big Sisters for their continued commitment to our Nation's youth and recommend to my colleagues that they visit a local affiliate in their State so that they may see for themselves that mentoring can and does indeed work.

IN HONOR OF PRIME MINISTER YITZHAK RABIN

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on October 25, 1995, the Prime Minister of Israel, Yitzhak Rabin, spoke in the Capitol Rotunda at a ceremony commemorating the 3,000th anniversary of the founding of the city of Jerusalem by David. I had the honor to introduce him. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD my remarks on that occasion.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF SENATOR DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN

My pleasant and most appropriate task this afternoon is to introduce one of Jerusalem's most illustrious sons.

History will acknowledge him as the unifier of the city of David—the Chief of Staff whose armies breached the barbed wire and removed the cinder blocks that has sundered the city of peace.

History will honor him as the magnanimous leader of a brave people—brave enough to fight against daunting odds—perhaps even braver still to make peace.

History will remember him as the last of the generation of founders—the intrepid children of a two thousand year dream. Almost certainly, the last Israeli Prime Minister to play a leading role in the War for Independence, he was also the first —and to this day the only—Prime Minister to be born in the Holy Land.

He is a proud son of Jerusalem. As a young man he dreamed of a career as an engineer. But destiny had other plans and he fought and led for almost half a century so that his people could live in peace and security.

Nobel Laureate, statesman, military hero, friend of our nation where he served with distinction as an ambassador in this very city, he honors us today by joining us in our festivities—the Prime Minister of Israel, the Honorable Yitzhak Rabin.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, twelve days later, I, along with many Senate and House colleagues, stood by his casket, first at the Knesset, later on Mount Herzl where he was buried. It was an experience none of us will forget. No one has captured the moment and the momentous consequences better than Mortimer B. Zuckerman, who was there also. I ask unanimous consent that his reflections, "The Light of a Fierce Fire," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the U.S. News & World Report, Nov. 20, 1995]

THE LIGHT OF A FIERCE FIRE

(By Mortimer B. Zuckerman)

The poet was once asked, "If your house was burning and you could save only one thing, what would you save?" The poet answered, "I would save the fire, for without the fire we are nothing."

It was Yitzhak Rabin's destiny not to be saved from the frenzy of a madman. But bullets cannot so easily extinguish what Rabin's bravery and vision ignited, the fire of Israel's commitment to peace. He might so easily have died in the din of battle, this man who made war when he had to. But he died instead amid the clamor of peace, with the acclaim of a mass peace rally of Iraelis still in the air and still in his mind. It would be his last wish that the flame of peace, for which he gave his life, should not be dimmed by anger and despair. His state funeral, for all its sadness, was inspiring as an occasion for the vindication of his hopes, for a new dedication to Israel's security from America and for a demonstration of goodwill by some former Arab enemies.

President Clinton led a bipartisan delegation that included the congressional Republican leadership, former President Bush and former Secretary of State George Shultz. It was more than a respectful gesture of protocol. This was a statement of emotional and psychological support from the most powerful nation in the world to a small, isolated country, living in a perilous neighborhood and in a time of great national trauma: We do more than share your grief, we understand your fears; and we will not desert you as you have so many times in your history been deserted. All Americans could take pride in President Clinton's splendid eulogy; in the uniqueness of America's compassion and friendship that extended beyond a calculation of narrow national interest; in the honor of the hand outstretched at a time of need to an ally and friend. The president rose to the moment. The hundreds of thousands of people who lined the roadside and saw the American delegation were clearly moved.

Of equal significance was the roll call of certain Arab countries (excluding Saudi Arabia) and especially the emotional speech of King Hussein of Jordan. His words referring to Yitzhak and Leah Rabin as "my brother" and "my sister," which Muslims usually reserve for one another, and the tears shed by both the king and his queen, made a deep impression on the Israelis for their humanity and ability to overcome the past. Here, clearly, were keepers of Rabin's flame of peace, continuing a line that began with Egypt's late president Anwar Sadat.

It is hard for outsiders to appreciate the effect on Israelis of the worldwide outpouring of sympathy and condolence, with some 80 nations represented at the funeral. The Israelis are a traumatized people. They have for so long been alone, so long believed they could not rely on anyone but themselves, so long expected the world to stay silent in their times of trouble. The extensive response resonates for a people who remember how the world closed its doors to millions of Jews in the 1930s. Their deaths in the Holocaust were but an obscene multiple of the deaths endured in the crusades and programs of earlier centuries when the Jews were betrayed by those who had the power to save them.

Israel was to be the end of that vulnerable status of perpetual minority, an end to exile and alienation, and a beginning of a normal and natural form of national existence. Israel was home, the new home in the old country, proclaiming that the Jews had formed a self-reliant community and did not need others to fight their battles for them. Now they had their future defined by their own family; the farmer, the kibbutznik, the jet pilot, the shopkeeper, the schoolteacher could coalesce with a traditional language, with their own bible, their own culture. This self-reliance is a matter of great pride. Jews could look after their own family. When the Jews were kidnapped in Entebbe, Uganda, it was the Israelis who took care of it. A Jewish majority could eliminate Jewish vulnerability, and with their own state, the Israelis could, they thought, be like all other nations and like everyone else. The passion for wanting to be normal extended to the notion that to be accepted, Jews did not have to justify themselves by winning the Moral Man of the Year Award every year—at the cost of their own survival. To be 10 percent more moral than other nations would make them a light unto the world; if they were expected to be 50 percent more moral, they would be dead.

And yet Israel cannot be just another secular country. This very land forces the Jews into a dialogue with their religious past. The land was defined through religion, through the divine promise to Abraham, the covenant with the Father and the covenant with the people of Israel. For many religious Zionists, the victory of the Six-Day War, and the subsequent opening to resettlement of the greater land of Israel, were clear signs that God was guiding the secular Zionist revolution toward the ultimate realization of the prophetic vision of history. That is why, for some religious Jews, admitting the existence of a Palestinian nation whose homeland is the Holy Land is tantamount to violating the integrity of the Jewish people's covenantal identity. But the Jews faced a dilemma. They had come home to find peace and safety, only to find that their neighbors also claimed this tiny piece of land as their home. Even worse, how do you share a home with someone who says: "You have no right to be here?"

It is the great contribution of Yitzhak Rabin that has brought a moral answer to this dilemma. There are those Israelis who emphasize self-reliance and remember Rabbi Hillel's saying, "If I am not for myself, who is for me?" Rabin understood Rabbi Hillel had a second part: "When I am for myself, what am I?" He saw that the Jews could not control 2 million Arabs without frequent resort to a violence that would erode the moral and Jewish character of the state and, with that, its support in the world. He sought a new definition of Israeli strength and normalcy that incorporated not just military power but also moral and economic fortitude. He decided to end the Israeli occupation of Palestine and any pretense that Israel cold become a binational state in which one people ruled another.

He was uniquely qualified for this adventure. Those to his political right had the strength but not the will to take a calculated risk for peace. Those to his political left had the will but not the strength. He alone, at the time, had the capacity to persuade the divided and wary Israelis to accept a compromise arrangement with the Palestine Liberation Organization that held great promise for peace but also great risk. But the risk was seen as a risk from the Arabs, not the risk of Jew killing Jew. What the right-wing fanatics were blind to is that their murderous intransigence threatened the state that gave them succor and its necessary acceptance by the world. Without the flame of peace, they would have nothing but bloodshed threatening every Israeli's personal security.

The debate over security in Israel is different from the quarrel with the extremists. Many moderate people all across Israel are concerned about giving up land, because for years their leaders told them this land was essential to their national security. In Israel, security decisions are made in the context of the terrible reality that a single Israeli strategic blunder may mean not only military defeat but a genocidal threat to the very existence of the state—one that the world could not forestall, even if it were willing to. Many Israelis ask: Will the peace process be the beginning of a new future or the beginning of the end?

The Israelis are determined to avoid another genocide, this time in Israel. The decision to exchange lawfully captured territory for the promise of peace from those who have constantly threatened violence is fraught with unprecedented risk. Israel will not survive in this neighborhood by superior morality in the absence of superior real strength. Arab moderation is in direct proportion to Israeli strength. If the Arabs could defeat Israel, who could doubt that sooner or later they would try?

Can Shimon Peres, a durable politician less trusted by Israelis, lead the people in pursuit of Rabin's twin goals of peace and security? He is a consummate international diplomat and served with great distinction as prime minister a decade ago. His ardent desire for peace may be part of his problem, for many people believe he is too eager to cut a deal, too dovish and not skeptical enough about security issues, too wrapped up in his own ambitions. So his challenge is to relieve the worries of Israelis as well as meet the needs of the Palestinians.

In this effort, American support is crucial. Rabin said he was elected to take risks for peace. President Clinton said, "If that is your goal, I will do my best to minimize the risks you must take." That is the fire of friendship and support that will enable Israel to fulfill what Rabin so bravely began.

OUR HATS OFF TO RICHARD EKSTRUM

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, on many occasions I have taken the floor to talk about agriculture in South Dakota. The wonders of American agriculture tell a story that is not told often enough. Individual initiative and determined efforts have led to scientific discoveries that advanced agriculture. The inspirational strength of family, loyalty and faith also have contributed to the wonder that is American agriculture.

In no American workplace is there found greater productivity, cooperation, neighborly concern, creative use of applied science, hard work, and independence than on the farm and ranch. It gives me great pride to witness the ability of our farmers and ranchers to provide abundant and high quality food and fiber for all our citizens and millions of others throughout the world. The story of American farmers and ranchers is truly a wonder of the modern world.

There is the story of Richard Ekstrum of Kimball, SD. This week Richard will be stepping down as President of the South Dakota Farm Bureau. He has held that position since he was first elected to it in 1975. Richard's leadership has helped to shape the vigorous South Dakota livestock industry. His accomplishments are many, too many to list here. But for those of us who know him, it is agreed that his boots will be hard to fill.

Richard Ekstrum has provided me with invaluable advice and counsel throughout my years in the House and Senate. He has been a tireless defender and promoter of South Dakota and American agriculture. After each meeting with him I know exactly what needs to be done. All meetings with him are productive. I will miss his regular advice and leadership, but I am heartened to know he is still just a phone call away.

Richard recently was quoted as saying, "I will always be part of Farm Bureau and Farm Bureau will always be a part of me." Similarly, I would like the RECORD to reflect that Richard Ekstrum will always be a part of South Dakota agriculture, and vice versa.

Richard owns and operates a 3,500 acre general livestock and grain farm near Kimball, SD. He and his two brothers operate this farm, which has a commercial farrow-to-finish hog operation and produces purebred Simmental cattle.

Richard first joined Farm Bureau in 1967 and rose through the ranks of the Brule County Farm Bureau organization to become President of the South Dakota Farm Bureau in 1975. He was elected in 1980 to the Board of Directors of the American Farm Bureau Federation, a position he held for a decade. He has travelled the globe—28 countries in total—to promote and advance American agriculture. He recognizes that the continued strength of American agriculture rests with its ability to compete in the world market place. That is part of the reason why Richard Ekstrum is a recognized and respected national leader in agriculture.

The strength of the Farm Bureau organization is rooted on the farm. The history of the South Dakota Farm Bureau is impressive. As early as 1913, several county Farm Bureaus were organized and operating in South Dakota. In 1917, the operating county Farm Bureaus formed the South Dakota Farm Bureau Federation. Today the South Dakota Farm Bureau is my State's leading agricultural organization and a highly regarded voice for South Dakota farmers and ranchers.

Much of the success of the South Dakota Farm Bureau can be attributed to Richard Ekstrum. Under his leadership the organization witnessed its largest membership growth. Throughout the 1950's and 1960's, membership averaged 3,100 farm families. During the 1970's, its programs were expanded and since 1977 family membership in the South Dakota Farm Bureau has grown each and every year to the point where it represents more than 10,000 South Dakota farm and ranch families.

One of the many programs sponsored by the farm bureau and strongly promoted by Richard is the South Dakota Farm Bureau Young Farmers and Ranchers Committee. This group provides opportunities for greater participation by young, active farmers and ranchers. It helps young farm bureau members analyze their particular agricultural problems and collectively find solutions that best meet their needs. I am very pleased with the success of this program. I have said on many occasions that we need to do more to promote the promise of farming for younger generations. These young people represent the future of South Dakota agriculture.

Richard Ekstrum and the South Dakota Farm Bureau are committed to the goal of improving net farm income and strengthening the quality of rural life. I commend Richard for his loyalty to and hard work for the South Dakota Farm Bureau. He has left his mark on the landscape of South Dakota agriculture and his community. His wife Agnes and his two daughters can be truly proud. I know Richard will continue to be active in his church, in civic and private organizations, the South Dakota Farm Bureau and in South Dakota agriculture.

Richard is known for saying, "Of all the hats that I wear, I like the one of being a farmer the best." Today, on behalf of all South Dakotans, I take my hat off to Richard Ekstrum.

As I stated before, the wonders of American agriculture tell a story that is not told often enough. It is a story of proud Americans, like Richard Ekstrum, who do their part in the world's most proficient industry, day after day. I enjoyed and will continue to tell the many stories of South Dakota men and women who contribute to the greatest story ever told—American agriculture.

TRIBUTE TO THE CHATTANOOGA RONALD McDONALD HOUSE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize and commend the Chattanooga Ronald McDonald House, which will celebrate its fifth anniversary in a "Blaze of Glory" this weekend.

The Ronald McDonald Houses provide a loving atmosphere for seriously ill children to be close to their families while they are cared for in a nearby hospital. Often, these houses are considered to be the families' home away from home during these hardships. The "House That Love Built," which is the name of the Chattanooga Ronald McDonald House, has assisted almost 1,800 families from 32 States and 2 foreign countries, and is 1 of 162 Ronald McDonald Houses in the United States.

This weekend will mark the fifth anniversary for the Chattanooga Ronald McDonald House. They will celebrate the anniversary by burning the recently resolved mortgage on the house in a "Blaze of Glory." Mr. President, I would like to thank the staff, the more than 300 volunteers and the donors that have made the "House That Love Built" a safe and useful tool in treatment of our catastrophically ill children. Their combined efforts will not go unnoticed, and I wish them well in their celebration this weekend.

OWENSBORO LEGENDS OF RACING HOMECOMING

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, anytime someone from our hometown gains national recognition for their talents, we all feel a sense of pride and ownership—that somehow we've contributed to that success.

I know all those from the city of Owensboro and from Daviess County will be doing their share of boasting during the Owensboro Legends of Racing Homecoming.

It provides us with a chance to show off some of our homegrown talent, and to thank these racers and crew members for representing our community so well in competitions across the country.

I know all Kentuckians are just as proud as I am of Darrell and Michael Waltrip, Jeremy Mayfield, and the Green boys—David, Jeff, and Mark. Any weekend we turn on the television and watch the NASCAR races, we enjoy it that much more knowing that they're successes reflect so well on Owensboro, and our entire State.

Working closely with the NASCAR drivers are nine pit crew members from Owensboro and Daviess County who have achieved the highest level of success in their field. I want to congratulate Jeff Chandler, Kenneth Davis, Kerry Everly, Terry Mayfield, Stephen McCain, Donnie Richeson, Barry Swift, Bobby Waltrip, and Todd Wilkerson for their hard work and excellent performances.

They're part of one of the fastest growing sports today. It's estimated that attendance records will double, with 6 million fans expected to go to the races this year.

These are all men of excellent character, who've demonstrated what can be accomplished with hard work and dedication. I join all Kentuckians in congratulating not only them, but their families, who have stood by and supported these racers and pit crew members over the years. I couldn't be more proud of their achievements, and I wish them continued success in the future.

THE BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, as of the close of business yesterday, November 15, the Federal debt stood at $4,988,340,050,374.57. We are still about $12 billion away from the $5 trillion mark. Unfortunately, we anticipate hitting this mark sometime later this year or early next year.

On a per capita basis, every man, woman and child in America owes $18,935.82 as his or her share of that debt.

CONGRESS WILL PROTECT AMERICA'S VETERANS

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, we paused last week, as we do each November 11th, to honor American veterans who have given so much to their country for the cause of freedom. As a nation, we stop on Veterans Day to express our gratitude for their service and their sacrifice. And it is worth questioning whether the freedom which we embrace in America would have spread across the world had those sacrifices not been made.

Because of their profound love for their country, veterans understand better than many people how important it is that we face the problems plaguing this Nation. "Congress is doing exactly what I want it to do, in spite of some who oppose the progress we are making," wrote a disabled veteran from Shoreview, MN, who urged me to continue pressing for a balanced budget.

So in much the same way Americans once united during wartime, we are now united in peace, working together as a nation to create a Government strong enough to meet the needs of its veterans today, while it safeguards the freedom our veterans ensured for us.

That is why I find it so appalling that veterans would be singled out by the President and his administration to be the latest political pawns in their budget maneuverings.

Mr. President, I have received a copy of a press release issued by the Department of Veterans Affairs just 2 days ago, and I am utterly disgusted by the scare tactics it employs and the blatant misrepresentations it contains.

"Nearly 3.6 million veterans, widows, and children may have to wait on their monthly benefits checks due to the Government shutdown," it begins. "Unfortunately, some veterans and their families may become budget casualties," said VA Secretary Jesse Brown.

Suggesting that veterans—many of whom sustained grave injuries and lost close friends and family members in battle—could become casualties themselves, this time of a budget war, is tasteless and extreme. It is shocking to me that the U.S. Government would dishonor our veterans this way, playing on their fears and resorting to these kinds of tactics in an attempt to score political points for the President.

In his press release, Secretary Brown claims that all President Clinton has asked for from Congress is a stopgap spending bill free of controversial riders. That is precisely what Congress will deliver to the President this week—a stopgap bill that gives him the funds he needs to run the Government, and asks him to pledge he will work together with Congress to balance the budget within 7 years. Yet even before he sees our bill, President Clinton is vowing to veto it.

Mr. President, the men and women who have so proudly served in this Nation's Armed Forces will not be left in the cold, and to suggest that the Government would ever allow that to happen is the height of irresponsibility. By signing the temporary spending legislation this Congress is preparing to send to the White House, veterans benefits would be designated as an essential Government service. I urge the President to do so, so that this Nation's veterans will continue to receive their monthly benefit checks on schedule and without delay.

The press release from the Department of Veterans Affairs, however, underscores the lengths this administration is willing to go as they attempt to derail our efforts to balance the budget. But do not be taken in by the political rhetoric—it is inflammatory and it is harsh, but it is nothing but rhetoric. A similar situation occurred earlier this year, when the President tried to gain some political mileage scaring senior citizens with his Medicare misinformation. And so it was only a matter of time before he would go after the Nation's veterans, too.

It is indeed unfortunate that this President is so out of touch with the military and the sacrifices demanded by those who serve in uniform that he would attempt to frighten American veterans in such a manner.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in denouncing these desperate tactics. They disgrace our veterans and serve no useful purpose in the very serious debate over the financial future of this great Nation.

REPORT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION MAKING FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1996—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 96

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

To the Congress of the United States:

In declaring my intention to disapprove House Joint Resolution 122, the further continuing resolution for fiscal year 1996, I stated my desire to approve promptly a clean extension of the continuing resolution that expired on November 13. Accordingly, I am forwarding the enclosed legislation that would provide for such an extension. This legislation also provides that all Federal employees furloughed during the Government shutdown through no fault of their own will be compensated at their ordinary rate for the period of the furlough.

I urge the Congress to act on this legislation promptly and to return it to me for signing.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 16, 1995.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 9:02 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 122. Joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1996, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bill:

S. 395. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of Energy to sell the Alaska Power Administration, and to authorize the export of Alaska North Slope crude oil, and for other purposes.

The enrolled bill was signed subsequently by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

At 3:47 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2126) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1996, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-1598. A communication from the Director of the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, the Department of Defense, transmitting, pursuant to law, a cost comparison study of Vendor Pay function supporting the Defense Commissary Agency; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-1599. A communication from the Chairman of the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report on the status of internal audit and investigative activities for fiscal year 1995; to the Committee on Armed Services.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-466. A resolution adopted by the Salinas City Firefighters of Salinas, CA, relative to the Ward Valley of the East Mojave; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

POM-467. A petition from the attorney general of the State of Hawaii relative to proposed legislation entitled "The Medicare Preservation Act of 1995"; to the Committee on Finance.

POM-468. A petition from a citizen of the State of Kansas for a redress of grievances; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POM-469. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

"SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 30.

"A resolution to memorialize the Congress of the United States regarding voluntary, individual, unorganized, and non-mandatory prayer in public schools.

"Whereas, the United States of America was founded by men and women with varied religious beliefs and ideals; and

"Whereas, The First Amendment to the United States Constitution states that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof . . ., which means that the government is prohibited from establishing a state religion. However, no barriers shall be erected against the practice of any religion; and

"Whereas, The establishment clause of the First Amendment was not drafted to protect Americans from religion, rather, its purpose was clearly to protect Americans from governmental mandates with respect to religion; and

"Whereas, The Michigan Legislature strongly believes that reaffirming a right to voluntary, individual, unorganized, and nonmandated prayer in the public schools is an important element of religious choice guaranteed by the constitution, and will reaffirm those religious rights and beliefs upon which the nation was founded: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate, That the members of this legislative body memorialize the Congress of the United States to strongly support voluntary, individual, unorganized, and non-mandatory prayer in the public schools of this nation; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the members of the Michigan congressional delegation.

POM-470. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Hawaii; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 142

"Whereas, the flag of the United States is the ultimate symbol of our country and it is the unique fiber that holds together a diverse and different people into a nation we call America and the United States; and

"Whereas, as of March, 1995, forty-six states have memorials to the United States Congress urging action to protect the American flag from willful physical desecration and these legislations represent nearly two hundred and twenty-nine million Americans, more than ninety percent of our country's population; and

"Whereas, although the right of free expression is part of the foundation of the United States Constitution, very carefully drawn limits on expression in specific instances have long been recognized as legitimate means of maintaining public safety and decency, as well as orderliness and productive value of public debate; and

"Whereas, certain actions, although arguably related to one person's free expression, nevertheless, raise issues concerning public decency, public peace, and the rights of other citizens; and

"Whereas, there are symbols of our national soul such as the Washington Monument, the United States Capitol Building, and memorials to our greatest leaders, which are the property of every American and are therefore worthy of protection from desecration and dishonor; and

"Whereas, the American Flag is a most honorable and worthy banner of a nation which is thankful for its strengths and committed to curing its faults, and remains the destination of millions of immigrants attracted by the universal power of the American ideal; and

"Whereas the law as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court no longer accords to the Stars and Stripes the reverence, respect, and dignity befitting the banner of that most noble experiment of a nation-state; and

"Whereas, it is only fitting that people everywhere should lend their voices to a forceful call for restoration to the Stars and Stripes of a proper station under law and decency; and

"Whereas, an increasing number of citizens, individually and collectively, in Hawaii and throughout the nation, have called for action to ban the willful desecration of the American flag; and to ignore the effect of this decision would be an affront to everyone who has been committed to the ideals of our nation in times of war and in times of peace: Now, therefore; be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Eighteenth Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 1995, the Senate concurring, That this body respectfully requests each member of Hawaii's congressional delegation, with the specific purpose of urging the Congress of the United States to support an amendment to the United States Constitution, for ratification by the states, providing that Congress and the states shall have the power to prohibit the willful physical desecration of the flag of the United States; and; be it further

"Resolved That certified copies of this Concurrent Resolution be transmitted to each member of Hawaii's congressional delegation."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

S. 1331. A bill to adjust and make uniform the dollar amounts used in title 18 to distinguish between grades of offenses, and for other purposes.

S. 1332. A bill to clarify the application of certain Federal criminal laws to territories, possessions, and commonwealths, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Florence K. Murray, of Rhode Island, to be a Member of the Board of Directors of the State Justice Institute for a term expiring September 17, 1998.

David Allen Brock, of New Hampshire, to be a Member of the Board of Directors of the State Justice Institute for a term expiring September 17, 1997.

Joseph Francis Baca, of New Mexico, to be a Member of the Board of Directors of the State Justice Institute for a term expiring September 17, 1998.

Robert Nelson Baldwin, of Virginia, to be a Member of the Board of Directors of the State Justice Institute for a term expiring September 17, 1998.

Frank Policaro, Jr., of Pennsylvania, to be United States Marshal for the Western District of Pennsylvania for the term of 4 years.

D.W. Bransom, Jr., of Texas, to be United States Marshal for the Northern District of Texas for the term of 4 years.

(The above nominations were reported with the recommendation that they be confirmed.)

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. DORGAN (for himself, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. CAMPBELL):

S. 1417. A bill to assess the impact of the NAFTA, to require further negotiation of certain provision of the NAFTA, and to provide for the withdrawal from the NAFTA unless certain conditions are met; to the Committee on Finance.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. SANTORUM (for himself and Mr. SPECTER):

S. Res. 195. A resolution to honor Frederick C. Branch on the 50th anniversary of his becoming the first African American commissioned officer in the United States Marine Corps; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DORGAN (for himself, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. CAMPBELL):

S. 1417. A bill to assess the impact of the NAFTA, to require further negotiation of certain provision of the NAFTA, and to provide -for the withdrawal from the NAFTA unless certain conditions are met; to the Committee on Finance.

THE NAFTA ACCOUNTABILITY ACT

• Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the North American Free-Trade Agreement [NAFTA] has been a total disaster for our Nation. Virtually all of the promises made when it was passed have turned out to be hollow and shallow rhetoric.

We have gone from a trade surplus with Mexico to an unprecedented and unbelievable trade deficit. Our economy is being drained, while jobs, plants, and opportunities move out of this country. It is time to admit that NAFTA is a lemon. When we get a lemon we take it back. We demand that the promises made when it was sold be kept. If not, then our only choice is to withdraw from NAFTA.

This coming Monday will be the 2d anniversary of the passage of the North American Free-Trade Agreement [NAFTA] by the Senate. Today I am pleased to introduce the NAFTA Accountability Act. I am also pleased to have Mr. BYRD, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. CAMPBELL as original cosponsors of this legislation.

As we approach the second anniversary of NAFTA, we need to remember the promises of NAFTA. The advocates of this trade agreement promised a more vibrant economy, a stabilized economic framework, more high-paying jobs, increased exports, improved living standards, reduced trade distortions, and improved competitiveness for the United States in global markets.

At the same time we were promised, the environment would be protected, the public welfare would be safeguarded, and basic human rights would be enhanced.

Yet, the facts show that NAFTA just doesn't measure up to its promises. It is clearly evident that NAFTA has been a colossal failure for the American people.

It is what used car dealers politely call a lemon. We have been sold a bill of goods. Like most lemons from a used car lot, it is costing us way more than we expected, and it is not getting us where we want to be going.

It is time to make NAFTA accountable. We need to measure the actual results of NAFTA after 2 years of operation against the promises made to get NAFTA passed.

In fact, we should compare NAFTA's performance against the goals set forth in NAFTA's own preamble and statement of objectives. In introducing the NAFTA Accountability Act we are setting some benchmarks for NAFTA.

We would establish eight benchmarks. Three of those benchmarks would direct the President to renegotiate critical areas of failure within NAFTA including: Trade deficits, currency exchange rates, and agricultural trade distortions.

Five of those benchmarks would establish specific measurements by which NAFTA would be judged, including: Jobs, wages and living standards; the manufacturing base of our country health and environment; illegal drug traffic; and basic individual rights and freedoms.

If the President cannot renegotiate NAFTA, and if the administration cannot certify that these benchmarks have been met by December 31, 1996, then Congress withdraws its approval of NAFTA.

The record of NAFTA is very clear. We have gone from a trade surplus with Mexico to a trade deficit. In 1992, we had a $5.7 billion trade surplus with Mexico. By the end of this year, we will have at least a $15 billion trade deficit. Some are now estimating that deficit closer to $17 billion. The total trade deficit this year with Mexico and Canada will be over $30 billion.

One of the underlying reasons for the trade deficit has been the devaluation of the Mexican peso. This past week, the peso plunged once again down to a record low of 7.8 pesos to the dollar. it is estimated that the Mexican peso is now being supported through $30 billion in loans, much of it from unwilling U.S. taxpayers.

Another critical front is the trade distortions in agriculture. This past year, Canada exported 85 million bushels of wheat and 75 million bushels of barley into the United States, despite the fact that the United States itself is the major exporter of wheat.

In contrast, you can't move a single bushel of wheat across the Canadian border without being stopped and turned back. In one case a woman who was bringing a grocery sack of wheat across the border into Canada so that she could make some whole wheat bread had to dump out the wheat, before she could enter Canada.

When NAFTA was being debated, its promoters promised at least 220,000 jobs. Those numbers have turned totally upside down. Rather than job gains of 220,000, we have job losses of at least 220,000. Some predict job losses by the end of the year of 300,000 and more.

Recently there was a survey of companies that had said they anticipated job growth under NAFTA. Fully 90 percent of those companies now admit that there has been no job growth with NAFTA.

I think one of the most striking examples of the promise versus the reality of NAFTA, are the estimates made by a trade economist as reported by the Wall Street Journal.

Gary Hufbauer is an economist with the Institute for International Economics. His estimates of job growth were used extensively prior to the passage of NAFTA. In one Wall Street Journal article prior to the passage of NAFTA, he had predicted 130,000 new jobs in 5 years.

In April of this year, Hufbauer had to eat his rosy scenario estimates. Here is what he said in the Wall Street Journal:

> The best estimate for the jobs effect of NAFTA is approximately zero. The lesson for me is to stay away from job forecasting.

Hufbauer was right, he should have stayed away from job forecasting. A couple of weeks ago, Hufbauer revised his estimate again. As reported in the Wall Street Journal, Hufbauer is now saying that the surging trade deficit with Mexico has cost the United States 225,000 jobs.

These are real jobs, and real people losing their jobs. Within the last couple of weeks, we have seen a number of plants closing, jobs moving, and layoffs.

The nation's largest underwear maker—Fruit of the Loom—at the end of October announced the closing of six domestic plants, a cut back at two other plants and lay off of 3,200 workers. A spokesman for the company, Ronald Sorini, was quite candid. He said, "What you are seeing is the cumulative impact of NAFTA and GATT."

Take the case of Tri-Con Industries which operates a car-seat cover plant. Ten days ago, this company announced it was closing its plant and moving its 200 jobs to Mexico.

Another firm, Ditto Apparel, announced this week that it would lay off 215 workers at its Colfax, Louisiana plant. They make private-label jeans at that plant. The personnel director at the plant, a fellow named Don Vann was also very candid.

In speaking of NAFTA and GATT, he said, "I'm telling you, those are the nails that are going to be in the coffin of the apparel industry in this country. It's going to be awfully hard for some people who have been long-term employees here. The sad part is, there is just nothing anyone can do."

Well, I don't agree that there is nothing anyone can do. We can hold NAFTA accountable. We can require that either NAFTA lives up to its promises, or we withdraw from NAFTA.

The NAFTA Accountability Act is simple. If NAFTA does not live up to its promises by December 31, 1996 and if the President does not renegotiate key provisions, then the Congress will withdraw its approval of NAFTA.

Essentially this would be a performance audit. If it doesn't pass muster, then it's "out-the-door buster."

I hope that today's introduction of this bill, will bring about a nationwide grassroots review of the promises and the realities of NAFTA. It is time that America's body politic understood what America's grassroots already feels—NAFTA is undermining their individual and family security, and clouding future opportunities.

While they have a deep concern about our nation's budget deficits, they are just as concerned with our nation's trade deficits. These trade deficits mean lost jobs, fewer opportunities for our families, and deficits in family budgets.

In closing, I would also like to call attention to an excellent article which was recently published in the Journal of Commerce. Dr. Charles W. McMillion, an economist here in Washington, DC has a compelling message about the reality of NAFTA.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAFTA: THIS IS SUCCESS?

(By Charles W. McMillion)

It might seem odd that someone would claim to explain the "reality" of a global trade relationship without mentioning the net export balance, its composition or change over time. But John Manzella does just that as he shows very little interest in the "reality" he claims to present. (Nafta Hasn't Cost America Jobs, October 20)

Manzella asserts that U.S. trade with Mexico under the 1994 Nafta agreement "continues to deliver, on jobs and more." Surely he excludes Mexico from his fantasy, where no one doubts that over one million net jobs have been lost, incomes reduced by 30–50%, the economy in its deepest depression since the 1930s, political and religious leaders murdered and more. . .

But he also does not mention that U.S. net exports to Mexico have been declining since 1992; that the U.S. now faces net export losses to Mexico of well over a billion dollars each month; or that U.S. trade losses to Mexican production are now concentrated in high technology and high value added industries such as electronics and autos.

The fact is that the much celebrated U.S. pre-Nafta surplus of $5.7 billion in net exports to Mexico in 1992 became monthly deficits by the fall of 1994—even before the December, 1994 collapse in Mexico's attempt to maintain its overvalued peso by spending virtually all of its $30 billion in foreign reserves. Now, the peso is supported by $30 billion of "loans," mostly from unwilling U.S. taxpayers. And still the global markets are rapidly devaluing the peso as they have done for the past 20 years. U.S. net export losses to Mexico will reach about −$16 billion in 1995.

Manzella falsely claims that those of us who understand the lunacy of Nafta do not mention U.S. exports to Mexico. In fact, we tediously detail those exports. Most are component parts contracted out for further manufacture in Mexico and re-exported back into the U.S. According to the Government of Mexico, these parts now account for 81% of Mexico's global imports, up from 72% last year, and perhaps 90% of US-made exports to Mexico, up from 75% last year.

Since contracting out work to Mexico is even cheaper now with the peso at market rates, it is not surprising that exports of components to Mexico have continued to rise in 1995. The small fraction of exports of capital goods to Mexico have fallen by −32% as construction of anything other than export platforms has all but collapsed. The almost insignificant export of global consumer goods to Mexico has plunged by −41.5%—far more for any goods made in the U.S.

Exports are usually considered to "create" jobs because making additional goods in the U.S. to sell as exports—a car or a computer—requires hiring additional U.S. labor. However, most U.S. exports of components to Mexico do not represent new production but merely the contracting out of work previously done in New York, Pennsylvania or elsewhere in the U.S. It is therefore quite likely that even so-called U.S. "exports" to Mexico displace far more U.S. jobs than they create.

Manzella claims that the contracting out of component parts to Mexico is a clever government strategy to counter "fierce competition from Asia and Europe." Yet, even with the dollar far weaker in Asia and Europe than ever before in history, U.S. trade losses have skyrocketed faster and higher than ever before. Net export losses for U.S. manufacturing alone soared from −$66 billion in 1992 to a record −$159 billion in 1994, and perhaps −$200 billion in 1995.

In the first eight months of 1995, Mexico has a trade surplus of $10 billion with the U.S. but a trade deficit of −$5.5 billion with Asia, Europe and the rest of the world.

Clearly, increased production by multinational corporations in Mexico is not displacing production and jobs in Asia and Europe but in Mexico and in the U.S.

Manzella's belief that declining net exports under Nafta have created U.S. jobs is based not only on his ignorance of the nature of U.S. exports to Mexico, but also on his strange view that imports do not displace jobs. (Although he discredits his own strange view by noting that ". . . more U.S. jobs and production stay at home" when imports have some U.S.-made content.)

When producers in the U.S. lose sales to imports they are forced to produce less and to eliminate jobs. It is unfortunate that Manzella, as many politicians, has not yet learned this basic fact of business life. But it should not confuse any serious analysis of recent U.S./Mexico trade.

The most recent Department of Commerce calculus is that $1 billion of production supports 16,000 jobs. This would suggest that the U.S. net export loss of about −$16 billion to Mexican production in 1995 would displace over 250,000 jobs. But since most of the $40 billion in U.S. exports to Mexico is not new production but merely contracting out work that was previously done in communities across the U.S., this figure is certainly far too low.

Perhaps even more important is the depressing effect that Nafta has added to the declining purchasing power of U.S. wages. Throughout the economy, workers and their firms have taken further cuts in real pay and benefits to keep their jobs from being contracted out or to lower prices to meet the cycle of reduced demand.

Manzella repeats as fact the claim of embarrassed politicians that Nafta had nothing to do with Mexico's current account and peso crisis last December. Manzella seems to think it was just coincidence that Mexico's external balance became wildly unbalanced immediately after Congress passed fast-track authority for Nafta. Does he believe that after a generation of net capital flight it was coincidence that over $60 billion of hot portfolio "investment" poured into Mexico? Was Mexico's flood of imported component parts just coincidence?

In fact, there is no question but that Nafta created the enormous and unsustainable short-term imbalances in Mexico. For the longer term, Nafta's guarantees to foreign investors are devastating local Mexican producers that must now compete against Walmart, Microsoft and Sony's facilities in Mexico but without their access to global capital. This will continue to undermine employment and earnings in Mexico—and therefore consumer demand—for many years to come.

It is a cruel, political joke to suggest that Nafta is protecting U.S. exports contracting out jobs to Mexico. Furthermore, even the net export U.S. trade deficit with Mexico is already far worse than the previous record—$7.7 billion deficit following Mexico's 1982 crisis. The deficit will be twice as severe for the full year.

Finally, Mr. Manzella cites the gain of large numbers of U.S. jobs during business cycles since 1982 to argue that merchandise trade losses do not cause job loss. He seems unaware that while the U.S. population has grown by 30 million since 1982, and 26 million net new jobs have been created, all of these new jobs have been in the non-traded service sector.

Since 1982, the U.S. has accumulated manufacturing trade losses of $1.3 trillion. Far from creating manufacturing jobs to accommodate our growing population and economy, we have 1,300,000 fewer manufacturing jobs today than in 1982.

Contrary to 18th century theory and modern political rhetoric, U.S. trade with Mexico and other low cost export platforms is destroying millions of high wage, highly productive jobs and replacing them with low wage, low productivity service jobs. It is sharply undermining growth and prosperity for all to provide leverage for a very few to capture increasing shares of a slowing global economy.

Manzella and anyone else who considers Nafta a success, for Mexico or for the U.S., should reconsider their priorities. We can do much better. America should lead the international community in an urgent new effort to address today's new, post-Cold War, information-age realities and to provide growth and prosperity for ourselves and the world.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 44

At the request of Mr. REID, the name of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 44, a bill to amend title 4 of the United States Code to limit State taxation of certain pension income.

S. 978

At the request of Mrs. HUTCHISON, the names of the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] were added as cosponsors of S. 978, a bill to facilitate contributions to charitable organizations by codifying certain exemptions from the Federal securities laws, to clarify the inapplicability of antitrust laws to charitable gift annuities, and for other purposes.

S. 1220

At the request of Mr. HARKIN, his name was added as a cosponsor of S. 1220, a bill to provide that Members of Congress shall not be paid during Federal Government shutdowns.

S. 1414

At the request of Mrs. HUTCHISON, the names of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SANTORUM] were added as cosponsors of S. 1414, a bill to ensure that payments during fiscal year 1996 of compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities, of dependency and indemnity compensation for survivors of such veterans, and of other veterans benefits are made regardless of Government financial shortfalls.

SENATE RESOLUTION 195—TO HONOR FREDERICK C. BRANCH

Mr. SANTORUM (for himself and Mr. SPECTER) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. RES. 195

Whereas November 10, 1995, marks the 220th anniversary of the founding of the United States Marine Corps;

Whereas November 10, 1995, marks the 50th anniversary of Second Lieutenant Frederick C. Branch becoming the first African American commissioned officer in the United States Marine Corps;

Whereas Second Lieutenant Branch's commissioning has encouraged African Americans and other minorities to become commissioned officers in the United States Marine Corps; and

Whereas Second Lieutenant Branch has dutifully served his country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate honors Frederick C. Branch on the 50th anniversary of his becoming the first African American commissioned officer in the United States Marine Corps.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, today I rise with my colleague Senator SPECTER to submit a resolution which pays tribute to Frederick C. Branch, the Marine Corps' first African-American commissioned officer. The fiftieth anniversary of this historic event will be honored tomorrow night in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. This man's dedication and perseverance paved the way for the some 1,200 African-American Marine Officers serving their country today, 50 years later. I would like to enter into the RECORD a recent article published in The Navy Times which recently celebrated his remarkable career. This article details his determination in becoming a young officer.

Fifty years later, Lt. Branch returns to Quantico, Va.—The Marine Corps first black lieutenant was greeted at Officer Candidate School by the school's first black commander, 50 years after his commissioning.

Frederick C. Branch, one of the original Montford Point Marines and now a retired science teacher, visited the school where his wife Peggy pinned him with the gold bars of a second lieutenant on Nov. 10, 1945.

Back then, the South was segregated and blacks drank from separate water fountains. "Whenever we left the base, we ran directly into those segregation laws," said Branch, his face framed by peppered hair and moustache and his walk helped slightly by a cane.

During one rail trip, he recalled, he (then a corporal) and 200 other noncommissioned officers were returning to the United States from the South Pacific, where they were stationed in 1944. Stopping at a restaurant, he and two other blacks were not served and were referred to another eatery—literally on the other side of the railroad tracks, he said.

Branch was drafted into the Corps in 1943, and was the first black to graduate from officer training in 1945. Six others preceded him but all were dropped because of injuries or academics, even though all six were college graduates.

It remains a sore spot but nevertheless it did not dissuade him from applying. However, "I did not encounter any flack during training at all," he said.

Branch was a reserve officer but served on active duty and was a battery commander with an anti-aircraft unit at Camp Pendleton. He then took what he learned as a Marine into the schoolhouse in 35 years as an educator.

The Branches' return to Quantico a half-century later saw to a slightly different Corps. The basics of screening and training potential leaders remained the same, although more specialized, he said. And Marine leaders reflect the Nation's ethnic and racial diversity, like Officer Candidate School commanding officer, Col. Al Davis.

"Now officers are integrated," Frederick Branch said. "Here, the commander of OCS is black, and his staff is black and white."

Officer training actually was conducted a short distance away on the Quantico Marine Base, but Branch wanted to visit with school officials and learn a little about today's screening and training of Marine leaders. During a short morning tour, Branch and his wife watched officer candidates training in the ropes and obstacle courses before giving lunch a try at the OCS chow hall.

Branch said he would like to see black representation among officers increase further. But he took note of the advancements in the last few decades that brought a black three-star general and first black aviator, a black two-star general and three brigadier generals, two of whom are on active duty.

"The black officers now have advanced all the way up to three stars, and there is still room for improvement," he said.

Frederick Branch rose to the rank of Captain and proudly fought with his fellow soldiers in Korea before leaving the service in 1972.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996 JOINT RESOLUTION

DASCHLE AMENDMENT NO. 3055

Mr. DASCHLE proposed an amendment to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 122) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1996, and for other purposes; as follows:

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

Section 106(C) of Public Law 104-31 is amended by striking "November 13, 1995" and inserting "December 22, 1995".

HOLLINGS (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3056

Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself, Mr. DORGAN, and Mr. REID) proposed an amendment to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 122), supra; as follows:

Add at the end of the joint resolution, the following last section:

SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, the seven-year balanced budget passed by the Congress to the President shall not include the use of Social Security Trust Funds to reflect a balanced budget.

DASCHLE AMENDMENT NO. 3057

Mr. DASCHLE proposed an amendment to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 122), supra; as follows:

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

Section 106(C) of Public Law 104-31 is amended by striking "November 13, 1995" and inserting "December 22, 1995".

Sec. 2. (a) The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the 104th Congress to achieve a unified balanced budget not later than the fiscal year 2002.

(b) The unified balanced budget in subsection (a) must assure that: (1) Medicare and Medicaid are not cut to pay for tax breaks; and (2) any possible tax cuts shall go only to American families making less than $100,000.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

UNITED STATES-JAPAN INSURANCE AGREEMENT

• Mr. BOND. Mr. President, as Chairman of the Subcommittee on International Finance, it is my responsibility to monitor our trade agreements relating to financial services. It is a responsibility we take seriously.

Earlier this year, the subcommittee held a hearing on the WTO negotiations regarding financial services. We heard testimony from both administration and industry representatives. Based on those hearings and close monitoring of the talks, we took a strong position in opposition to the proposal that was put forward. The administration, correctly, took the same position.

In recent weeks, the subcommittee staff has been monitoring the implementation of other agreements including the United States-Japan insurance agreement which is formally known as "Measures by the Government of Japan and the Government of the United States Regarding Insurance." Based on those initial reviews, we have some significant concern regarding implementation of the accord.

Ambassador Mickey Kantor has often emphasized the importance of ensuring faithful implementation of our trade agreements. Great effort is invested in reaching agreements—once the investment is made, vigilance is needed to ensure that they bear fruit in terms of new opportunities for our businesses, U.S. exports, and jobs.

Senators will remember the considerable efforts expended recently by the USTR to conclude accords under the United States-Japan Framework Agreement. More than a year has passed since the first agreements were reached; I believe it is now an appropriate time to conduct an assessment of those initial agreements and what, if anything, they have accomplished.

One of the first agreements reached was the one covering insurance. Japan has the largest life insurance market in the world, and the second largest nonlife market, after the United States. Despite the enormity of this market, all foreign insurers hold less than a 3-percent market share, a far lower share than every other advanced industrialized country. Japan is currently deregulating its insurance market following the Diet's passage of a new insurance business law in July of this year. If pursued in accordance with the bilateral insurance agreement, we can expect deregulation to provide significant new benefits for Japanese consumers and businesses, as well as new opportunities for competitive foreign insurers.

However, developments occurring in Japan today indicate that new threats may be confronting United States insurance interests. These threats can be prevented if the United States-Japan Insurance Agreement is faithfully implemented.

Specific provisions of the insurance agreement were designed to ensure that the interests of foreign insurers were not undermined by the deregulation process. In a letter from Ambassador Kantor to the U.S. insurance industry of October 11, 1994, detailed definitions of the key terms of the agreement were outlined, together with USTR's expectations of what would result. Full compliance with these terms, as defined in Ambassador Kantor's letter, is essential if the agreement is to achieve its objectives.

Because faithful implementation of this accord is so important, Senator BOXER, the ranking member on the subcommittee, and I recently sent to Ambassador Kantor a letter requesting a detailed and comprehensive report to the committee this month on all actions taken to date by the Government of Japan to implement its obligations under the insurance agreement. It is my hope that the Senate's interest will serve as a constructive influence to help ensure that this important agreement, and other agreements, stay on track and live up to their full potential.

Mr. President, I ask that our letter to Ambassador Kantor, as well as Ambassador Kantor's letter to the U.S. insurance industry of October 11, 1994, be printed in the RECORD.

The letters follow:

U.S. SENATE, COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, November 8, 1995.

Hon. MICHAEL KANTOR,
U.S. Trade Representative,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: We are writing to share with you our commitment to ensuring full and effective implementation of trade agreements between the United States and Japan. You have often stated it is not enough simply to reach agreements with our trading partners, but that we must also be vigilant in guaranteeing that the rights gained under those agreements are fully realized. We could not agree more strongly.

As part of our Subcommittee's ongoing oversight responsibilities in this regard, we would like to request a detailed report on the results of actions taken to date to implement the commitments defined in the U.S.-Japan Insurance Agreement and in your October 11, 1994 letter to the U.S. insurance industry concerning certain key aspects of the Agreement.

We are concerned about reports that, as the implementation date for the new Japanese Insurance Business Law approaches, developments in Japan may pose serious threats to U.S. insurance interests. For example, plans by large Japanese insurers to enter the "third sector" through newly created subsidiaries, pose both a major commercial threat to U.S. insurers and a probable violation of the insurance agreement. The Subcommittee is particularly concerned about the inadequacy of actions taken to date by the Ministry of Finance to ensure compliance with those provisions related to this activity.

Accordingly, we request you provide a report to the Subcommittee on these and other actions taken to date by the Government of Japan to implement obligations under the agreement, as well as the results of those actions. Please also describe additional actions USTR will take to ensure ongoing implementation of the agreement's other provisions.

We would appreciate receiving your report within the next two weeks so we may proceed with our review. The Subcommittee is considering a future hearing to review the results of various U.S.-Japan trade agreements; your report on the insurance agreement will help us prepare for any such meeting.

We appreciate your efforts on behalf of U.S. insurers, and look forward to your report.

Sincerely,

BARBARA BOXER
CHRISTOPHER S. BOND

THE UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE, EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Washington, DC, October 11, 1994.

Mr. H. EDWARD HANWAY,
Chairman, International Insurance Council,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. HANWAY: I am writing to express my sincere appreciation for the industry's support during our negotiations with the Government of Japan on insurance. I am pleased to confirm that we have achieved agreement with the Government of Japan, through which Japan and the United States will undertake "Measures by the Government of the United States and the Government of Japan Regarding Insurance". The goal of the Agreement is to achieve significant improvement in market access in Japan for competitive foreign insurance providers and intermediaries.

With respect to the third sector issue, the Agreement states that:

"With regard to mutual entry[1] of life and non-life insurance companies into the third sector, the MOF intends not to allow such liberalization to be implemented as long as a substantial portion of the life and non-life areas is not deregulated, taking into account the fact that dependency of some medium to small and foreign insurance providers on the third sector is high, and that these medium to small and foreign insurance providers have made the efforts to serve the specific needs of consumers in the third sector. Furthermore, with respect to new or expanded introduction of products in the third sector, it is appropriate to avoid any radical change in the business environment, recognizing that such change should depend on medium to small and foreign insurance providers first having sufficient opportunities (i.e. a reasonable period) to compete on equal terms in major product categories in the life and non-life sectors through the flexibility to differentiate, on the basis of the risk insured, the rates, forms, and distribution of products."

Based on a confirmation made during the negotiations with the Government of Japan, I would like to affirm the following:

(1) with respect to existing large Japanese life and non-life companies, "avoid any radical change" means, among other things, that the Ministry of Finance (MOF) will maintain existing administrative practices concerning the third sector and not allow such companies to expand their third sector presence;

(2) with respect to subsidiaries that existing large Japanese life and non-life companies might form after the new insurance law takes effect, "avoid any radical change" means, among other things, that such subsidiaries will be treated the same as existing large life and non-life Japanese companies and accordingly will not be allowed to surge into the third sector;

(3) "major product categories" includes automobile insurance; and

(4) "a reasonable period" means three years.

With regard to rate and from liberalization, in addition to the specific commitments made in the Agreement, I would like to affirm that:

(1) with respect to the threshold for application of the special discount rate applicable to the large commercial risks of fire insurance, the discount will be reduced from 2 to 1.5 billion yen for factory fire insurance and from 1.5 to 1 billion yen for general fire insurance; and the threshold for storage (warehouse) insurance will be unchanged; and

(2) with respect to the minimum insured amount of the large commercial fire insurance policies to which the deductibles rider can be attached, the minimum insured amount will be decreased from 5 billion yen to 1.5 billion yen.

The Agreement creates binding obligations on the Government of Japan enforceable under U.S. trade laws, such as Section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended. The Agreement provides for follow-up consultations between the Government of Japan and the United States Government. We expect to hold such consultations twice a year during the first three years upon signing of the Agreement, and annually thereafter. With U.S. insurance industry's assistance, we expect to monitor closely developments in the third sector to ensure that the Government of Japan is in compliance with the Agreement.

We very much appreciate the International Insurance Council's support and assistance during our negotiating efforts and look forward to working with the Council to ensure effective implementation of the Agreement.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL KANTOR.

TREASURY-POSTAL APPROPRIATIONS CONFERENCE REPORT

• Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, yesterday I voted for the Treasury-Postal appropriations conference report because I believe we must send along appropriations bills to the President since we are now nearly 2 months into the current fiscal year and the Government is shutdown. However, I would like to make it clear that I do not support, and have not supported in the past, the so-called Hyde language in this bill which would prohibit any Federal funding for abortion except in the case of rape, incest, or preserving the life of the mother. I have long felt that if abortions are allowed under our laws, then I can't find justification for limiting the option of Federal employees to obtain health plans that allow such coverage, as most private sector employees have. For this reason, while I voted for this bill given our Government's current dire economic status, I want to make it clear that I am opposed to the Hyde language which appears in this bill and hope there will be an opportunity later to reconsider it.•

[1] "Mutual entry" means the ability of life insurance companies to introduce existing, new or modified rates, products, or riders in the third sector currently allowed to non-life insurance companies, and the ability of non-life insurance companies to introduce existing, new or modified rates, products, or riders in the third sector currently allowed to life insurance companies.

GOVERNOR SAYS HE'S WORRIED STATE MAY BE TOO DEPENDENT ON GAMBLING

• Mr LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask that the following article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Associated Press, Sept. 12, 1995]

GOVERNOR SAYS HE'S WORRIED STATE MAY BE TOO DEPENDENT ON GAMBLING

SIOUX CITY, IA.—South Dakota Gov. Bill Janklow said he is worried his state might be getting hooked on gambling revenue.

Janklow said South Dakota has been saturated with gambling. State government is heavily dependent on gambling revenue, with video lottery proceeds accounting for between 15 percent and 17 percent of the general fund budget, Janklow said.

If the economy slows down and people have to limit spending, gambling will be one of the first expenses people cut out, Janklow said. The resulting drop in state revenue would "hit us right between the eyes," Janklow said.

Gambling revenue should have been treated as "one-time money" and not intended to continue each year, Janklow told a meeting of the Sioux City Downtown Rotary club Monday.

But changing the state's reliance on gambling revenue will be difficult, Janklow said. Tax revenues in South Dakota grew at three times the rate of inflation in the nine years before he took office for a third time this year, Janklow said.

If taxes grow at about the same rate as income, people grumble, but do not revolt, Janklow said.

"That's what we had (last year), a revolt," Janklow said.

Voters defeated a ballot measure that would have slashed property taxes by one-third. A property tax cut plan proposed by Janklow and passed by the Legislature promises homeowners and farmers a 20-percent tax cut.

South Dakota's economy will have to grow to offset money lost to the property tax cut, Janklow said.

A few state lawmakers have said a state income tax is the best way to ease South Dakota's financial straits. Janklow said the state's voters will never agree to that.

"Working people are always going to vote no (on an income tax) because they know the government is not going to be honest," Janklow said.•

FURLOUGH OF WORKERS

• Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I have decided on a day-to-day basis that my staff will report for work during the partial shutdown of the Federal Government. I have reached this decision for two reasons.

First, the Republican leadership has indicated that Federal workers who are furloughed will be paid retroactively even though they did not work. Since they will be paid, I believe that members of my staff here in Washington and in my offices in Michigan should work for that pay. I ask that a letter to Representative CONSTANCE MORELLA of Maryland from Speaker of the House NEWT GINGRICH and the Senate majority leader be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

Second, during this period of crisis, it is perhaps even more important for my constituents to be able to contact me to express their views, and to seek information and assistance. Many are experiencing difficulties obtaining normal services from the Government because many offices are closed or not at full strength.

The letter follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, November 10, 1995.

Hon. CONSTANCE MORELLA,
106 Cannon House Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONNIE: We will be sending soon to President Clinton a bill to continue funding for the federal government through December 1, 1995. Besides providing for government services, this bill also funds federal workers' salaries.

If the President decides to veto this vital legislation to keep government operating, the possibility exists that some federal workers may be furloughed. In the event that this takes place, it is our commitment that federal employees will not be punished as a direct result of the President's decision to veto funding for their salaries. Should this happen, we are committed to restoring any lost wages in a subsequent funding bill.

Again, we want to reasure you that if the President vetoes the continuing resolution and requires federal workers to be furloughed, we are committed to restoring any lost wages retroactively.

Sincerely,

NEWT GINGRICH,
Speaker of the House.
BOB DOLE,
Senate Majority Leader.•

YOUTH VOLUNTEERS—1995

• Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay a special tribute to the 1995 Youth Volunteers at the Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans' Hospital. I am very pleased to recognize the 41 youth volunteers for their superior service and their fine example of the true spirit of voluntarism.

This past summer, the 1995 Youth Volunteers contributed over 5,700 hours to the hospitalized veterans and staff at the Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans' Hospital in Columbia, MO. Their hard work and untiring commitment provided valuable assistance to the members of the medical community and demonstrated selfless dedication to those in need.

The Veterans Affairs Voluntary Service commended the 1995 Volunteer Youth at a ceremony on September 23, 1995. It is my great pleasure to congratulate the 1995 Youth Volunteers for their significant accomplishments.

I ask that the names of the volunteers be printed in the RECORD.

YOUTH VOLUNTEERS—1995

HEROISM OF SHARON MANN AND THOMAS PREZKOP

• Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today I call to the attention of my colleagues two people who have made a difference and saved someone's life. Everyday in communities across America men and women come face to face with life-threatening situations. In most cases, and usually without fanfare or widespread recognition, people make the quick decisions and take the actions that make a difference and save lives. This is the story of two of those people.

On July 14 of this year, Sharon Mann and Thomas Prezkop of Andover, MA were enjoying a Friday night cruise aboard the Desperado in Gloucester Harbor when they noticed something out of the ordinary. They heard the sound of an engine racing out of control and in the darkness turned to investigate. From a distance they saw the lights of a small vessel circling and knew that something was wrong. Upon approaching the location they heard a man's cries for help. Closing in on the man's voice, they found Kevin Govoni in the cold water, threw him a life preserver and then pulled him aboard their vessel. Mr. Govoni was in bad shape. The circling vessel had hit him and the propeller had badly slashed his legs. Compounding Mr. Govoni's serious injuries, he was suffering from hypothermia from being immersed in the 50-degree water. Working as a team, Ms. Mann tended to Mr. Govoni by removing his soaked shirt, covering him, and applying first aid to stop the severe bleeding while Mr. Prezkop headed the Desperado toward the nearest Coast Guard station and called ahead to have an ambulance waiting.

Upon their arrival at Coast Guard Station Gloucester, Mr. Govoni was transferred by ambulance to a local hospital. In hindsight, it becomes clear that with no other vessels in the vicinity, if Ms. Mann and Mr. Prezkop had simply decided not to get involved, a life could have been lost. However, due to their quick action and excellent judgment, a life has been saved and Mr. Govoni is recovering from his injuries.

Thomas Prezkop and Sharon Mann are real heros—like heros who appear every day in this country. They are the ones whom we should be recognizing and admiring before so-called stars and celebrities. I recognize and salute the actions of Mr. Prezkop and Ms. Mann and I am glad to see that the service that specializes in such rescue, the U.S. Coast Guard, also recognizes a job well done. This Monday, November 30, 1995, the Coast Guard will award Mr. Prezkop and Ms. Mann the Public Service Commendation for demonstrating courage and initiative in saving lives, qualities in keeping with the highest traditions of the Coast Guard. These awards are well deserved. On behalf of the people of Massachusetts, I wish to acknowledge our debt to them and express profound appreciation for their unselfish actions.•

U.S. BUREAU OF MINES

• Mr. BENNETT. I wish to bring to the attention of the chairman of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee a matter of great importance to the State of Utah—the matter of the impending closure of U.S. Bureau of Mines facilities throughout the United States. The facility in Salt Lake City will be closed and 115 jobs will be lost. The Salt Lake City facility has conducted valuable research in environmental remediation and water research. While I am disappointed that the Senate acceded to House demands that the Bureau of Mines be closed, I also recognize the long-term benefits resulting from the earnest efforts to reduce the budget deficit and downsize the Federal Government. And in recent weeks, a silver lining emerged in the cloud surrounding the closure of the Salt Lake City facility. Mr. President, the chairman will be pleased to learn that efforts are underway right now to make preparations to privatize the Salt Lake City Bureau of Mines facility.

I would be remiss if I did not commend the staff of the Salt Lake City facility for their tremendous efforts to find a viable alternative which will prevent the technical expertise which has been accumulated for years from going to waste. On their own initiative, several employees have prepared a list of options in light of the pending closure. The most promising option and the one that the people of Utah are the most excited about, would permit the privatization of the Bureau of Mines facility. An interested group of investors and the employees of the Bureau of Mines have been in close contact in recent weeks to work out the details. Sufficient funding has been secured and should the facilities be transferred to the State of Utah, the State would in turn take the necessary steps to ensure the continued operation of these facilities under a consortium of private and State interests.

Mr. President, the chairman knows, there is legislative language in H.R. 1977 which grants the Secretary of Interior the authority to convey without reimbursement, the title and all interest of several Bureau of Mines facilities to various State university and government entities. While the Salt Lake City facility is not mentioned directly, the language permits transfer of such facilities as the Secretary deems appropriate. May I ask the chairman if such a transfer would be appropriate for the Salt Lake City facility?

Mr. GORTON. The Senator from Utah raises a very good point. Of course the transfer of the Salt Lake City facility would be appropriate. From what the Senator from Utah has explained to me, this is a unique opportunity to accomplish several goals at once. In keeping with our efforts to downsize the Federal Government, we can privatize certain government services, reducing the burden on the taxpayer while retaining essential research capabilities within the State of Utah. Such a transfer would permit the private sector, State university and the State of Utah to work in a cooperative effort to continue important environmental remediation research efforts.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the chairman's understanding that this action should occur as soon as possible?

Mr. GORTON. It is my understanding that quick action is essential to the successful transfer of the facilities in Salt Lake City. While the fiscal year 1995 Interior Appropriations Act provides the Secretary of the Interior authority to transfer only certain Bureau facilities, both the House and Senate versions of the fiscal year 1996 Interior bill give the Secretary broader authority to transfer other facilities such as those in Salt Lake City. This authority was requested by the administration, is supported by both the House and Senate, and I have every reason to believe will be signed into law when action on the fiscal year 1996 bill is completed. I would urge the Bureau, the State of Utah, and other entities involved in the proposed transfer of the Salt Lake City facilities to work together in anticipation of this authority being granted. I will do everything in my power to see that the fiscal year 1996 bill is enacted in the coming weeks.

Mr. BENNETT. I thank the chairman for his explanation as well as the excellent manner in which he has managed this bill.•

PRIME MINISTER YIZHAK RABIN

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, like most Americans, I am shocked and grief stricken by the brutal and senseless assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. My heart grieves not only for Israel and its people for the loss of their leader, but for all peace loving peoples in the Middle East. Most especially, my heart grieves for the family of Prime Minister Rabin: his wife Leah, their children and their grandchildren. Our prayers and heartfelt sympathy are with them as they deal with the most personal of life's tragedies in the most public of circumstances.

Father, grandfather, husband, patriot, soldier, statesman, Nobel laureate and peacemaker, Prime Minister Rabin was a man of many parts. He dedicated his life to the service of his country and his life mirrored the evolution of his country. As a young man, his valor in the cause of freedom helped create the State of Israel. As an older man, he defended Israel in battle against enemies that threatened the existence of his homeland. As a senior statesman, he relentlessly pursued the cause of peace with Israel's adversaries with boldness and courage. Perhaps only a person hardened by the experiences of war could put aside anger over the past and undertake the risks of pursuing peace with hostile neighbors.

Mr. President, the world has lost a great leader, and we are all diminished by his passing. He died before fulfilling his dream: peaceful coexistence with all Arab neighbors. The peace process must go forward. We, the world community, must continue and fulfill what he started. We cannot reward this act of extremism by halting or slowing negotiations. We must use this occasion to show all extremists capable of using violence that the killing of Prime Minister Rabin will not frustrate or stop the peace process. We must unite in this time of tragedy and pursue peace with renewed vigor and purpose.

Mr. President, when I heard the news of Prime Minister Rabin's tragic death, I was reminded of the death of another great martyr in the cause of Middle East peace, former President Anwar Sadat of Egypt. The similarities in their lives and the circumstances surrounding their deaths cannot be ignored. Both knew the hardships of war and understood the risks of peace. Both understood the need for honest dialogue with adversaries and the value of compromise. Both were slain at the hands of countrymen who were opposed to their making peace with former enemies. We would do well to learn from their boldness and courage.

Mr. President, Israel deserves our unqualified support at this time of national tragedy. We must make it clear to all who would be opponents and disrupters of peace that we intend to continue and fulfill what Prime Minister Rabin started: conciliation between Israel and its Arab neighbors. This legacy must not be lost with his senseless death.

Tzedek! Tzedek! Terdofe!: Righteousness! Righteousness! you shall pursue!

ELI 1995 ENVIRONMENTAL LEADERSHIP AWARD

• Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, last month the Environmental Law Institute [ELI] met here in Washington to bestow its highest honor, the Environmental Leadership Award, to a well known, internationally respected businessman, lawyer, public servant and Republican, Mr. William D. Ruckelshaus.

As many of us in this body know, the Environmental Law Institute has played a major role in shaping environmental policy and law, here in the United States and abroad. Over the past 26 years ELI has provided thoughtful environmental information, research, and policy analysis to a diverse constituency of government, business, and academic interests. Publisher of the Environmental Forum and the Environmental Law Reporter, ELI remains a resource and the place to go for answering the toughest environmental questions.

ELI's 1995 annual award dinner opened with an interesting keynote speech by Dr. Stephan Schmidheiny. Dr. Schmidheiny, chairman of UNOTEC AG, a multinational industrial group, founded the Business Council for Sustainable Development and serves as a director of ABB Asea Brown Boveri, Nestle, and Union Bank of Switzerland. Far from advocating throwing out the environmental baby with the bath water, Dr. Schmidheiny advanced the view that environmentalism makes good business sense. A businessperson himself, he highlighted positive and voluntary steps taken by the business community to live up to environmental responsibilities in an increasingly open and international setting.

Dr. Schmidheiny's remarks proved to be a fine introduction to ELI's 1995 honoree. Bill Ruckelshaus represents everything that is best about business, government service, and commitment to a clean and healthy environment. A former Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation as well as Deputy Attorney General of the United States. Mr. Ruckelshaus served as the first Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. He is currently chairman of the board of Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc., one of the Nation's largest waste management companies. Bill's breadth of experience gives him a unique and valuable perspective on the current state and future of environmental protection in the United States. What's more, his career represents a shining example of the interaction between business and environmental protection.

Mr. Ruckelshaus' acceptance speech underscored the fundamental need for a clean environment and outlined a program to reform our current system of environmental protection. Most importantly, his remarks focused not on tying the Environmental Protection Agency's hands, but allowing EPA to get the environmental job done.

On recent criticism of environmental protection, Mr. Ruckelshaus concluded:

> * * * There is a cottage industry now writing books and articles stating that many of our environmental concerns are a lot of hooey. * * * My answer to that is the same as it has been for a number of years. Our efforts in America are not about controlling a few chemicals or saving a few species. There are more than five billion people on this globe living in under-developed nations who want to live as well as we do materially. And they are going to try to get there. If they all try to get there in the same way we got there, wastefully, scattering pollution, unduly impacting our natural resource base, then all of us are in a world of trouble.

It was a thought-provoking speech from an advocate for both business and the environment—a perspective overshadowed lately by the rush to turn back the calendar to a day that has truly come and gone—when our resources were believed to be limitless and immune from harm. With several environmental statutes currently before the Congress for reauthorization, including the Safe Drinking Water Act, Superfund, and the Clean Water Act, his speech is especially timely. I congratulate Bill for receiving ELI's 1995 Environmental Leadership Award and ask that the text of his remarks as well as Dr. Schmidheiny's be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

STOPPING THE PENDULUM

(By William D. Ruckelshaus)

It is conventional for people receiving awards of this nature—for environmental leadership—to make some remarks in favor of the environment, which is usually taken to mean our current system of environmental protection. This might seem to be particularly desirable in a season characterized by the most violent anti-environmental rhetoric in recent memory coming from the Congress. For example, I believe at least one Member has compared the Environmental Protection Agency to the Gestapo. I don't think he meant that as a compliment. My cue as an awardee is to come forth and while away at the forces of darkness, vow to hold the line and protect our environmental progress at all cost and so on. But, at the risk of you taking back this fine award, which I do truly appreciate, I have to tell you that I am disinclined to do that tonight.

Here is why. We are gathered here to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Environmental Law Institute. It coincides with the same anniversary of EPA. That's a period representing much of a working lifetime. Some of us have been in the environmental protection business in one way or another for at least that long, or longer, and we should be able to recognize certain repeating patterns. And so we do. We recognize, as perhaps the newer members of Congress do not, that the current rhetorical excess is yet another phase in a dismaying pattern. The anti-environmental push of the nineties is prompted by the pro-environmental excess of the late eighties, which was prompted by the anti-environmental excess of the early eighties, which was prompted by the pro-environmental excess of the seventies, which was prompted. . .but why go on? The pattern is quite clear. The new Congress may believe that it is the vanguard of a permanent change in attitude toward regulation, but unless the past is no longer prologue, then as sure as I am standing here, the pendulum will swing back, and we will see a new era of pro-environmental lurching in the future.

So what is wrong with this picture? Aren't changes in emphasis part of the fabric of democracy? Yes, but in the case of environmental policy, these violent swings of the pendulum have had an unusually devastating—perhaps a uniquely devastating—effect on the executive agency entrusted to carry out whatever environmental policy the nation says it wants. The Environmental Protection Agency is now staggering under the assault of its enemies—while still gravely wounded from the gifts of its friends. That is an exaggeration: the Environmental Protection Agency, like the IRS, has no friends. As far as I can see, there is not coherent politically potent constituency devoted to making sure that the EPA can make the best possible decisions and carry them out effectively.

Currently, some members of Congress seek to stop the Agency from doing what previous Congresses have mandated it do by refusing to give it the funds to act. A little like cheering the launch of an airplane flying from New York to Los Angeles while giving it the gas to reach Chicago, and then decrying the crash in Iowa as further evidence of pilot ineptitude. And we wonder why trust in the EPA has eroded.

The impact of all this on the agency is devastating. EPA suffers from the battered agency syndrome. Domestically, it is hesitant, not sufficiently empowered by Congress to set and pursue meaningful priorities, deluged in paper and lawsuits, and pulled on a dozen different vectors by an ill-assorted and antiquated set of statues. Internationally, it is nowhere near the position it should occupy in global environmental debates as the representatives of the largest industrial nation and one with an enviable track record of environmental improvement: in short, it is an agency paralyzed by the conflict between its statutory mandate and sound public policy, and a public debate which erroneously depicts the social choices in apocalyptic terms.

And this is why I do not wish to join the rhetorical firing line on either side, neither to slash at EPA for doing what Congress told it to do, nor to argue for increased resources and for a defense in the last ditch on behalf of the current array of legislation and regulation. Instead, I would like to take all of us, in a sense, above the smoky battlefield, as in a balloon, and discuss, in the relative quite of the upper, cleaner air, what is really wrong with the American environmental system and what to do about it.

The first step, as in all recovery programs, is to admit that the system is broken, severely broke, broken beyond hope of any easy repair. Repairing it is going to take serious effort, hard work—hard work—hard work, by a great many people, over an extended period of time. Privately, many of you in this room on all sides of this debate have admitted that to me many times. Despite the current rhetoric in this city, there is no simple fix, no sliver bullet; just the opportunity to do a lot of good for our environment and by example to the environment of every place else.

Once we acknowledge that, we can dismiss the strawman problems that those simple fixes are supposed to address, and penetrate to the underlying actual defects. The currently prevailing myth, of course, is that EPA's problems are essentially bureaucratic. "A bureaucracy run amuck," is how it's usually put. And the illustrative text is the EPA horror story, usually featuring an arrogant bureaucrat from the nest of vipers inside the Beltway making some hardworking honest fellow out in the pure heartland of America do something utterly stupid. To accept this view, we must imagine the apocryphal bureaucrat wandering freely through fields of policy and musing, "What can I do today that will really drive them up the wall? If they think they've seen dumb, wait until they see this!"

And naturally, the conclusion from this view of things is that if you can somehow tie up EPA, strip it of resources, burden it with even more legal challenges, you will have gone far towards solving the problem.

Well, in fact, the image of EPA as an overweening bureaucracy is miscast. In fact, if anything, it is an underweening bureaucracy. Any senior EPA official will tell you that the agency has the resources to do not much more than ten percent of the things Congress has charged it to do. In addition, they are not empowered to allocate that ten percent so as to ensure a wise expenditure of the public treasure. The people who run EPA are not so much executives as prisoners of the stringent legislative mandates and court decisions that have been laid down like archaeological strata for the past quarter-century.

Having said that it is also fair to say that we should not be surprised if, having been given Mission Impossible, having been whipped both for doing things and for not doing things, having been prevented from using their judgment like ordinary folks do, the people of EPA get insensitive, thick-skinned and defensive. This is where many of those "can you believe this one" horror stories originate. I have traveled to the Hill with senior EPA officials and listened to Members of Congress rail away about the unreasonable things foisted upon their constituents. Often it was the case that the complaints were justified; and when I asked these EPA officials privately what they thought about the Congressional laments, the response was usually something like, "That's just the role he's forced to play; he's been going on like that for years" or "It goes with the territory". There was often little sense that this expression of Congressional outrage was a problem to be solved by the application of intelligence, cooperation, and creativity. It was like a game, where the rules were crazy and nobody was allowed to win. It is therefore no wonder that EPA representatives occasionally act like the Red Queen in "Alice" when they venture beyond the Beltway to try to do all the impossible things that Congress has told them to do in some 10 massive, separate and uncoordinated statutes. I am not trying to excuse irrational behavior. I'm trying to get us all to understand its root causes.

How have we come to this pass? EPA was launched on a huge wave of public enthusiasm. Its programs have had an enormous and beneficial effect on all our lives. The gross pollution we were all worried about twenty-five years ago is either a memory or under reasonable social control. Why is EPA now the agency everyone loves to hate?

Well, I think there are four reasons, three built into the very core of EPA, and one that results from the peculiarities of our times.

First, there is the belief that pollution is not just a problem to be worked out by society using rational means, but a form of evil. And I think in the early days of environmentalism this was a plausible idea to many of the people drafting the initial set of laws. Industry at that time didn't take environmental degradation seriously, and there was considerable bad faith shown, lies, cheating, and so on. I further think it can be demonstrated that things have changed now, in two respects. First, nearly all major industrial leaders know that environmentalism is here to stay, and so firms wish to avoid charges that they are insensitive polluters, just as they wish to avoid defects in quality. The customers don't like it, and believe it or not, paying attention to the environmental impact of technology or processes benefits the bottom line and therefore has become a permanent factor to be weighed by corporate America.

In addition, the most significant threats to our environment now seem to lie, not with major industrial sites, but in the habits of we ordinary Americans: we like to drive big, powerful cars, use a lot of electricity, generate a lot of waste, enjoy cheap food, live in grassy suburbs and collectively send pollution in massive amounts to often distant airsheds and waterways.

The laws, and the enforcement policies that follow them, are still looking for that evil polluter, and in the same place—major facilities. Since the relative threat from these has decreased, EPA is ever more like the drunk looking for his keys under the lamp-post. More effort, more irritation, less achievement to show.

This phenomenon is directly related to the second major flaw—the commitment to perfection built into the language of our major statutes. In addition to the mistaken belief that absolute safety was both possible and affordable, the theory was that if standards were set extremely high, sometimes on scant scientific evidence, and an extremely tight time frame was set to achieve those standards, then there would be constant pressure on industry and on EPA to make continuous improvements. The nation was committed to a sort of pie in the sky at some future date, a date extended further and further into the future as inevitably EPA missed nearly every deadline set for it. Each time a new generation of clean technology came into use, the response from EPA had to be. "That's great—now do some more", whether that "more" made any sense as a priority or not. It can be argued that the present system has produced significant environmental benefits. True it has; the environment is a good deal less toxic than it once was.

But look at the cost. Even though the environment has improved, EPA and the environmental community are pervaded by a sense of failure. In fact, that failure was foreordained by the promise of an unattainable future. In addition, pursuit of perfection inevitably leads to the pursuit of trivialities, which yield more of those famous EPA horror stories. The business of environmental protection devolves into an endless debate about arcane scientific procedures—one in a million or one in a billion. The important moral force of EPA is frittered away, and still we cannot summon up the energy to deal with real environmental problems. We cannot direct our attention outward to help the global problems crying out for assistance from the most powerful nation on earth. I do not believe this is what we started out to do twenty-five years ago.

The mission impossible of pursuing perfection leads directly to the third quandary—the devolution of all important environmental decisions to the courts. As is well known, nearly every major EPA decision ends up in the judicial system, one result of the determination of the early drafters of our legislation, who were—no surprise here—environmental lawyers, to allow the most liberal provisions for citizen suits. The result has been that most of the environmental protections that are actually—rather than theoretically—put into place are the result not of the deliberations of scientists or engineers or elected representatives or responsible appointed officials, but of consent decrees handed down by judges. A grim irony or poetic justice, depending on your point of view, is the current proposal by the majorities in the House and Senate to allow even more opportunities to block action by way of lawsuit, this time favoring those who would stop EPA action.

I hope I don't offend when I say that when we lawyers get involved, things tend to slow down a bit. That means both that environmental improvement is delayed, sometimes indefinitely, and that all involved in these drawn-out proceedings face crippling, costly uncertainties. The transaction costs of any environmental progress under these conditions are often an appreciable fraction of the costs of the substantive environmental remedies. Superfund is the great exemplar here, a program designed to clean up abandoned dumps that somehow transformed into a program in which the only people allowed to clean up are the consultants and the litigators.

Yes, we built this system, you built it and I built it, that moved America along toward a cleaner environment, but the system is now broken and must be repaired, in some cases, in the teeth of the immediate interests of many in this room. That's one reason why repair will be incredibly hard.

Another and fourth reason is that peculiar quality of our times I mentioned earlier, which is the nearly steady thirty year erosion of trust in all public institutions, particularly those situated here in our nation's capital.

You've all read the polls. People don't trust government, but they don't trust the press or business either. We are down to Walter Cronkite, Mother Teresa and Colin Powell.

At the absolute epicenter of this institutional hell of mistrust is the EPA. This is largely because advocates for address to our environmental problems and their allies in Congress feared for the implementation of their program in the event of a hostile administration, and their antidote was to write stringent mandates, restrictions, and timetables into the EPA's basic statutes. As I've tried to argue here, tying the Administrator's hands in this way does not necessarily advance the achievement of substantive environmental goals; paradoxically, it may even retard them. Promising unachievable perfection simply assures trust eroding failure. And, of course, now we have a Congress that has so far shown itself unwilling to do the hard work necessary for meaningful reform. Instead, it is intent on further snarling a system it sees as another example of liberalism gone wild.

I don't think universally applied risk assessment or cost benefit analysis or refusing to fund mandates from previous Congresses that this Congress doesn't like will pass both Houses and be signed by the President. Nor do I believe the Congress could override a Presidential veto of these approaches to reform. I believe the result will be the much maligned gridlock. In fact, we may already have reached it.

We have to assume that at some time in the future—probably when this current version of gridlock is more apparent—we will be able to deal seriously with the reform we all recognize is needed. What would that reform look like?

First of all it would have to be effective. It must be able to address those problems that a consensus of knowledge and research has identified as the worst environmental risks. This requires an administrative structure capable of marshaling resources to address those problems, in whatever media they occur, and the discretion and flexibility to allocate those resources effectively. This means that Congress is going to have to return to its Constitutional role of setting national policy and providing vigorous oversight, and leave the EPA to get on with implementing that policy, free of direct supervision from 535 administrators.

Second, reform has to produce efficiency. It has to provide the maximum reduction of risk to human health and the environment per dollar invested in controls or incentives. This implies, first, a vast simplification of environmental rule-making. We cannot go on with a system in which the physical volume of the paper necessary to establish a permit approaches the physical volume of the waste to be controlled. Also, some finite well-understood limits should be established for what our society is prepared to pay for a certain level of environmental health, together with some reasonable relationship between what is paid and what we get for it. In other words, environmentalism has to leave the realm of quasi-religion and take its place among the realities of the state, along with national security, social welfare, health and justice—pretty good company, by the way.

Third, the system must better reflect the essential democratic values of our society. The day is past when a dozen or so youngish people can sit in a windowless room in Waterside Mall in Washington D.C. and after a year or so, in the last stages of exhaustion, emerge with a set of absolute commands for a major economic sector. We need a system that reflects the real choices of the American people as to what levels of protection they desire locally for local problems, and that builds upon the basic good sense of communities in balancing their environmental and other social values. Needless to say, no one can be allowed to clean up by loading pollution on to a neighbor, and so the new system has to be carefully designed to be consistent with regional, national and global environmental goals.

Finally, the system has to be fair. It cannot impose an undue burden of either risk or expense on any one portion of the population, or allow the transfer of risk from one place to another without fully informed consent. It cannot, for example, expect private landowners to carry the full cost of species protection, nor can it expect farm workers or people living near industrial plants to suffer inordinate risks for the economic benefit of the general population.

It hardly needs saying that no petty adjustment of the current set of laws can easily achieve these objectives. The nation needs a new, single, unified environmental statute supervised by a single authorizing committee and a single appropriations committee in each house of Congress. Not the 12 laws and 70 committees we now have. I am fully aware of the political difficulty of achieving this nirvana, but it is no more vaulted in aspiration than zero cancer risk with a margin of safety below that—an impossible assignment EPA has labored with for decades.

How to get there is, of course, the problem. The kind of rhetoric we are seeing now on both sides of the debate will not help, nor will the careless budget slashing in which the current Congress is indulging. It almost seems as if many Members of Congress believe that environmental protection is nothing but an aspect of liberalism, and since liberalism is discredited, we can happily return to converting every environmental value we have left into ready cash. In my view, like some of the Democratic Congresses of the past, the Republican Congress is too often promising more than can be delivered, and thereby contributing to the very lack of trust in government that got them elected in the first place. The result of all this could be a cordless bungee jump named Ross Perot.

What one piece of a right answer could look like is slowly emerging from local experiences in this country and from the experience of some other nations. It involves a new sort of consensus process, in which all the significant stakeholders are brought together to hammer out a solution to a set of environmental problems. This approach is particularly applicable to problems confined to specific geographic regions. The critical thing about such a process, and the only way to make it work, is that all participants have to understand that the process is the entire and exclusive theater for decisions, therefore Congress and other legislative bodies have to mandate the process. There will be no appeal, and no way to weasel out of the deal. This is critical; no consensus process can survive the idea that one of the parties can get everything it wants—without compromise—at some other forum.

A process of this type has been used successfully by the state of Washington in working through the competing interests of timber companies, environmentalists, Indian tribes and local communities regarding the cut of timber on state lands. On a large scale, the Netherlands now runs its entire environmental program out of consensus groups covering every major industry and district. Industries can meet national guidelines in just about any way they choose, but they have to play the game. The Dutch call the national plans developed through such processes "coercive voluntary agreements."

Whether a process that seems to work in a small, crowded nation with a long culture of cooperation in the face of danger would work here in a big, mostly empty country, where the tradition is more libertarian, is an open question. But somehow we have to get past this situation where EPA is out there in the boat and everyone else in on the shore jeering as the ship of state floats by. Somehow, we have to use whatever civic consciousness and sense of community we have left to bring all the interests into the same boat and give them an oar. Don't jeer—row! Because if EPA sinks while we watch, we all get pulled under.

A lot of people don't believe this; there is a cottage industry now writing books and articles stating that many of our environmental concerns are a lot on hooey. If that's true, why do we need an effective EPA? My answer to that is the same as it's been for a number of years. Our efforts at environmental improvement in America are not about controlling a few chemicals or saving a few species. There are more than five billion people on this globe living in under-developed nations who want to live as well as we do materially. And they are going to try to get there. If they all try to get there in the same way we got there, wastefully, scattering pollution, unduly impacting our natural resource base, then all of us are in a world of trouble.

Supposing that's not true? Supposing somehow, magically, the global development process will take place and not cause all the terrible things to happen to the environment that some predict? Well, I for one, would be delighted if that were the case. Twenty-five years from now, when they come by the nursing home and say "Ruckelshaus, you were a damn fool about ozone depeletion or fisheries destruction," I'll just smile. Meanwhile, you can call me a conservative old Republican, but I don't care to bet the future of the country, and the planet, and the free institutions we're worked so hard to preserve, on that scenario being true. We need to take the prudent steps necessary to bring the major global problems under control, and we need to lead the world in that effort—because, you know, there is really no one else—and to do that we need effective, efficient and fair governmental institutions, among which is EPA. And we have to begin the hard work of fixing it, or suffer the incalculable consequences of our failure.

REMARKS BY DR. STEPHAN SCHMIDHEINY

Thank you. I was extremely relieved to learn that it is not part of my assignment tonight to say a lot of nice things about Bill Ruckelshaus. I have known him too long, and have so much admiration for his person and his achievements in all his many fields of endeavour that if praise were my assignment we would be here for days.

But I must take this opportunity to thank Bill for the leadership he showed when we were putting together the Business Council for Sustainable Development's report to the 1992 Earth Summit. He always offered compelling logic, and always rallied our less courageous members.

He also gave me an important word of advice on an early draft of the report, in which I had begun with all the usual environmental gloom and doom as a rallying call to action. Bill took me aside, and in the confidential tones an uncle might use to explain sex to a backwards nephew, he said: "Stephan, don't do it that way. Business people stop reading immediately when they come upon bad news. To seduce business people, you have got to start by telling them how good things are going to be. Only then do you add a few side problems, such as the loss of the world's forests, oceans, animals, air and ozone layer."

Now, many of you are lawyers, and I know that lawyers are different. You not only have a higher tolerance for bad news, you actually thrive on it, and make your livelihoods out of it. Even so, I shall start with good news anyway.

The good news is that in many parts of the world business is beginning to live up to its new responsibilities. As markets become more open and more international, business is ever more obliged to see that its activities work for, rather than against, the goal of sustainable development.

The World Business Council for Sustainable Development now consists of more than 120 companies and is still growing. We have spun off national BCSDs in Asia, Eastern Europe, and throughout Latin America. The Councils have been involved in a broad spectrum of activities. The WBCSD has developed a "Joint Implementation" programme in which industrial and developing world companies are cooperating to reduce greenhouse gases in the most internationally cost-effective ways. The BCSD of Columbia, composed of large companies, is showing small companies in such inherently dirty business as tanning and metal plating how they can save money by producing less waste and pollution.

This is a perfect example of the WBCSD paradigm of eco-efficiency—adding ever more value while using ever less resources and producing ever less waste and pollution.

There are many reasons why companies should not get involved in eco-efficiency. First, many governments still actually subsidize waste—the waste of energy, water, forest products, pesticides and fertilizer. Second, even if not subsidized, many environmental resources are priced too low. This is especially true of pollution sinks—such as rivers, soil, and the atmosphere. Thus the act of polluting is just not as expensive to companies in the marketplace as it should be.

I think that these disincentives are fading. I think there are a number of trends pushing companies toward increased eco-efficiency. Taken separately, no single one is convincing. Taken together, they become a powerful force.

In many parts of the world regulations are getting tougher and—more important—enforcement is getting tougher; more and more CEOs are finding themselves in court for non-compliance; more use is being made of economic instruments—taxes, charges and tradable permits—to encourage companies towards constant improvement; banks are more willing to lend to cleaner companies; insurers are more willing to insure cleaner companies; investors are increasingly interested in investing in cleaner companies; the best and the brightest graduates are more willing to work only for cleaner companies; "green consumerism" is becoming more mature, switching from brand loyalty to company loyalty; the general public feels a growing right to have a say in what our companies do; the search for eco-efficiency can motivate a company and its employees to become more innovative on many fronts; eco-efficiency is an excellent avenue for introducing the concept and the practice of Total Quality Management (and indeed it is hard to talk about Total Quality Management without including environmental quality in terms of eco-efficiency); media coverage of pollution and environmental liability problems is becoming more sophisticated—and thus harder for companies to shrug off; many of the people to whom the company directors are related (spouses, children) are becoming more concerned and sophisticated about environment and social issues.

Given the recent antics of the U.S. Congress, you may be surprised to hear me list tougher regulations as a present trend. I shall let Bill Ruckelshaus comment on the activities of the lawmakers here. But I am convinced that the American people will ultimately prove unwilling to return to a time when U.S. rivers caught fire and whole towns had to be abandoned.

Internationally, a recent survey of multinationals by the Economist offered a long list of examples of successful companies involved in eco-efficiency and community development activities: Western chemical companies becoming vigilant in policing the industry to decrease pollution scandals; computer companies pushing for higher environmental standards; accountancy firms helping post-communist countries set up modern accounting systems; and oil companies guaranteeing to build schools and airports and act as green watchdogs in return for drilling rights. All of these activities are so obviously investments in present and future business that, the survey concluded, "it seems that behaving like good corporate citizens makes eminent business sense".

It also noted that multinationals tend to help the countries in which they operate by using international standards wherever they go. "On the whole they find it easier to operate one set of rules everywhere in the world. * * * So multinationals clamor for more global—and usually higher—standards partly because it makes their lives easier, partly because it imposes the same standards on their competitors."

The general philosophy at the WBCSD is that since trends are moving towards greater eco-efficiency, the smart company will back such trends, encouraging governments where they need encouragement, while getting their own corporate houses in order to be ready as eco-efficiency becomes the norm rather than the exception.

This process is reaching into unexpected parts of the business world—such as the financial community. I recently helped to lead a WBCSD Working Group on Financial Markets and Sustainable Development. We had been worried that the financial markets, which much be the engine of any kind of development, might be inherently opposed to the goal of sustainability. We worried that they encourage short-term thinking, that they under-value environmental resources, and that they rigorously discount the future.

Our work—which will be published as a book early next year—found that these fears were largely justified. But we also found a surprising amount of encouraging activity in a financial community. Bankers are moving beyond concern for Super Fund liability to realize that a loan to a dirty company is simply becoming a more risky loan—as dirty companies have more difficulty being financially successful. The fact that many banks have signed a statement committing themselves to support sustainable development is not particularly impressive. That the signers have recently hired an NGO to report on how they are honouring their commitment—now that is impressive.

Insurance companies have become sensitized by liabilities for contaminated industrial sites and by losses due to what looks to them like the first financial effects of global warming. Conservative companies like Munich Re and Swiss Re are—in their demands for government action to limit climate change—sounding more radical than the more militant environmental groups.

Even those professions with reputations as fonts of boredom and conservatism—the accountants and the auditors—are working on new forms of accounting that account for the nature as well as capital.

So, we have dealt with industry: it is improving. We have dealt governments: by advising them to take advice from the more progressive businesses. We have even found cause for hope among the financial community.

That leaves the lawyers. What can be done with the lawyers? I am willing to frankly state that in my personal opinion the greatest threat to the competitiveness of US business is not low foreign wages or Oriental inventiveness; it is the US legal system. First, it adds more and more every year to the cost of doing business. As a whole, it represents a tremendous transaction cost to the US economy and society.

Second, the laws covering the different sectors and concerns—banking, business, energy, agriculture, transportation, taxes—have grown up in such an ad hoc manner that they now positively war with one another. And this, of course, only fans the flames of enthusiasm for litigation. I am often advocating the use of common sense in addressing environmental challenges. At a time when payments to the legal profession routinely exceed those to victims or the actual costs of clean-up, then a move towards more common-sense approaches would appear timely.

I am criticising the US system because I stand on US soil before US lawyers. We in Europe also suffer from legal adhocracy or "piecemealism"; though I do insist that you in the US continue to lead the world in money-wasting litigiousness, as you lead the world in so much else. And I admit that, in this instance, we are genuinely afraid that you may become successful exporters of another US product—your legal system.

I do not offer an answer. But I have been deeply and profoundly impressed with the work of Bill Futrell and the Environmental Law Institute in what they call "sustainable development law". I hope we in Europe can learn from this ELI work. We too need to go back to legal basics, to—as Bill Futrell suggests—organise laws around human activities. We need to develop pollution laws and resource laws that operate in harmony. This would not only produce a more common-sensible set of laws, it might even decrease the growing tendency to seek complex legal solutions to simple business problems.

While speaking of the work of the Institute, I want to acknowledge the help it gave to both the BCSD and the International Chamber of Commerce in these groups' preparations for the Earth Summit.

This occassion tonight has been a great pleasure for me—to have been asked by a most prestigious institution to honour a man not only of great prestige, but of great wisdom, warmth, and incisive humour. Maurice Strong told me that whenever the Brundtland Commission reached a completely hopeless impasse, Bill Ruckelshaus would begin slowly in his deep growl of a voice: "Well, you know, this reminds me of the time * * * " He would tell a funny, carefully considered story; the tension would collapse, and cordial progress would resume.

It is a great joy to be here with you all, and it is always a wonderful treat to be in the same room with Bill Ruckelshaus.•

NO BUDGET—NO PAY

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, here we are in day four of a partial shutdown of the Federal Government, and the only Federal employees that are not feeling any pain regarding their paychecks are the Members of Congress. We are treated differently, and that is wrong.

I know that twice the U.S. Senate passed my no-budget—no-pay amendment, and we have done it with bipartisanship. We have done it with Senator DOLE and Senator DASCHLE, with the Republican leadership and the Democratic leadership. I am very proud of that. Congressman DURBIN is trying to get this through on the District of Columbia appropriations bill, and we are very hopeful that will occur. But at this point, it is stymied.

I think it is shameful. I think it is embarrassing. I think it is a height of hypocrisy that the Members of Congress, who have caused this problem because we cannot figure it out, are still getting our pay. And I am very pleased that Senator SNOWE has introduced a bill. We have worked on it together, and we are trying very hard to bring it forward because the other efforts of the Senate are not enough at this time.

The problem we face is that one of the amendments we passed is on the District of Columbia bill, and that is stuck. The other one we passed is on reconciliation, and that is not here yet. We continue to get our pay while all other personnel—and Senator HARKIN pointed this out to the Senate yesterday—are not getting their pay.

So I would like to ask unanimous consent that I send to the desk now for its immediate consideration a no budget-no pay bill that will treat the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House exactly like Federal employees, and I hope there will not be any objection because we are on record before and I would like to take us on record now in a separate bill because the American people are disgusted with this situation as, indeed, they should be. And, yes, there are colleagues who are giving their pay to charity. There are colleagues who are putting their pay in escrow. And some are not even talking about it. That is very, very noble. But that does not address the institutional failure here.

So I ask unanimous consent to take up the no budget-no pay bill right now.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, on behalf of several Senators on both sides of the aisle who were informed on the last vote that would be the last vote and have therefore left the Senate Chamber, without commenting on the merits or demerits of the proposition put forward by the Senator from California, I will object on behalf of the Senators who are absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 440

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 10 a.m. Friday, November 17, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report to accompany S. 440, the highway system designation bill, and that it be considered under the following limitations during the pendency of the conference report: Senator BIDEN be recognized to make a motion to recommit, with 30 minutes of debate on the motion, and with that time under the control of the Senator BIDEN; that when that time is used or yielded back, the motion to recommit be withdrawn; that there be 60 minutes for debate to be equally divided between Senators CHAFEE and BAUCUS or their designees, 60 minutes under the control of Senator LAUTENBERG or his designee, and 15 minutes of time under the control of Senator GLENN; and that upon the conclusion or yielding back of all time, the Senate proceed to vote on adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving the right to object, I might ask, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. This unanimous consent was to take up certain bills tomorrow?

Mr. COATS. A conference report.

Mr. HARKIN. A conference report.

Mr. COATS. S. 440, the highway system designation bill.

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I would like to ask the proponent of the unanimous consent request, the Senator from Indiana objected to taking up the Boxer bill because, he stated, there was an understanding there would be no more votes today. It would seem to me that we could take up the Boxer bill with an understanding we would vote tomorrow, or take it up and add it to this list. I wonder if the Senator would add the Boxer bill to this list to take up tomorrow and we can put a time certain, we can just put an hour of debate on it and vote on it, a half-hour. That would be fine.

Mr. COATS. I would just reply to the Senator from Iowa, there are a number of Senators who have expressed either support for or opposition to this legislation. They are not now in the Chamber because they were informed that the Senate essentially concluded its business. I cannot speak on their behalf or add unanimous consent on their behalf without contacting them. And obviously they have left the Chamber.

Mr. HARKIN. No one contacted this Senator to ask if it was OK to take up these measures tomorrow.

Mr. COATS. It was cleared with the minority leader. It was hotlined to all Senators and has been cleared both by the majority——

Mr. HARKIN. I apologize. If it was, I apologize.

Mr. COATS. I have a second unanimous-consent which has also been hotlined and cleared, just setting the orders for tomorrow. I am not closing out the business of the day.

Mr. HARKIN. I apologize. If it was hotlined, I apologize.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COATS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

ORDERS FOR FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1995

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on Friday, November 17; that following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved to date, no resolutions come over under the rule, the call of the calendar be dispensed with, the morning hour be deemed to have expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then begin consideration of the conference report to accompany S. 440, the national highway bill, as under the previous agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, for the information of all Senators, there will be a rollcall vote on the National Highway System conference report on Friday.

The Senate will also consider the Balanced Budget Act conference report during tomorrow's session. That conference report has a statutory limitation of 10 hours of debate. Members can therefore expect a late night session on Friday. Also, additional appropriations conference reports may become available from the House. Therefore, rollcall votes can be expected throughout Friday's session.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

NO BUDGET-NO PAY

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I wish to add a few comments to the issue that the Senator from California raised with respect to legislation that would require that Members of Congress and the President be treated in the same manner as those Federal employees whose pay will be suspended during this period of a shutdown.

I think we all recognize the hardships this poses to the hundreds of thousands of Federal employees across the country. I think at the same time we are experiencing this shutdown, Members of Congress and the President should have their pay suspended.

That is why I have introduced this legislation that complements the legislation introduced by the Senator from California and that is now part of the DC appropriations bill. But until such time as that becomes law, we still have to address this issue with respect to this present shutdown and making it retroactive. I just do not happen to believe that we as Members of Congress and the President should be treated any differently.

I regret that we have not been able to bring this legislation up tonight so that we have a chance to put ourselves in the same position as every other Federal employee. That is what this legislation would do. Interestingly enough, it has the support of 21 Members of this Senate, including the Senate majority leader. I worked with the Senator from California [Mrs. BOXER] on this issue as well.

We should be able to bring up this legislation, and we should be able to vote on it so that we move in the direction of being in the same position, sharing the same difficulties, the same economic hardships as those individuals who see their pay suspended during this period of time.

Unfortunately, we do not know how long this shutdown will continue. Nevertheless, I do not think that we as Members of Congress want to be viewed differently, putting ourselves into another group as we are going through this shutdown. We should not be immune or isolated from those difficulties that Federal employees are now experiencing.

That is true for those employees who work in our offices, and I have 15 such employees who are not working at this moment in time. Why should I not have my pay suspended if their pay is being suspended? I think most of us would agree. So I hope that we will be able to have this opportunity tomorrow to address this issue and to pass this legislation. It is a matter of fairness, and it is a matter of equity.

I hope the President signs the continuing resolution that just passed in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. But if that does not happen, we still would go on into a prolonged shutdown, and I do not think that we should be getting our pay, not experiencing any discomfort, while Federal employees who are not able to work and even those who are still not going to be paid at this moment in time.

So I urge my colleagues to insist that this legislation be considered tomorrow. I appreciate the support that is being given to this issue by the Senate majority leader. In fact, there were 21 of us who sent a letter to the Senate majority leader asking for this legislation to be considered, and he supports that effort. I hope everybody will do so because this is absolutely essential.

I think we are facing enormous difficulties as it is with public confidence in the political process, but I do not think that that confidence should be undermined further by the fact that we are somehow in this separate category, somewhat isolated from the problems that Federal employees are currently facing.

At the beginning of this year, the first piece of legislation that this Congress considered and, indeed, enacted and signed into law by the President was the Congressional Compliance Act that required Congress to abide by the same laws that apply to the rest of this country. I think that this legislation certainly reaffirms that policy and moves us in that direction. It is a matter of fairness. It is a matter of equity. It is right.

So with that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HARKIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I want to join with my colleagues, the Senator from Maine and the Senator from California, in supporting this legislation to have Senators and Congressmen treated the same as all other Federal employees.

I agree with the Senator from Maine on everything she said but for one thing. If the majority leader of the Senate wanted this bill up, he could have brought it up tonight. That is the power of the majority leader. If the majority leader wanted this up tomorrow, he could have included it in the unanimous-consent request to bring it up tomorrow, and we would vote on it tomorrow.

So let us have no doubt about it, it is up to the majority leader whether or not we vote on this or not and no one else on this floor. With that one exception, I agree with everything else the Senator from Maine said.

She was right, as was Senator BOXER, that earlier this year one of the first bills we passed was a bill to make sure that all the laws that apply to other people apply to Members of Congress. We all applauded that, voted for that, that we all live under the same laws. People cannot understand why we had gone so long without doing that, but we did it. But there was one glaring loophole. When it comes to our pocketbook, we want to be treated differently than all other people and all other Federal workers.

As the Senator from California said, there are hundreds of thousands of Federal workers who went home today not knowing that they are not getting paid for the work they do. There are others who are not even going to work and not getting paid. But our pay is automatic. It is like an entitlement. We have an entitlement for our pay. No matter what happens, we continue to get paid.

We just finished a day of activity here, the last vote of the day. There are five Senators left on the floor. Everybody has taken off. They have gone home secure in the knowledge that no matter what happens, the paychecks we get next Monday will be full. We will get paid for every day that we are here.

That is kind of a nice thought, is it not, Mr. President? It is kind of a nice thought to go home in the evening after a long day's work and know that when your next paycheck comes, you are going to get paid. Think about it, think about all those workers, think about our staff people here, think about all the Federal workers, think about the air traffic controllers if you will, Mr. President, who are out there working a very high-stress job, safely guiding aircraft through crowded corridors. It is a high-tense job. It is a job that requires a lot of skill, intense concentration, good judgment and decisiveness. Air traffic controllers put in a hard day's work. Just think, Mr. President, they are going home tonight knowing that next Monday when they get their pay, they will not be paid for the work they did today or the work they did yesterday or the work they did the day before.

How do you think that works on someone's mind? These are people like you and me. They have homes, mortgages, kids in school and illnesses. We are very smug around here, are we not? We are so smug around here because nobody can touch us. We get our pay; we do not care what happens.

I tell you, I think it is one of the grossest things that is going on today in Congress and in the Federal Government that we can shut it down, throw all these people out or force people to come to work, so-called essential people have to go to work but they are not getting paid. I thought we did away with slavery in this country. They have to come to work, but they are not going to get paid. It is just not justifiable.

So I think at least we ought to take up the bill and pass it. It just says if we are not doing our jobs, we do not get paid like other Federal workers until this bill passes. Apply the same rule that applies to air traffic controllers, drug enforcement agents, Medicare fraud investigators, FBI agents, Defense Department personnel—everyone else. Make the same laws apply to us.

You wonder sometimes why people in this country are so cynical about Congress. Well, you do not have to wonder too long when you see what is happening now. So smug around here, we can do all this. We do not care what happens. Send all these workers home. Make them come to work. Tell them they do not get paid.

I see our distinguished majority leader is back on the floor. I think we ought to take up the bill tomorrow and just pass it. I cannot imagine any votes against it. Who would be against applying the same laws to us as apply to other Federal workers so we do not get our pay the same way as anybody else in the Federal Government until this situation is resolved?

When this goes on, I can understand why people are so cynical about the Federal Government, cynical about Congress. All the good that we did earlier this year in passing that Congressional Accountability Act and applying laws to Congress that other people have to live by probably all got flushed down the toilet right now with this kind of action, because people know that we are getting paid. Other people working for the Federal Government are not getting paid. It is not fair, and I think we ought to take up the Snowe bill tomorrow and pass it.

I ask unanimous consent, if I am not a cosponsor, to be added as a cosponsor of that bill. I think we ought to bring it up and pass it as soon as possible. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will just take a minute or two. The Senator from Delaware wishes to speak and then the Senator from Rhode Island, Senator PELL. Are there any other Members on that side who wish to speak? If not, I will put it on automatic pilot.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess following the remarks of Senator BIDEN, Senator PELL and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE NO BUDGET-NO PAY BILL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me say, I am a cosponsor of the bill, and I agree we ought to figure out some way to get it passed. I hope that we can resolve that tomorrow. I must say there is opposition, some on each side. I think the American people would feel better about it——

Mrs. BOXER. Will the majority leader yield? I was not aware we had any opposition on our side of the aisle.

Mr. DOLE. Maybe there is none on that side. I will reserve that.

Mrs. BOXER. Because I have been working hard, and I have not come up with anybody who is opposed.

Mr. DOLE. I understand there may be some opposition on this side. We will try to see what happens tomorrow.

A BIPARTISAN MAJORITY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to take just a moment to comment on the vote that we just had. It seems to me when the vote is 60 to 37, we pretty much replicated what happened in the House about midnight last night, where 48 Democrats joined Republicans in a bipartisan effort to open up the Government, take the lid off, put people back to work and balance the budget in the next 7 years.

It seems to me that is the best of both worlds. I am very proud of that strong bipartisan majority of 60 Senators who stood up tonight for our Federal workers and for a balanced budget which will mean a brighter future for our children and our grandchildren.

I think we keep losing sight of why we want to balance the budget and why should we be concerned. I must say, we have to keep reminding ourselves, the language we use does not resonate because we keep talking about balanced budget, CR's, debt ceiling extensions, and it does not mean a thing to many people, but their children mean a lot to people and their grandchildren mean a lot, and that is what this debate is all about. It is not about numbers, it is not about a continuing resolution, it is not about a debt ceiling extension, it is not about any of us in this Chamber; it is about trying to do something for a lot of our young people who are going to want to find jobs.

I must say, as I read the Washington Post editorial again and again today—because I could not believe it; it was a good editorial—it talked about the real default, the default of leadership on the other side of the aisle.

I must say, as the Senator from New Mexico said earlier, when you do a lot of heavy lifting, you get a lot of criticism. We have been doing a lot of heavy lifting. We believe the American people gave us somewhat of a mandate to make fundamental change last November, and we have kept our word and our promise. We have worked together, and we have had some bipartisan support, just as we have had tonight. So it is not just a Republican effort. We had a number of Senators join us earlier this year on a balanced budget amendment. We lost by one vote. We hope to bring it up again.

Now, President Clinton says a lot of things at different times and in different ways. Yesterday, at a news conference or in a short statement, he mentioned the phrase "balanced budget" 16 times, by actual count. If the people who watched television last night saw the clips of what he has been saying in the last 2 years, he talked about a 5-year balanced budget when he was a candidate, then maybe 10 years, maybe 9, maybe 8, maybe 7.

Now, I think the President could indicate that he is in good faith by signing this bill. There is nothing in this bill that is going to hamstring the President of the United States. Nothing commits him to do anything, except it says we shall enact a balanced budget amendment in the next 7 years, using CBO estimates—updated CBO estimates—the very estimates that President Clinton asked us to use. CBO is the Congressional Budget Office, for those who do not understand these initials all the time. But when he first spoke to a joint session of Congress, he boasted about using CBO—Congressional Budget Office—figures in his budget and said they had been, as I recall, fairly accurate over the years. And they have been accurate over the years.

So we are not asking too much of the President of the United States. I am not one who advocates shutting down the Government of the United States. I would like to find some resolution, and if we cannot do it with this continuing resolution, maybe we can figure out a way tomorrow to resolve the differences.

What harm does it do the President of the United States to sign a bill that says we will have a balanced budget by the year 2002? He said today on television that he did not mind the 48 Democrats voting with Republicans last night because it was not binding. Well, if it is not binding on the 48 Democrats, why should it be binding on the President of the United States if he signs it?

Again, I want to thank my colleagues tonight who said to our Federal workers that it is time to go back to work, and said to the President of the United States, it is time to balance the budget. Again, I say, as I said earlier today, I do not think it does a lot of good to have press conferences every day where we say one thing and the President says something else. Why do we not sit down together, without the press? We are all adults. I believe the American people are looking to all of us for leadership. So the Government has been shut down Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and it will be shut down tomorrow. Is that enough time? I think it depends on the leadership that we can produce in the next 24 hours. If not, we are going to go into the next week and then into the next week. I do not see much opportunity next week to have any resolution.

So I say, first of all, Mr. President, sign this resolution. It is not a bad resolution. I am told that the only objectionable feature is the balanced budget language, which does not legally bind the President of the United States. It seems to me that we may be very close. If the President would sign that tomorrow, and we send it down tomorrow—and I assume we will—then everybody can come back to work on Monday, and we could go on about the Balanced Budget Act of 1995, which we hope to finish tomorrow night around 10, 11 o'clock, maybe a little later. And then on Saturday morning, we will take up a conference report or two, and then Members could be off with their families for Thanksgiving, as many would like to do.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include the Senator from Illinois, Senator CAROL MOSELEY-BRAUN, who would like to speak for up to 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

THE SHUTDOWN

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I would like to comment on three items. One, I compliment Senator BOXER and Senator SNOWE for their initiative to treat us like everyone else; that is, if we are working and other Federal employees are working, and they are not getting paid, we should not get paid. Most of the public in our home States do not realize that all of us have voted for that already. We voted for that twice already. Unfortunately, the House of Representatives has either inadvertently or, in fact, refused to bring that up. I will not make a judgment about that. But we have been on record for some time.

I think it makes good sense. I just depart from one comment made by one of our colleagues who supported this initiative. I do not think the Congressmen and Senators are smug about this. The truth about this much of this is artificial. I have been here for 23 years and although we have never had this extent of a crisis, we have shut down for a couple of hours or a day. In every case, it has been standard operating procedure that everybody is made whole. The Federal employees—everybody is made whole.

So I do not think most of our colleagues thought that this sort of stupidity would go on as long as it has. Therefore, I do not think my colleagues sat there and said, "By the way, I know people like the stenographer here, who is working, and I know he is not getting paid, and I do not care; ha, ha, ha, he is not going to get his paycheck." I do not think anybody thought about that.

I want to make this clear. Sometimes, in our zeal, we make it sound like this place is a little more heartless than it is. The truth is that there is an artificial element to this and, in all probability, nobody is going to end up losing a cent in this —unless this does go on for weeks or a month, which none of us wish to happen, and I think probably none of us believe will happen.

Now, sometimes we do stupid things. Sometimes ego and pride and politics and partisanship get in the way and everybody wakes up one morning and says, "My Lord, how did we get here?" I am hopeful that will not happen. That leads me to my second point.

My second point. I have great respect—and I mean this sincerely—for Senator DOLE, the majority leader. I have served with him and next to him for 23 years now. You cannot be around somebody that long and not get some sense of the man, the person. I do not know anybody who is smarter in this place, and I do not know anybody who is a better legislator in this place, or that I have had any better relationship or dealings with than him. I make one distinction in what he said. When he said the President is not bound in any real way if he were to sign the continuing resolution that the Senate sent to him, and he then mentioned the CBO figures, Congressional Budget Office figures—and he did accurately say the President, in the past, had mentioned Congressional Budget Office figures. But whether the President said it in the past or not, we all say things that turn out not to make so much sense sometimes—at least I have.

The truth of the matter is that it is important for the public to know not whose figures are right, but just to understand the debate. There is a fundamental difference in the outcome of a balanced budget and in how much you have to cut to get to a balanced budget, based upon how rapidly the economy grows or does not grow.

Now, the figures are infinitesimally small when you say them. For example, the Congressional Budget Office says the economy will grow, on average, over the next 7 years, at 2.4 percent per year. And along comes the Office of Management and Budget in the executive branch, and they say, no, the economy, over the next 7 years, will grow, on average, 2.6 percent per year. The public up there says, "What is the problem? What difference does it make which number you accept?" Well, I am not saying who is right. By the way, you know that old joke, I say to the former Governor of Missouri, now the Presiding Officer—I am sure he has asked a lot of economists about the impact of what happens in his State. But it reminds me of that joke that used to go like this: Give me a one-armed economist because every economist you speak to, no matter who they are, in their estimates, they say, "On the one hand" it could be this, and "on the other hand" it could be that.

I would love to find a one-armed economist who would only tell me this is what is going to happen.

Well, back to the central point, the difference between a 2.4 and 2.6 growth rate in the economy over 7 years is almost one-half trillion dollars more that would have to be cut from the Federal spending.

Right now if you said to me, I am sitting there and I say "OK, I am President"—I am not President obviously—"I am President." You say to me, "OK, I will agree to balance the budget in 7 years," and I look out there, and I say, "All right."

By the way, what is the magic? Why did we not say 5 years? Why did the Republican Party not say 5? Why did the President say 10? Why did we not pick 6? The truth is, it is of little relevance in terms of a goal. It is a practical relevance in terms of how much you cut and how rapidly you cut.

But back to the central point. I am sitting there as President. You come to me and say, "I have good news. We have signed on to 7 years." Great. That is what I say. "I can do this in 7 years." But the numbers they gave us are that we have to balance everything based upon the economy only growing this fast.

Mr. President, what that means is those cuts, that $1 trillion in cuts you were going to find to balance it over 7 years, you have to find $1.5 trillion. And you say, what does that mean? That means I either have to give no tax cut at all or that means I have to make major cuts in Medicare, or that means I have to make significant cuts in education. And for what? For the want of 1 year? For the want of 2 years?

I lay you 8 to 5, which is what is disturbing me, the American people are way ahead of all of us—the President, the Speaker, the leadership, Democrats, Republicans. They no more believe that we are going to balance the budget in 5 years than 7 years or 7 years than 8. They do not care if it is done in 8 years or in 6 years. They just want to know we are serious and we made a decision.

The glidepath of this Government spending over the next decade is going to be this way—down, and real numbers, real cuts, real changes. That, I agree, there is a mandate to both parties on that. But do you think anybody who sits home and says, "Well, I have been thinking this over. I listened to that debate in Congress, and my grandchildren are going to be put in serious jeopardy if we do this in 10 years instead of 7. This means the health and welfare of my granddaughter."

Do you believe anybody thinks that? What they are sitting home saying is "God, all those guys and women down there, all they do is talk. They keep promising balanced budget amendments. I do not believe they will do it any time." That is what they really say about us all.

The truth is, I have been here 23 years. I have never seen a time—and I say this with total sincerity—where the overwhelming majority of the Members of this body have done anything other than agreed we have to balance the budget, and mean it.

I introduced a balanced budget amendment in 1984 that got nowhere. I am a Democrat that voted for the constitutional amendment to balance the budget. I have introduced on four occasions—four occasions—entire plans to balance a budget, knowing I am not President and I am not the leader, but for illustrative purposes. I tried with Senator GRASSLEY back in the 1980's to freeze all Government spending, including Social Security, including everything.

The truth is the last election did one thing. I do not know whether it really made you guys a majority party for long. I do not know. We will find out. I know one thing it did. What it did was it made sure that there was nobody left on the left in my party who, in fact, said we do not care about moving the budget toward balance.

These folks mean it. We all mean it. The public knows we mean that. I think they look at us and say, "You are all being kind of childish."

For example, I bet—and I should not say this because I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri, the Presiding Officer, would agree—I bet I could find 20 Members at least on the Republican side of the aisle if I were in charge of this outfit—and I am not—we could sit down and say, "Here is the deal. You guys want a balanced budget in 7 years and you want CBO numbers. I want a balanced budget, too, but I do not want to cut as much Medicare as you do. I do not want to cut as much as you do, and I do not want to give as big a tax break as you want."

So we can make a deal, make a deal. We will split the difference between the CBO figure of 2.4 and the OMB figure of 2.6. Take 2.5—that is $250 billion. And make another agreement. Agree I will go for a bigger cut in Medicare. I say we only need to do $89 billion. That is all we need—not $270 billion. I will split the difference with you on that.

You have to make a deal on taxes, too. As much as you want to help wealthy folk, and I want to help them, too, tell them to wait until the end of the line. We will not give them anything. We will not raise their taxes, but we will not give them a tax cut.

Just those gross numbers—by the way, also make a deal, satisfy the President. Do not do this in 10 years. Do it in 8 years. Do not do it in 7—you give a year, we give up 2 years.

Do you think the American public will go home and say, "Boy, they all sold out. Boy, they all do not mean this. Boy, that is ridiculous. Boy, my grandchild is now in real jeopardy. Boy, my child's future I borrowed against now another 18 months"? I think they would say they are finally acting like mature adults.

I respectfully suggest, to go back to the original point I made, the majority leader said, what difference does it make whether it is CBO or OMB? Let me tell the difference. That is like saying to me, "JOE, you got to forge this creek, the Ardent Creek. You have to forge it, and it is 43 feet wide where the rapids are, and you have a hook at the end of the rope."

It makes a difference whether you give me a 48-foot rope or you give me a 38-foot rope whether I can get across that creek. If you give me a 38-foot rope, I cannot make it without getting awful wet and put in danger. Give me a 48-foot rope I can throw that sucker across, hook it around the tree, and have no problem bringing myself across.

That is the fundamental kind of difference between these numbers. These numbers are real. They make a difference.

I might add, the DuPont companies of the world, the Fortune 500 companies of the world who all of us say are better at estimating what will happen than we, they all say the growth rate will be about 2.9 percent per year. They say we will have $1 trillion difference from what the Congressional Budget Office says.

Let me say, if you ask whether I accept a DuPont Co. economist or a Federal bureaucrat's economist, I tell you where I go, this Democrat. If you ask whether I take an economist from Maryland National Bank or from the Chrysler Corp. in my State, I know which I would take. I would take the private sector guy.

What I am told is—and I may be wrong, but I do not think I am—I am told the blue chip analysis, that is taking all the blue chip companies who have analyzed what the growth rate is going to be, the consensus is it is going to be about 2.9 percent per year.

I will tell you what. If we agree to their numbers, I can balance the budget and not cut Medicare and not hurt education and not make the changes I do not want to make and I can do it in 5 years.

This makes a difference. It makes a difference what numbers you pick. Like I said, it is like that rope. You tell me I have to get across a 40-foot creek with rapids and if I slip in the rapids I go over the dam, and you give me a 30-foot rope, I have a problem. You give me a 50-foot rope, I can do it. So the difference here is the length of the rope we are giving the President.

I will conclude by saying the Presiding Officer is the only Republican in the Chamber—and by the way I am not suggesting anybody else should be in the Chamber. All reasonable people are home at 10 minutes to 10 at night, and I do not know why I am doing it, because I am not sure that the four people in here, who are kind enough to be listening to me, are listening. But I would respectfully suggest the following.

The reason why a guy like me is a little bit suspect of the insistence on the CBO numbers is—I will be real blunt with you —I believe this is more than about balancing the budget. I believe this is about eliminating programs, or drastically changing programs that the Republican Party, understandably and defensibly, historically has not liked.

But it can be cloaked in balancing the budget now. Because if you give me the 30-foot rope, I have to get rid of education. I cannot pull education across that creek with me on my back. I cannot take Medicare across that creek with me on my back. I cannot take a lot of things across there—baggage that some of my friends on the Republican side, and some Democrats, do not think we should be doing anyway.

So I think what the President should do—presumptuous of me to suggest what the President should do. But, if the President called up and asked me tonight, Joe, what do you recommend about this? I would pick up the phone and I would call BOB DOLE and NEWT GINGRICH and I would say, Fellows, look, come on down. Let us have a cup of coffee. And I would promise NEWT could sit at the head of the table. I would let him sit behind my desk. And I would say, Here is the deal. Let's make a deal. Let's split the difference on the numbers, not between the private sector, but the two Government bureaucrats who said what the numbers were. Split the difference and let us split the number of years. I will take off 2, you add 1. And let's get back to work, and then let us fight about the details, which is what appropriations bills are about.

I hope we do that. I am not suggesting my particular formula, I say to the Presiding Officer. I am not so presumptuous as to say that is the only way to do it. But I do know one thing. Legislation is the art of compromise, not weakness, compromise, because we have very divergent views.

I have come to know a bit more about the Presiding Officer. He and I have divergent views on a number of issues, but I truly respect him. And I think he respects me. There is no reason why we could not work—I have to give something. You are never going to agree with my philosophy. I am never going to agree with yours, on the whole. So we have to give something.

I do not mean to paint it—I would like it if the Senator from Missouri and I could settle this, but I know neither one of us are in the position to do this. But the larger point is simple. I think it is time for us to sort of—I was going to say act like grown-ups. That implies they have not been. I think it is time to say, OK, everybody has made the point. Let us get back to work. Let us split the difference on these things. Because the truth of the matter is, if the President agreed to an 8-year balanced budget with CBO numbers, or OMB numbers, does anybody believe that means he is less committed to getting to a balanced budget? He locks himself to a balanced budget on those terms.

So the issue is not if. The issue is how. I think we could settle this quickly. I hope we will do it.

My colleagues are here. I will not do it tonight, but I was going to make a statement, and I will do it tomorrow, on a third point. That is Mr. HELMS'—and I love Senator HELMS—outrageous, in my view, holding up of the START Treaty and holding up the Conventional Weapons Treaty. But I will save that for another moment. Maybe the Senator would be on the floor, because I would rather deal with him on the floor. As my colleagues know, I never say anything that references another Senator without telling him first. It is nothing derogatory, but I hope he will reconsider. We are about to lose the START Treaty, and that is the thing that eliminates all those Russian missiles that could be aimed at us again.

My colleagues are waiting to speak. I thank my colleagues and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

THE LAW OF THE SEA CONVENTION

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, from October 23 to November 3, 1995, the United States was host to an intergovernmental conference convened under the auspices of the U.N. Environment Programme to adopt a Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land Based Sources of Marine Pollution. My colleagues know that I have long had a strong interest in the protection of the environment, and in particular of our oceans. In fact, in 1973, legislation was enacted that I introduced to create the position of Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs. I was pleased that the Congress and the President agreed with my strong feeling that increased cooperation with respect to the protection of our oceans be given greater focus and visibility at the State Department.

As far back as 1977 I introduced a resolution that required countries to conduct environmental impact assessments before carrying out activities that might impact the environment of another country or of a global commons area. The U.N. Environment Programme (UNEP) was to be the recipient of these impact assessments and in July 1995, I introduced Resolution 154 calling on other nations to adopt a similar approach. UNEP has retained its key role in the protection of the environment worldwide and the Washington Conference on Marine Pollution was but the latest example of its ongoing efforts to encourage all countries to cooperate in the protection of the environment.

This Conference was convened as a result of the U.N. Conference on Environment and Development held in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992. It recognized the fact that more than 80 percent of marine pollution originates from terrestrial sources and its aim was to ensure that all the Parties would coordinate their efforts in trying to reduce such sources of pollution. The two outcomes of the Conference were the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment form Land-Based Activities, adopted at the end of the Conference, and the Washington Declaration, which was adopted by its high-level segment. Both the Programme of Action and the Declaration complement the legal regime set up by the Law of the Sea Convention which was signed by President Clinton and is still pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I wish to call the attention of my colleagues to an article published in the Washington Post on November 4, 1995, which highlights the risks now weighing on our oceans and the need to take urgent action. I ask unanimous consent that this article be included in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[See exhibit 1.]

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I have always been a very strong supporter of the Law of the Sea Convention because it sets up a new Constitution for the Oceans and because it is the perfect tool to put an end to such destructive measures as ocean dumping and other forms of direct pollution. In that respect, the Law of the Sea addresses the marine sources of oceans pollution. The Washington Conference aimed to complement this approach by addressing the impact of terrestrial, and indirect, sources of marine pollution. The Programme of Action adopted by the Conference contains a series of practical steps that governments can adopt, while the Washington Declaration provides us with a framework to further our international cooperation.

At the national level, countries can, and should, restrict negative impacts by better and stronger regulation of sewage discharges and by controlling the production and use of pesticides, fertilizers and other persistent organic pollutants that are known to cause considerable damage to marine life. At the international level, cooperation needs to be increased, with a view to imposing more stringent controls on the most dangerous of substances, such as DDT, PCBs, and other persistent organic pollutants. The Washington Declaration recognizes this by calling for the development of a global legally binding instrument for the reduction or elimination of persistent organic pollutants. At this stage, it is still unclear what form such a treaty should and will take, but it is of the utmost importance that the United States become an active participant in these negotiations.

By definition, marine pollution is a global problem, and while it cannot be solved by individual nations, we all have a responsibility to cooperate in attempting to save our oceans. The United States has always been at the forefront of similar efforts in the past and we cannot shrink from our responsibilities in these times of crisis. The Law of the Sea Convention and the Washington Programme of Action are the two vital instruments through which we can finally put an end to the excessive pollution of our oceans. This is a chance for the United States to prove that it really intends to address and solve the very important issue of marine pollution by ratifying the Law of the Sea Convention, by implementing the Programme of Action in earnest, and by becoming a leader in the negotiations of a treaty on the regulation of persistent organic pollutants.

EXHIBIT 1

EXPERTS SEEK GLOBAL TREATY ON TOXIC OCEAN POLLUTANTS

(By Gary Lee)

Alarmed by rising levels of pollution in the world's oceans, a conference of environmental experts from 102 countries yesterday called for new global controls on the use of DDT and 11 other toxic chemicals that are often discharged into waterways.

The Washington gathering, sponsored by the United Nations Environment Program (UNEP), urged industrial and developing countries to negotiate a global treaty restricting the spread of a dozen persistent organic pollutants, a group of industrially produced chemicals that frequently wind up in oceans and other water supplies. Participants in the two-week meeting, which ended yesterday, approved a program of action that included the call for a treaty.

Persistent organic pollutants were targeted for more stringent international regulation because they are highly toxic, remain in the environment for long periods and can spread thousands of miles from the point of emission, conference delegates said.

After accumulating in fish and other marine mammals, such chemicals work their way through the food chain and may eventually be consumed by people. They can cause severe health problems, said Clif Curtis, an adviser to the international environmental organization Greenpeace. Studies have linked some of the compounds to cancer, neurological damage and defects of the reproductive system and immune system in various animals, including humans. Creatures occupying positions near the top of the food chain—such as fish that eat smaller fish, marine mammals, seabirds and humans—are at greater risk of such effects because more of the toxic substances accumulate in their tissues. Greenpeace advocates a worldwide ban on the production and use of persistent organic pollutants.

The campaign for new restrictions on the chemicals is part of a growing movement to save the oceans, considered by many environmentalists to be the world's last underregulated biological frontier, from further degradation.

"The oceans of the world are interdependent," Vice President Gore told the gathering in a speech this week. "The only way to stop the degradation of marine environment from land-based activities is to share the solutions."

"If we're going to take the cleanup of the oceans seriously, [persistent organic pollutants] must be banned," said Salef Diop, an adviser to the Senegalese environment ministry and delegate to the conference.

While the 1982 Law of the Sea Treaty and other international agreements regulate ocean dumping and other forms of direct pollution, the UNEP conference focused on restricting land-based activities that indirectly contribute to the pollution of oceans—such as the use of organic pesticides that are washed into rivers and end up in the ocean.

The conference pointed out in its recommendations that individual countries can help fight ocean pollution through national policies, such as the reduction of sewage discharges and control of pollution from nonpoint sources like farmland. Land-based activities are responsible for 80 percent of ocean pollution, according to Magnus Johannesson, a senior environmental official from Iceland.

The substances pinpointed by the conference as requiring more stringent controls include the pesticides DDT, toxaphene, chlordane, heptachlor, endrin, aldrin, mirex and dieldrin, as well as byproducts of industrial combustion such as dioxins, furans, hexachlorobenzene and the group of chlorinated substances known as polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs). Although dozens of other chemicals pose a threat to oceans, these 12 are most widely used and most toxic, according to environmentalists.

After controls are in place, others could be added to the list if scientific consensus indicates that they are harmful to marine life, conference delegates said.

The U.S. has already moved to ban the use or spread of many of the compounds, but at least two—chlordane and heptachlor—are still produced by American companies for export abroad, Clinton administration officials said.

Although banned in the United States in 1972, DDT is still widely used in India and some other developing countries to protect crops against insects. Heptachlor and toxaphene are also used heavily in some countries.

Safer alternatives exist, but some research will be needed to determine whether they can be substituted cost-effectively in those countries that still rely on chemicals that end up as persistent organic pollutants, conference delegates said.

THE EXECUTION OF KEN SARO-WIWA

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, last Friday, amid the strong protests of the American and British Governments and countless human rights organizations, the Nigerian Government executed Ken Saro-Wiwa, a noted author, environmentalist and human rights activist, and eight of his colleagues. I must say that these executions represent a flagrant violation of human rights and I am outraged. These executions reflect the refusal of the brutal regime of General Abacha in Nigeria to abide by the most basic international norms. Moreover, such actions deserve a swift and harsh response from the U.S. Government.

Since seizing power in a military coup in June 1993, General Abacha has systematically eliminated any perceived rival by intimidation, lifelong imprisonment and most appallingly, by means of execution. Mr. Saro-Wiwa and his eight colleagues now join the ranks of Nigerians whom the Abacha government has successfully silenced. Despite these brutal deaths, I am confident that the causes for which these leaders died cannot, nor will not, be destroyed.

Ken Saro-Wiwa spent much of his life fighting against the military government and the rampant pollution of the land and water in his home, Ogoniland, caused by unregulated oil production. Threatened by his persistent and popular campaign, the Nigerian Government charged Ken Saro-Wiwa and his colleagues for the murder of four pro-government activists. The State Department and human rights groups report that Mr. Saro-Wiwa was nowhere near the murder scene and was denied a fair chance to defend himself. Further, there is evidence that witnesses were paid to testify against Mr. Saro-Wiwa. Topped with a military tribunal appointed to try the case, Ken Saro-Wiwa never had a chance.

Mr. President, Nigeria is a critically important country for United States interests in Africa. Nigeria has made significant contributions in the course of regional and international affairs, such as its involvement in restoring peace in Liberia, in resolving the regional drug issue, and last year's commutation of the death sentence to life imprisonment for General Obasanjo and other alleged coup plotters.

This latest action, however, undermines international and American confidence in General Abacha's announced transition to democracy. The impact of Nigeria's problems, inflicted primarily by the Abachan regime, threatens to extend throughout West Africa, harming the political and economic prospects of its neighbors. General Abacha's refusal to heed the calls of the international community, including those made from these chambers, demonstrates his unwillingness to engage in quiet diplomacy. Humane principles and a commitment to democratic ideals compel us to respond forcefully to the Abachan regime. While the Clinton administration has called on the United Nations to consider an embargo on sales of military equipment to Nigeria, Congress should consider taking the lead in identifying and enacting strong measures that hurt the Abachan regime.

Mr. President, I would like to conclude with reiterating my outrage at General Abacha and his regime's complete disregard for basic human rights and international legal standards. I believe that relations between our two countries cannot be normalized until the appalling abuse of human rights, especially toward the Ogoni people and their leaders, comes to an end.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

THE CONTINUING RESOLUTION

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, thank you.

Mr. President, I would like to speak briefly. And I want to be brief because I know the pages are anxious, and so is the Presiding Officer. But I would like to speak for a moment on the continuing resolution, the debate that was just concluded, and make a few brief comments about it. And then I will file a more expansive statement at a later time.

Mr. President, this is the third day of the Government shutdown, and, quite frankly, this is a disgraceful way to conduct the people's business.

The Government is shut down because, in my opinion, macho posturing, pique, and those things are being substituted—attitudes and old grudges are being substituted—for substantive debate and serious-minded search for compromise.

And we are here also because this Congress has not done its work. Over 6 weeks into this fiscal year, and only four appropriations bills are now law. Most of the bills are stalled here in Congress, not because of disputes over funding levels and philosophical debates, and the like, but frankly because of the efforts by the majority party to attach unrelated riders that are designed, in some instances, to erode women's right for choice, or to deregulate pollution, or to cut away workers' collective bargaining rights.

So we have to resort to a continuing resolution. This continuing resolution that we just passed funds the Government for roughly 5 weeks. It also calls on Congress and the President to balance the budget in 7 years.

Frankly, that provision does not belong in the bill. That issue should be left to negotiations between the President and the Congress on the permanent budget, not on this temporary, partial budget.

That was, however, why I supported the amendment offered by the minority leader. And, frankly, that is why I supported the amendment offered by the majority leader. But, quite frankly, it was the wrong place. Quite frankly, also, Mr. President, there is nothing particularly magic in 7 years. What is important is the objective. What is important is meeting our obligation to leave our children something more than a legacy of debt. And what is important is balancing the budget in a way that helps both individual Americans and our country generally.

Mr. President, I believe we can balance the budget while not undermining health care for the elderly or for the poor, without pushing millions of children into poverty, and without denying access to a college education to additional millions of young Americans.

I think it is possible to balance the budget over 7 years in a way that will make the future brighter for our children and that will help create prosperity for all of us. I hope the parties will seek and find common ground with that in mind.

We have to reduce Federal deficits, but there are other objectives that cannot be forgotten. We cannot just on the one hand transfer costs from the Federal balance sheet to the balance sheets and the budgets of American families. We cannot cut back on essential investments in areas like education on which our competitiveness and, therefore, our economic strength, security, and wealth ultimately depend. We cannot make cuts that close more doors to more Americans who are already anxious about their futures, and who are very hard pressed because, while the cost of achieving the American dream is rising, their incomes are not.

Mr. President, this continuing resolution is not a balanced budget plan. It simply buys Congress and the President a little more time to produce a plan. It is all too clear that we need that time because the budget priorities reflected in the reconciliation bill that we will act on tomorrow are clearly mistaken, in my opinion.

That reconciliation bill contains a foolish $245 billion tax cut. And I think one of my colleagues responded by saying to talk about a tax cut at a time that you are talking about reducing the deficit and balancing the budget is like announcing that you are going on a diet and asking someone to pass the dessert.

Even though the President has cut the deficits in half over the last 3 years, given the scope and the extent of our deficit problem, this is not the time for a tax cut. I add, Mr. President, parenthetically with regard to the specific parts of the tax cut—and I serve on the Finance Committee—there is nothing objectionable—well, there is little objectionable—about the tax cut with the specific ingredients in it. But, quite frankly, the tax cut is very much like a chicken in every pot, the oldest political ploy in town, to give a little bit of substance to the constituents. It could not come at a worse time. The timing and context is wrong. I believe it does not belong as part of reconciliation when we are talking about balancing the budget and cutting protections that are vitally dear, if not vital to Americans.

Mr. President, the reconciliation bill that we are going to take up tomorrow unnecessarily jeopardizes the elderly, the poor, the children, and students by asking them for a hugely disproportionate share of budget savings that the bill requires over the next years 7 years while at the same time protecting tax expenditures, and many other business subsidies and loopholes from the clever.

I believe we need a new plan, one that meets the needs of ordinary, hard-working Americans, and one that embraces opportunities for Americans in the future rather than diminishing them. What we need to do, therefore, in my opinion, is to end this temporary budget crisis, and to put the Government back to work.

What we need to do is to defeat the reconciliation bill tomorrow, and vote against it, because we have to, given the technicalities of it, act on it before we can get to the compromise. Kill the reconciliation bill tomorrow, and go back to work on a more balanced, more fair, and more workable budget plan that does not treat millions of Americans as expendable people.

Most of all, we need to act to meet our obligations to the American people by crafting a budget based on their needs, and that is based on the American priorities of all of our community, a budget built on the proposition that people's futures—and not just abstract accounting numbers—is what is really at stake here.

We have a chance to define ourselves as one community, to recognize that we are all in this together, and to fix our budget problems by sharing the sacrifice and addressing our collective needs as Americans.

Mr. President, this Congress can decide to be like so many corporate CEO's, laying off millions of Americans, discarding them, and ignoring the contributions that they have made in the past, and that they can make in the future. Or, we can recognize the truth—that our only permanent asset lies in the talents and the abilities of our people—and we can construct a budget that helps Americans utilize their talents, and create wealth for all of us today, as well as for tomorrow.

Mr. President, in that case, I believe the choice is obvious. I hope we will commit to coming together to find a common ground, and to recognize that we are indeed all in this together, and we need to have a budget that reflects that.

Thank you. I yield the floor.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until 10 a.m., Friday, November 17, 1995.

Thereupon, the Senate at 10:09 p.m. recessed until tomorrow, Friday, November 17, 1995, at 10 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, November 16, 1995

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. INGLIS of South Carolina].

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
November 16, 1995.

I hereby designate the Honorable BOB INGLIS to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

NEWT GINGRICH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O gracious God, as You have blessed each person with the miracles of life and given us opportunities for compassion for others, we pray that by Your spirit, our motives would be purified and our intentions made exemplary. As Your word has commanded us to seek justice and love mercy, remind us to be authentic in our aspirations and faithful in Your service that Your message of respect and understanding will be seen in our lives and be the symbol of our humanity. Bless us this day and every day, we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GUTKNECHT] come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance?

Mr. GUTKNECHT led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain fifteen 1-minute speeches on each side.

SUPPORT AMERICA BY SUPPORTING THE BALANCED BUDGET ACT

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the President must have inhaled, because last night he asked the American taxpayers to give him an additional $874 billion of their money for more Government, more taxes, and more spending.

This proves that once again the President has no intention of balancing the Federal budget. He would rather add billions of dollars to our debt.

What the President is doing is reckless. He has replaced leadership, responsibility, and the wishes of the American people with big Government and political games.

If the President is truly for a balanced budget, then he will sign the continuing resolution and join Republicans by embracing a 7-year balanced budget bill that will ensure a strong and secure future for our country. Americans, once again tell the President to support America by supporting the Balanced Budget Act.

TEMPER TANTRUM NO BASIS FOR GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWN

(Mr. GUTIERREZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUTIERREZ. Mr. Speaker, I had a traumatic experience on an airplane Monday. I asked for an aisle seat and they gave me a window. The pilot never came back to say hello, and when we landed, I, a Member of Congress, had to walk out with all of the rest of the passengers. So I drafted a bill to shut down Government until the airline apologizes to me. Unfortunately, as a Democrat, I was ignored.

But there is hope, Mr. Speaker. A Republican is fighting for Congressmen whose feelings are hurt on airplanes. NEWT GINGRICH feels bad. He says he was mistreated on the trip to Israel. I quote, "Every President we had ever flown with had us up front. Having to exit through the rear of the plane is part of why you ended up with us sending you down a tougher continuing resolution."

Because our President thought that respecting Yitzhak Rabin's death was more important than stroking NEWT's ego, we must threaten the services of our seniors, our veterans, and our students.

NEWT, have some decency. The future of our Nation is more important than where you sit on an airplane. The next time you throw a temper tantrum, leave the American public out of it.

THE PICTURE IS COMING INTO FOCUS

(Ms. DUNN of Washington asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. DUNN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic process was never meant to be a smooth process; that is why our Founding Fathers created a system of checks and balances. That is why we have a loyal opposition. That is why we negotiate. But, Mr. Speaker, there comes a time for closure. That time is now.

The picture is coming into focus, Mr. Speaker. One side wants a balanced budget by a date certain; the other side is not even certain about a date. On the one side is Congress, including, as these folks will not tell you, 48 Members of their own conference intent on balancing the budget in 7 years. On the other side is the President.

Mr. President, it is time to come to the table. Do not pick up your walking stick; come join us now and negotiate this 7-year balanced budget. Our children are counting on us.

NAFTA ACCOUNTABILITY ACT TO MEASURE AGREEMENT'S IMPACT

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, today my colleagues and I introduce the NAFTA Accountability Act of 1995 to stand up for the thousands and thousands of workers across our country who are being terminated.

NAFTA promised our country a $12 billion trade surplus. This year we will rack up an historic $40 billion deficit with our two trading partners on the continent. NAFTA promised our people 200,000 new jobs.

It has already cost us over 300,000 lost jobs: Like 3,200 workers at Fruit of the Loom in Alabama, Louisiana, Kentucky, and North Carolina; like 200 workers at Emerson Electric in Indiana; like 120 workers at Alcatel Data Networks in New Jersey; like 127 workers at American Manufacturing Co. in Alabama; like 130 workers at Data Products in Georgia; like 220 workers at Woolrich, Inc. in Pennsylvania; like 340 workers at Oxford Industries in Georgia; like 245 workers at Sara Lee in Georgia.

Mr. Speaker, we will continue the list as the week moves on.

TIME FOR THE PRESIDENT TO COMMIT TO A BALANCED BUDGET

(Mr. NORWOOD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, today we will ask only one thing of the President. We will ask that he agree to work with us to balance the budget in 7 years using the numbers of a nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office. It is a basic, simple request, but for some reason he seems very afraid of this commitment.

Mr. Speaker, the President said last night he thinks it will hurt America. Fortunately, some of us know better than that. The hundreds of people calling my office certainly know better than that. They know that the best thing we can do for this country is to make an unmistakable commitment to balance this budget.

That is what we will do. No matter what the President says, no matter how long it takes, we are going to balance this budget in 7 years, and we will do it by controlling spending, saving Medicare, and giving the hard-working people of America back some of the money that was stolen from them by the 103d Congress. The people of the 10th District have my word on this.

WHY CAN WE NOT FIND COMMON GROUND?

(Ms. HARMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, driving my 11-year-old to school this morning she said, "Mommy, I need to write a term paper, but the D.C. public library is closed. You worked until midnight last night. Why can't you get the Government started again so that my library will open?"

Mr. Speaker, why can't we? Why can't we stop shouting and issuing press releases and instead find common ground? Why can't we pass a continuing resolution this week and then back off and go home and talk to our constituents, not about whether to pass a 7-year balanced budget, but about what should be in it.

There are genuine disagreements among us. If we come back on November 28 and spend 5 or 6 days having an enlightened debate about the Medicare cuts, about tax cuts, about Federal entitlements and block grants. I think our constituents can help us find this common ground that just might get us to passing a 7-year balanced budget. I think we can make our children proud, not just about what we do here, but about how we treat each other.

PRESIDENT SAYS ONE THING AND MEANS ANOTHER

(Mr. CHABOT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, so now the President tells us he does not want a balanced budget, and we were wrong to believe him when he said he did. Sure, he campaigned promising a balanced budget in 5 years, and sure, at one point he said he favored a balanced budget in 7 years but how insensitive, how downright mean-spirited, of us to take him at his word. What were we thinking?

Last night, we passed what the President said he wanted, a clean bill with simple language reiterating the President's commitment to a 7-year balanced budget and he's throwing it back in the face of the American people.

But it shouldn't be that surprising. After all, this is the man who said he wanted a middle-class tax cut and then gave us the largest tax increase in history. This is the man who said he wanted to end welfare as we know it and is now fighting us as we try to make welfare reform a reality.

So, you know, on second thought, maybe it's good that the President says he'll veto our balanced budget. Maybe that means he'll sign it and the Government shutdown will end.

REPUBLICANS MEETING IN SECRET

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, the Republicans have been meeting in secret the last few days to hammer out their differences over the budget bill, which they will probably bring to the floor tomorrow. This is the bill that cuts Medicare and effectively destroys Medicare in order to pay for tax cuts for the wealthy.

Mr. Speaker, they have not allowed the Democrats to participate in their secret negotiations, and as a result of that, a bad budget bill, as the New York Times says today, only gets worse.

If I could just read, according to the New York Times, "The House GOP budget will take about $900 worth of benefits on average from families earning less than $30,000, but only $155 from families earning above $100,000. At the same time, it will cut taxes by virtually nothing on the low-income families, but cut them by about $1,600 for high-income families."

The Republicans work in secret and they come up with a budget bill that we will get tomorrow that provides even more tax cuts for wealthy Americans while it destroys Medicare and destroys Medicaid and provides us with a much worse health care system than we have now in America.

MISTREATMENT RESULTS IN GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWN

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, when I heard last night that NEWT GINGRICH said he had shut down the Government because he did not get the right treatment on an airplane, I was amazed. I could not believe it.

Mr. Speaker, today it is true. Here it is in black and white in my hometown paper, the New York Daily News, "Cry baby, Newt's tantrum. He closed down the government because Clinton made him sit at the back."

Well, the only thing one can treat such statements and actions with is humor and verse, so with all due respect to Peter, Paul, and Mary and "Leaving on a Jet Plane," here goes.

> Well, my bags are packed, I am ready to go. I am sitting here on Air Force One, but sitting in the back ain't much fun. They wouldn't give me an aisle seat. The in-flight meal was mystery meat. Where is the guy in charge? I am going to complain. But the President won't talk to me. In light of Israel's tragedy, cutting Medicare is not the first thing on his mind. I am leaving on a jet plane, don't know when you will get paid again. I am leaving on a jet plane, don't know when you will be paid again.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 264

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of House Resolution 264.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. INGLIS of South Carolina). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California.

There was no objection.

THE REAL ISSUE

(Mr. WELLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, today's headline really says it all: "Clinton, No to GOP Offer To Keep the Government Open."

Mr. Speaker, last night 48 Democrats joined Republicans, broke ranks and resisted the strong-arm tactics of the left-wing liberal Democratic leadership by voting to keep the Government operating and open, and frankly, also voting to balance the budget.

That is really what this issue is all about. Are the American people going to have a balanced budget? Are the American people going to have a government that lives within its means?

Calls and letters that I am receiving from the folks back home are 4 to 1 in favor of balancing the budget and supporting the Republican Congress.

Kathleen Platek from Manhattan, IL: "You're doing a great job. Hang in there to balance the budget."

Ardele Ommem from Bradley, IL: "Support Republican budget. Keep the Government operating. Tell Bill Clinton to go to work."

Jacqueline Jordan from Mokena: "Balance the budget."

Mr. Speaker, the folks back home are watching. They want the Government to balance the budget. That is what this issue is all about.

ACADEMY AWARD WINNER

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, every year we all await the Academy Awards. It really captures our attention to see who is going to be the winner in all the different categories.

Well, there is one category our Speaker has sewn up. There is absolutely no question that NEWT GINGRICH has now absolutely sewn up the category of best performance by a child actor this year. There is only one problem. The Speaker is not a child.

Now that this country has paid dearly for his temper tantrum and paid dearly for his shutting down the Congress, shutting down the whole country because of his little peeve, could we get a performance that is more statesmanlike? I think that is what this country would really like.

But congratulations, Mr. Speaker. If you wanted to be the best child actor, you got it.

AMERICA IS WATCHING

(Mr. EWING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, today we are here, we have lots of cutesy ideas, we have little statues and we have posters. But, ladies and gentlemen, the people see past that. The people of America know what is stopping this Government.

All your actions here today will not block out in their mind that the Democrats and the President are refusing to work with the Republicans to balance the budget. The President has a chance today to reverse that, and he can sign the new clean CR that we have sent down to the White House. America is watching. The antics on this floor today will not cover up the fact that they want a balanced budget and they want us to hang tough until we do it, for ourselves, for our seniors and for our children. Let us get to it.

COMPROMISE NEEDED IN BUDGET BATTLE

(Ms. MCKINNEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the Republican leadership is so committed to balancing the budget, then why do they not abandon their $245 billion tax cut? Why is it that seniors, students, and the poor have to sacrifice to balance the budget, but America's wealthiest corporations and insurance companies will get a huge windfall?

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the GOP is using the balanced budget only as a pretext to wage their feudal class-war against seniors and working families. Why do they not go after the $500 billion in corporate welfare, as well as make Germany and Japan pay for their own defense?

Mr. Speaker, if the Republicans agree to abandon their tax cuts and eliminate just $200 billion in corporate welfare, then even I will support their budget.

PRESIDENT CLINTON URGED TO SIGN THE BILL

(Mr. GUTKNECHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, the debate is now clear and the battle is joined. As Paul Harvey has said, Americans hate statistics but Americans know what they expect from us. They want us to put government on a diet and they want us to balance their budget. We are a Nation that gets up early, rolls up our sleeves and gets the job done. To be told that we cannot balance this budget within 7 years is an insult to the intelligence of the American people. You promised to balance the budget in 5 years. Mr. President, if you meant what you said, then sign this bill.

THE HORRIBLE WELFARE BILL

(Ms. WOOLSEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, with most of the Republican leadership running for the Presidency right now, and running on ego and on meanness, it makes sense that this new majority is sending President Clinton a welfare bill that pushes over 1 million more children into poverty and does nothing, absolutely nothing, to help recipients prepare for jobs that pay a decent wage.

On the other hand, the Democrats have a welfare reform bill that invests in education, in job training, in child care and child support.

Mr. Speaker, when 100 percent of the House Democrats voted for this legislation, we demonstrated that conservatives, moderates, and liberals can agree on reform that guarantees a safety net for children and gets their parents to work.

I ask, why does the crybaby Speaker not cry about real babies? Real babies who are becoming even poorer as a result of this mean-spirited, whining leadership. We must veto this horrible welfare bill.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE TRUTH

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, President Bill Clinton has willfully misled the American public on his plans for the future of America.

During his campaign for President, he said he would support a balanced budget in 5 years. Two years later, he refuses to even consider balancing the budget in seven years.

He said he would end welfare as we know it. Now he says he will veto a bill that ends welfare as we know it. He said he supported tax relief for the American family. But his first budget raised taxes on American families.

Mr. Speaker, President Clinton is to truth what Abraham Lincoln was to lying.

The American people should not believe a word he says, because many times Bill Clinton does not believe the words he is saying.

As President Clinton continues to refuse to open the Government, I urge the American people to focus on these facts. Republicans are going to keep their promises and offer a real balanced budget. Bill Clinton is going to break his promises and fight any balanced budget.

GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWN

(Mr. DOGGETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, NEWT GINGRICH and Medicare, the three words you need to understand this mess in Washington. He may really be a crybaby, but NEWT GINGRICH wants to demonstrate he is king of the mountain. And what better way to do that than to issue a royal decree cutting Medicare, even if it takes the taxpayers having to pay for 800,000 Federal employees to have a taxpayer paid vacation. And since the king expects lobbyists to come bearing tribute, it is only natural Speaker GINGRICH would be doing everything he can today to kill our ban on gifts from lobbyists to Members of this Congress just as he killed real lobby regulation last session. And before this week's shutdown and NEWT's paid vacation for 800,000 Federal employees, we already had shut down one institution of this body, shut down with lethargy, shut down with delay.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, point of order. Is it parliamentary to call the Speaker of the House a crybaby?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such remarks are not in order and Members should refrain from using such language.

The gentleman may proceed in order.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry. Is it proper to refer to the front page of a newspaper that calls him a crybaby?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, point of order. The chart is demeaning to the House.

Mr. VENTO. Regular order, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman should state his point of order, Mr. Speaker, if he has a point of order.

Mr. HOKE. My point of order is that we are not to have demeaning charts.

Mr. VENTO. Point of order, Mr. Speaker. That is not a point of order.

Mr. HOKE. That is a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman suspend?

The Chair rules it is a legitimate point of order. The Chair also rules that the Members must be respectful of other Members and must avoid such referencing of other Members on the floor.

Mr. HOKE. Would the Chair please instruct the Member to take the chart down?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman must proceed in order.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, so that I may comply with the rules of the House, I understand then that I am not to refer to the Speaker as a crybaby. May I use the term "NEWT's tantrum"?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answering the gentleman's question, the Chair would point out to the gentleman that the gentleman should be respectful of all Members of the House and the Speaker as well. The gentleman may not use demonstrations to be disrespectful to any Member or to the Speaker.

Mr. DOGGETT. But the Chair is not suggesting that this Daily News "crybaby" front page has to come down at this point?

Mr. HOKE. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is suggesting that it should be removed if it is intended to bring disrespect toward a Member of the House.

Mr. DOGGETT. It is not on the House, Mr. Speaker. How much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DOGGETT. With the parliamentary inquiries? Not with my 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No, with the gentleman's use of time.

Mr. DOGGETT. I thank the Speaker.

BALANCE THE BUDGET

(Mrs. SEASTRAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SEASTRAND. Mr. Speaker, last night in an interview, President Clinton was asked this question by Dan Rather: "Are you saying, flat out, that you will veto a bill sent to you that contains only the insistence to balance the budget, you'll veto that?"

The President said, "Yes."

Mr. Speaker, the President has divulged what Republicans in Congress have been saying all along. That is, President Clinton is too closely aligned with the liberal Washington establishment to do what is right for the American people. He is more concerned about spending more money on Government than balancing the budget, and he is more concerned about bureaucracy than our children's future.

The responsibility for this Government rests squarely on the shoulders of President Clinton. He asked for a clean bill. He has one. Now he says he will veto it.

Folks back home have been calling me to hang in there, balance the budget. Well, now it is time for the folks back home to call President Clinton. The number is 202–456–1414.

A GRAVE ERROR

(Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Acting Speaker, I have not myself been a great defender of the real Speaker. Indeed, I thought the American people were right when they found him to be the most unpopular elected official in America.

But yesterday I was ready to jump to his defense. I do not think people should be disrespectful of the Speaker. When I heard people suggest that Speaker GINGRICH had said that he was going to be tougher in negotiations and do more to shut down the Government because the President had been rude to him, I was ready to leap to his defense.

I said, how can you accuse Speaker GINGRICH, as much as I disagree with him on policy, of being so petty, of being so personal as to say that because the President did not distract himself from the Middle East peace process to come and talk to him and take his mind off having to sit with some other Republicans, how could you claim that this man would then use that as a reason to help shut down the Government?

Of course we have this problem because the Republicans have not passed the appropriations bills. It is their own lack of ability that has led the Health and Human Services Department and the Labor Department not to be there. To compound that with insensitivity is a very grave error.

CHARACTER OF MORNING'S DEBATE

(Mr. HOKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, what is incredible about this debate this morning, if we call it a debate, is that what we see finally is that the Democrat rhetoric has been reduced simply to petty, the pettiest of ad hominem attacks on the personality of the Speaker.

☐ 1030

And they are doing this because of two things: No. 1, they are embarrassed by the fact 48 of their own Members last night, quite correctly, cast their vote, including a couple that have been down here this morning, although they did not mention it.

And, second, because they are out of ideas, they know it has finally come to showing the liberal agenda against the commonsense agenda.

The only difference in the continuing resolution of last night was a 7-year balanced budget, a commitment to come to the same agreement that every one of these people, when they go back to their districts, talk about. This is the moment of truth, 7 years, scored honestly with honest numbers in an honest way, working together.

The Washington Post got it absolutely right when they said the Democrats, led by the President, chose instead to present themselves as the demagogues that they are.

WHY IS THE GOVERNMENT SHUT DOWN?
